Chavis blasts NAACP leadership

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — Declaring himself a free man, the ousted executive director of the NAACP blasted the organization's leaders as puppets of the corporate establishment.

"How can you have a freedom movement if somebody else is paying for your freedom?" Benjamin Chavis said at a rally Sunday night, surrounded by about 150 supporters, including Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

Chavis was fired Saturday for what board members called an accumulation of problems during his 16-month tenure, including a $2.7 million deficit and his use of NAACP funds to settle a former employee's lawsuit.

Many members objected to Chavis' alliances with leaders such as Farrakhan, who has been criticized for anti-Semitic remarks.

The rally at Bethel AME Church followed a black leadership summit that the NAACP had called for its Baltimore headquarters, but postponed after Chavis was fired. Chavis went ahead with the summit. The NAACP did not send a representative. The 60 participants met for several hours behind closed doors, and planned to meet again today.

Departments suffer from computer thefts

LORI CAGLE

Security officers found 20 computers disassembled, bagged and sitting by the door when they walked into a computer lab in Calvin Hall early one morning last fall.

If not for the officers patrolling Calvin that morning, $40,000 worth of equipment would have been walked out the door, possibly never to be recovered.

Whether they be Macintoshes or IBMs, computers at K-State are open territory for potential theft.

Losses from computer theft totalled $37,676 in 1993 and consisted of items ranging from monitors to chips from central processing units.

"There are two types of computers, proprietary and nonproprietary," Capt. Charles Beckom of the K-State Police, said.

"Most computers are nonproprietary, generic terminals, as we call them," Beckom said. "Their parts are very small, interchangeable and unidentifiable."

In spring 1994, there were seven reported thefts from Cardwell, Nichols, Seaton, Umberger and Weber halls. These losses totaled $13,565 and ranged from computer mice to laptop computers.

From these figures, Computing and Network Services director John Bucher said he is looking into new security options.

Bucher said he is looking at a wide variety of security measures, ranging from motion detectors to fiber optic cables.

"I'm quite concerned with security — not with the fact of implementation, but with the consequences of not implementing security," Bucher said.

He also said he must look at security with regard to the financial losses.

The costs of good security sometimes outweigh the loss of material, he said, and the less expensive security is the chosen route.

K-State has the Public Institutional Property insurance, a state-regulated insurance.

However, loss of computer equipment is not covered under the University's insurance, Bill Sesler, director of purchasing, said.

"The state statute regulates that equipment cannot be insured," he said. "Even if an office acquires insurance of its own, the state will not pay for it."

Any office on campus that has a theft must replace the material stolen with their budgeted funds, Sesler said.

Capt. Robert Mellgren, acting director of K-State Police, said the best method of security is an electronic door that uses a key card. He said although this is a method that has a large budget, it is money well-spent.

"It is the best choice for two reasons," Mellgren said. "You have control over who has access, and you also know who uses it and when."

Mellgren said he thinks the electronic door system is more feasible than other methods of security due to the low possibility of the system being defeated.

Beckom said he has found the key-card system is not as costly as some people might think because the costs are coming down due to the compatibility of computers and the ease of installation.

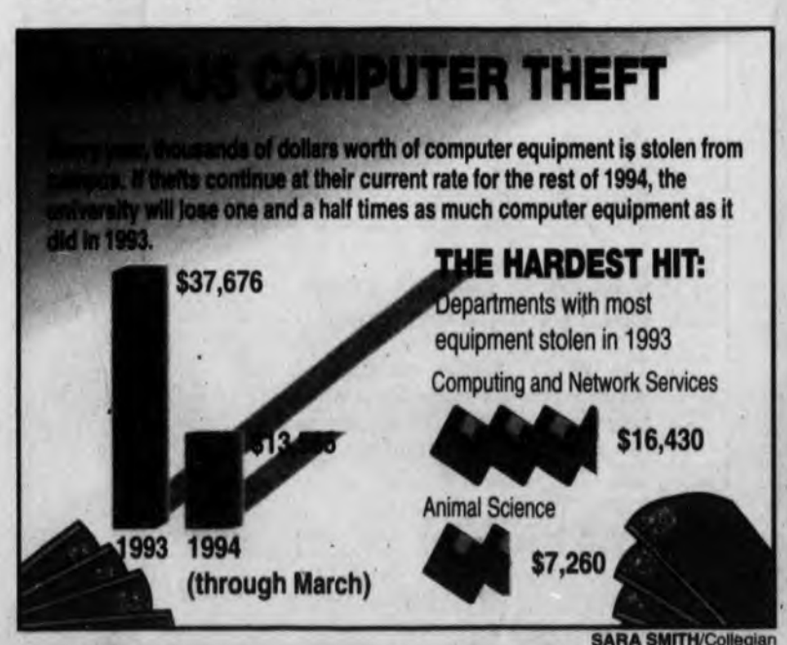
"Depending on the sophistication of the system, the average eight to 18-door system can run only $5,000 to $8,000 for the software," Beckom said.

The cost of doors and cards are separate, but are still more reasonable than once thought, he said.

Chuck Gould, micro-computer support manager with Computing and Network Services, said the public labs at K-State are not seeing the majority of the problems.

"A problem might turn up with one computer, but no lab-wide damage or theft has occurred," Gould said.

Although open labs are not the primary target of theft, they have seen their share of problems, he said.



"Our experience has been that most thefts in the open labs have happened behind closed doors when the lab has been closed for some reason," Gould said.

Betsy Edwards, publicist for Computing and Network Services, has done research on the topic of computer theft at K-State.

She said the trend has gone more toward stealing the chips and internal parts rather than the whole computer. There are also certain times of the year when computers are the item to steal, she said.

"I found that computers are more

Assaults stress need for safety awareness

SERA L. TANK

An assault on campus before classes began became as a harsh reminder of the problem of personal security at K-State.

A visitor who was staying in the residence halls was the victim of an aggravated assault at 11:55 p.m. Aug. 9 in the parking lot between Boyd and Haymaker halls.

According to the police report, Michael Best, a member of Future Homemakers of America, was walking in the parking lot when three black males in a small, red vehicle pulled up beside him.

The report said one of the passengers in the car pointed a gun at Best. No words were exchanged, and the car left the area, heading south on Manhattan Avenue. Best was not injured.

No tag number was reported, and the description of the vehicle was vague, Investigator Richard Herrman of the K-State Police Department said.

"The vehicle was never located, so we have no leads and no suspects at this time," Herrman said.

This was the fifth reported assault on the K-State campus in less than a year.

Four assaults occurred during fall 1993, and one resulted in serious injury to a student.

The first occurred on Sept. 6 in parking lot B3, when a female student was walking from the west side of the parking lot to Goodnow Hall.

She heard someone following her and began to run, Herrman said.

"When she heard the suspect running, she started running, but it was too late. He grabbed her by the arm," he said.

The victim was unable to provide the police officers with a good physical description, so no arrests have been made at this time, Herrman said.

Less than two weeks later, on Sept. 16, another student reported being assaulted while walking on the sidewalk between Haymaker Hall and Lot B2.

"The suspect met the victim on the sidewalk, made a lewd comment and hit her on the rump," Herrman said.

"It was not what you would call a vicious or violent situation," he said.

Because the descriptions of the assaults and of the suspects were very different, the cases are not thought to be related, Herrman said.

A third female student was assaulted on Nov. 19 while walking on the lawn opposite of Anderson Hall.

The suspect ran up behind the victim, grabbed her, pulled her to the ground, and ran away, Herrman said.

Looking back, Herrman said he believes it was a case of mistaken identity.

"We believe, as does the victim, that the suspect may have mistaken her for someone

▶ RESEARCHER CONTRACTS RODENT VIRUS AFTER LAB MISHAP

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — A Yale University researcher contracted a rare, deadly rodent-borne virus while cleaning up infected monkey tissue after a test tube shattered in his laboratory.

Although health officials were trying to find the 20 to 25 people he came into contact with before he was hospitalized with a fever of 103 degrees, they say it's unlikely anybody else was infected.

"This is not a risk to the general public," Dr. Matt Carter of the state Department of Public Health said.

"We know that similar viruses are not easily transmitted from person to person. This is a rare infection."

The Sabia arenavirus resembles but isn't directly linked to hantavirus, the rodent-borne virus that causes a respiratory disease that has killed more than 70 people in the United States and Mexico.

If untreated, this virus can cause skin blotches, sleepiness, chills, diarrhea, tremors, convulsions, internal and external bleeding, coma and death. There had been only two cases of Sabia arenavirus documented previously, both researchers in Brazil; one person died and the other received treatment and survived.

MIAMI — Benito Agrelo died his way — at home with his family after a summer playing video games with his friends and watching his tropical fish.

The 15-year-old transplant patient died in his mother's arms this past Saturday, free of debilitating anti-rejection drugs, two months after going to court for the right to stop taking the medication.

"Mami, hug," Benito said, opening his eyes and embracing his mother, Armanda Agrelo. Then, he smiled and took his last breath, Ava Senra Agrelo, his sister, said.

"A few day ago, my mom told him that he was going to see Jesus before she did, and that when he sees him to give him a big hug for her," Ava Senra Agrelo said.

"That was his hug."

Benito won the right to stop taking his medication in June, after the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services forcibly hospitalized him for three days — until a judge intervened.

Benito said he couldn't stand the medicine's side-effects — fierce headaches and irritability — and wanted to die in peace. After a long visit with the boy, Judge Arthur Birken agreed.

▶ CHARITY FISHING TOURNAMENT NETS $1 MILLION IN COCAINE

LIGHTHOUSE POINT, Fla. — A group of anglers at a charity fishing tournament hauled in three bales of cocaine worth more than $1 million.

The fishermen reeled in a white box covered with netting they found floating about 20 miles offshore. When they disentangled the hook, it was covered with white powder.

They found two more bales while waiting for the Coast Guard, and spent anxious minutes wondering if the owners would catch up with them before law enforcement officials arrived.

"We were worried that a cigarette boat with guys with Uzis might come cruising by," Dan Barnett, 35, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., said.

All they caught on Saturday was the cocaine, though it outweighed the biggest fish in the tournament by more than 165 pounds.

The three bales each held 30 kilos of cocaine, with a total street value of more than $1 million, Coast Guard officer Jim Kelly said.

▶ WOMAN INJURED IN 3-CAR ACCIDENT IN FRONT OF RAMADA INN

A woman was injured when her car was hit from behind in a three-car accident at the corner of Anderson and 17th streets Monday at 5:20 p.m.

Les Horn, Riley County Police Department patrol officer, said the accident occurred when Young approached a line of cars that had backed up at a stop light and attempted to change lanes.

Horn said Johnston hit her head, but he didn't think she was injured seriously. Johnstoh was taken to the hospital.

Larry Gassmann, Manhattan resident, was on his way to the post office when his car was struck from behind by Johnston's car.

Angela Hubler, English instructor, witnessed the accident and said there were several other cars that were involved in the pile-up. The cars were not damaged, so they drove away, she said.

CAMPUS SAFETY

Services provide escorts for residence hall dwellers

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Past attacks on campus have prompted several men and women in the K-State residence halls to volunteer their time as campus escorts to help make students feel safer.

Scott Hagemeister, junior in criminal justice and the escort chair for Haymaker Hall, said the campus escort programs were born out of necessity.

"It all got started because some members of the residence hall community decided that campus — especially at night — wasn't too safe anymore," Hagemeister said.

While most of the residence halls are planning to have escort services, only Haymaker and West halls have their programs set up.

Students in residence halls who have not yet set up their escort program can call Haymaker or West halls for an escort, Bonnie Wynne, a junior in pre-veterinary medicine and receptionist at the Ford Hall front desk, said.

"That way, we know they'll be safe," Wynne said.

Last year was the first year that the women in the residence halls became involved in the program as campus escorts, Hagemeister said.

"We wanted to make the women who use the escorts feel more comfortable and thought that if we added women escorts to the program, it would help," he said.

Michelle Black, director of West Hall, said another reason the women of West got involved was to help the men out.

"Not only did they want to increase the comfort level of the person who is being escorted, but they also wanted to take some of the pressure off the men," Black said.

There is a screening and training process involved in becoming an escort to ensure the safety of the people who are being escorted, Karla Gebhardt, sophomore in psychology and chairwoman of the West Hall escort program, said.

The first step the escorts had to go through was an informational meeting, Gebhardt said.

"We let them know what's involved in becoming an escort and let them fill out an application," she said.

After the applications are reviewed, the escort committee chooses several candidates to interview.

"We have some of the people who have used the escort services there so they can tell us whether they would feel comfortable having this person as an escort," Gebhardt said.

There is also a background check for all the applicants.

The escort committee checks with the residence halls where the applicant lives, Gebhardt said.

HOW TO USE ESCORTS

1. Call either West or Haymaker Hall's front desk.
   West Hall 395-3727
   Haymaker Hall 395-3710
2. Tell them your name, where you are, where you need to go, the phone number you can be reached at and what time you need the escort to pick you up.
3. Be in the location you agreed on at the scheduled time.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Landlord's fault student are homeless

A group of about 30 students started having problems with their landlord before they even moved in.

Many are fortunate enough to find friends or family to stay with until the complex is completed. Others were forced to spend $8 a night to rent hotel rooms at a special rate.

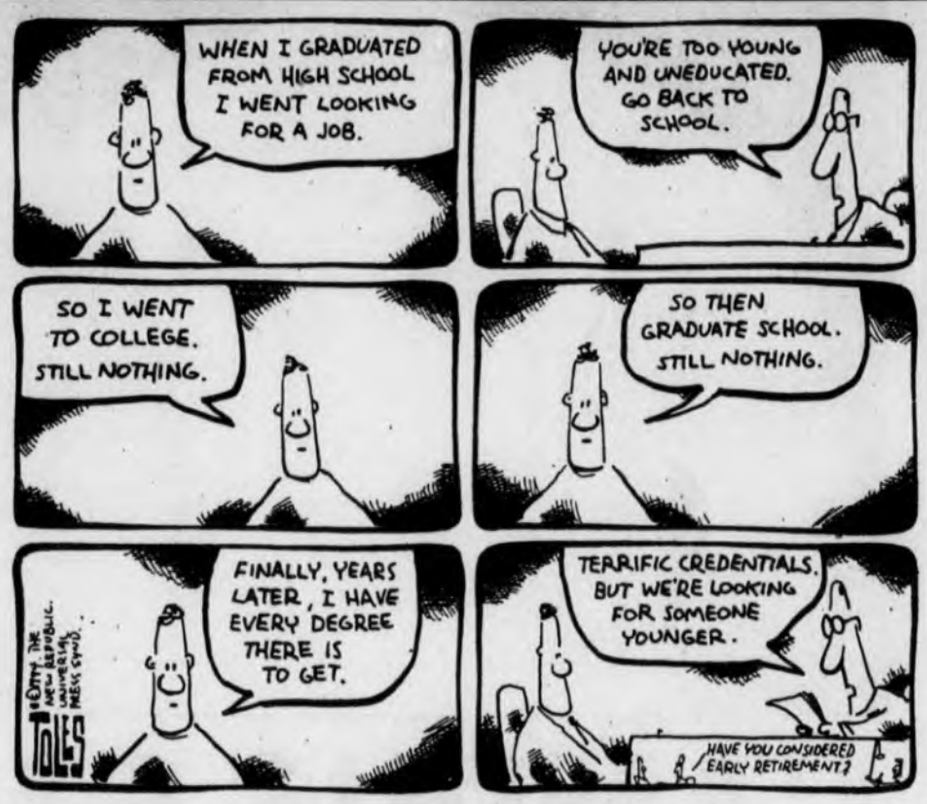
Who is to blame?

The landlord.

One student said when he and his roommate signed the lease, they were told the apartment would be done if rain did not stop construction.

Well, there was no flood this summer in Manhattan. Construction crews must have spent too much time building the pool, weight room, laundry and lounge.

As one student suggested, construction on the clubhouse could have waited until his apartment building was complete.



If the renters thought there was a remote chance that the buildings were not going to be complete, the students should have been informed before they signed a lease.

The students are not to blame for this situation, but they could have exercised a little more caution. Students need to be aware of tenants' rights.

It is never a good idea to rent a house or an apartment without seeing the place first. Not a demo apartment, but the place you are going to move into.

If you are interesting in finding more out about tenants' rights, the Student Governing Association Consumer Relations Board is sponsoring a workshop at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in Union 208.

TOLES

Purple pride should be for students

KRISTIN BRIGHTON

December 29, 1993. A date that Wildcats fans will remember forever as a turning point for the University and its now-prized football team.

A day that immediately transformed little old K-State into a football school.

Manhattan is a town of loyal people, who give to a lot of charities and organizations. It is a very supportive place to grow up. Sometimes, it just has a poor memory.

Just a few years ago, Ahearn Field House was filled with electricity during basketball games. And about as far back, the football stadium could be described as half-empty instead of half-full.

For years, people ignored the football team. Then we were described as a basketball school. Sure, we had a few good years. We made a few impressive showings at the NCAA tournament. We had some players go to the NBA. But we still didn't have the history of big basketball schools like UCLA or Kentucky or Kansas.

But then, with the turn of the tide, a few less impressive basketball years and a new football coach who brought victory back into the vocabulary of Wildcat football fans and poof! We became a football school, an overnight powerhouse, Copper Bowl Champions.

Talk about being fair-weather fans. This town and this student body can be as fickle as teen-agers deciding who to take to the senior prom.

Last week, the University joined forces with Manhattan to paint the town purple. The program, Paint It Purple, is designed to show the business community's support of the football team and coach Bill Snyder, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce staff members said.

On game days, cooperating businesses are being asked to decorate their stores in Wildcat themes and encourage employees to wear purple. Among other things, there is even talk of temporarily painting purple cat paws on main streets and sidewalks. All for football.

Why can't people just be supportive of the student body? Why must we think of ourselves as a football powerhouse instead of a well-rounded academic college? Why not paint permanent cat paws in support of the entire University? The students are not going anywhere.

What if we don't have quite as a successful season this year? There's lots of pressure those guys have. Will people suddenly lose interest if the team doesn't bring home another bowl trophy?

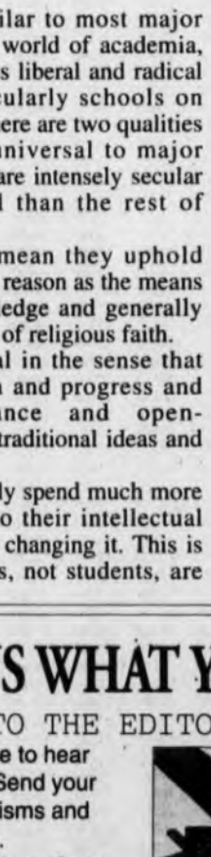
What if our newly-imported basketball coach amazes this campus?

What if the debate team should win the national championship once again?

This town supports the entire University. Without this campus, Manhattan would just be a quiet army-base town.

Several Aggieville merchants said more than 50 percent of their income came from students. To be frank, without the University, many Manhattanites would be out of a job.

While everyone complains about the traffic when we roll back into town and begin dropping our hard-earned dollars, community merchants breathe a sigh of relief.



Idealistically, K-State should be known as an academic powerhouse that happens to have a successful athletic program and is located in a community that supports the student body for what it is.

Manhattan, support all of us because we support you. Don't support football or basketball or the debate team just because of our victories. Be there while we are on our way up, and be there if we don't always bring home the win.

Let's paint Manhattan purple year-round.

College tough on faith

JOHN HART

This is your intellectual map of K-State. This is not necessarily a guide for pipe-smoking intellectual types, but for anyone interested in ideas, and for that matter, an education.

As I enter my senior year at K-State, looking back at three years of school, 90 plus hours of arts and sciences credits, two years of writing sometimes controversial columns and contemplating the often colorful responses they've invoked — all the while incessantly pondering what others and myself believe and why — I hope I have some credence in describing the intellectual climate of the University.

By bringing this fuzzy concept into clearer focus, I hope I can give students a sense of what ideas they can expect to be challenged with during their time here.

K-State is similar to most major universities in the world of academia, except that it is less liberal and radical than most, particularly schools on either coast. Yet, there are two qualities that are almost universal to major universities. They are intensely secular and more liberal than the rest of society.

By secular, I mean they uphold science and human reason as the means of attaining knowledge and generally disregard any form of religious faith.

They are liberal in the sense that they favor reform and progress and advocate tolerance and open-mindedness to nontraditional ideas and practices.

Students typically spend much more time responding to their intellectual climate rather than changing it. This is because professors, not students, are primarily responsible for shaping this climate. As educators, they have the intellectual authority to do so. At K-State, the faculty, while very nice and competent, tends to be just to the right of Jane Fonda. This is especially true of the College of Arts and Sciences that has the liberal bastions of the English and theater departments.

Out of this secular and liberal environment flow various ideas that are hot issues at K-State. A few include moral relativism, political correctness, diversity, tolerance, multiculturalism, feminism and gay rights. These ideas fall under the umbrella of the new-orthodoxy. By orthodoxy, I mean right doctrine or accepted standard.

The term new-orthodoxy is fair because anyone who dissents from the standard or accepted position on these issues is often not merely disagreed with by supporters but treated with outright hostility. They are labeled a bigot, sexist, racist or a homophobe, especially if the dissenter refers to God or an objective truth.

Students who are Christians or those who hope to maintain any religious faith are the ones who usually find the intellectual climate at K-State most hostile. If you do have any faith, expect it to be shaken severely. But in your distress the worst thing you could do is to stand aloof in self-righteous condemnation of those whom you believe lack the truth. This group should take a hint from the gay community and begin to come out of their own closets of isolation.

On the other hand, it is equally foolish to be so open-minded that your brains fall out, losing all sense of right and wrong.

Ever since I came to K-State, the intellectual climate has been hostile to my faith and values. Instead of standing in judgment or waiting to be mentally slaughtered, I've tried my best to challenge what I saw as false, not because I enjoy quarreling, but because I love the truth. It has truly been, and will continue to be, an amazing adventure.

Whatever you believe, make the most of your opportunity to have your own ideas challenged and sharpened. There is no better chance to do that than now.

Sports kick off Big Red One week

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Sporting events, Family Day and the coronation of a new Garrison Commander highlighted the annual Big Red One Week activities at Fort Riley Aug. 15-19.

Some of the sports that helped kick off the celebration were tournaments for softball, basketball, volleyball, tennis, golf, bowling and racquetball. Other events included a pentathlon and formation run.

The men's pentathlon was made up of the 200-meter dash, high jump, long jump, shot put and 1,500-meter run.

The women's pentathlon consisted of the 100-meter dash, high jump, long jump, shot put and 800-meter run.

"They didn't all finish, but they did participate for a while," Slick said.

In the men's division, the individual winner was Sgt. Francisco Gonzalez. The team title went to the 2nd/16th infantry.

The women's individual winner was Specialist Katrina Love, and the team winner was the 1st Aviation.

The formation run consisted of individual battalions running against each other around Custer Hill, Mark Meseke, media relations director, said.

The winner of the formation run was the Fourth Battalion Fifth Field Artillery. The separate company winner was Battery B of the Sixth Field Artillery.

A regimental investiture ceremony was held on Aug. 16 at Cavalry Parade Field for soldiers, family members, visitors and distinguished guests of the 16th Infantry, 34th Armor, 37th Armor, 5th Field Artillery, 6th Field Artillery, 25th Field Artillery, 1st Aviation, and 4th Cavalry regiments.

An investiture ceremony was conducted for 25 soldiers who had formerly served. They were inducted as honorary officers or members of their respective companies, Meseke said.

Family Day was August 18. Families from Fort Riley and the surrounding area got to see and experience different training facilities, museums and equipment systems.

The week concluded with Fort Riley hosting 450 members of the Society of the First Division. The Society ended its visit with a regimental honor and retreat ceremony at Cavalry Parade Field, honoring all of the regiments that fought as the 1st Infantry Division.

else, and that it was more or less a prank," he said. "When the person realized that it wasn't who he thought it was, he ran off," he said.

Hai Huang, a graduate student in regional and community planning, was attacked as he was leaving campus after studying in Seaton Hall. Huang suffered a skull fracture and facial injuries.

Three arrests were made in the Huang case, Herrman said.

"Two of the suspects have gone to court and been charged. The third is scheduled to go to court sometime in October," he said.

All of the unsolved cases will remain open, Herrman said.

Since last year's assaults, efforts to step up campus security have begun by hiring more officers and starting a bike patrol, Capt. Robert Mellgren, acting director of the campus police, said.

"We've also taken a couple of steps in changing some of our patrol procedures." Mellgren said. "Besides the bike patrol, we are also considering a walking patrol."

The bike patrol is effective at other universities, Herrman said.

"We look to the bike officers to deal with situations in areas that aren't as easily accessible to the patrol cars," he said.

In one of the assault cases last year, there was a complaint by a victim that the emergency phones weren't working correctly.

Mellgren said the phones and security cameras are monitored very closely to ensure they are in working order if they are ever needed.

"We have every emergency phone up and running, and we are adding a new security camera at Goodnow Hall," he said.

The emergency phones are checked on a weekly basis, and the cameras can be monitored from the police station, Mellgren said.

Key to stopping thefts is security at threat closer to (holiday) breaks and at the end of the semester because the thief can leave with the stolen item and won't be caught with it at home," Edwards said.

K-State Police investigator Richard Herrman said he suspects, with the number of computer parts being stolen, there is probably a black market.

Common-sense security is the first step to putting a stop to the thefts, he said.

"Locking doors, recording serial numbers — this is all standard security that will deter the thief," Herrman said.

Motion detectors used in some offices at K-State are now being implemented in labs, Gould said.

Also, fiber optic cables are used to hook several computers together, he said. If the cable is cut, it sets off a silent alarm to the police.

Chip engraving is another security measure used in labs throughout campus, Gould said.

Herrman and Beckom said computer thefts are hitting a low point, but said people will become weak in security after the thefts slow down and computers will become the item to steal again.

Mellgren said it is hard to find the best affordable security because with the knowledge accessible to the public, overcoming the security becomes easier every day.

"I don't think you'll ever stop computer theft totally, but we can slow them down," Mellgren said.

BEARS BEAT CHIEFS 21-18

Walsh drove the Bears (3-0) 80 yards in just four plays, aided by two Kansas City penalties.

Miller adds depth to quarterback position

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The quarterback position is one area that Coach Bill Snyder shouldn't lose too much sleep over before the season opener with Southwest Louisiana.

That's because the Wildcats have all-Big Eight quarterback Chad May returning, and Texas A&M transfer Matt Miller is now eligible to back him up.

This marks the first time in several seasons that K-State has a solid one and two combo at the position. In fact, some preseason publications are calling the May-Miller combination one of the best in the Big Eight Conference.

Snyder said he feels good about the duo, but he doesn't know how they compare to other Big Eight quarterbacks.

"I have great confidence in our two young guys," Snyder said. "I'm not too sure about the quality of backups in our conference. That's why I hesitate on saying how they really compare. I do have confidence in our No. 1 and 2 quarterbacks."

May said he has more confidence now that Miller can step in.

"We've got some quality backups," May said. "If there is ever a time that they are needed, I think that they could do the job."

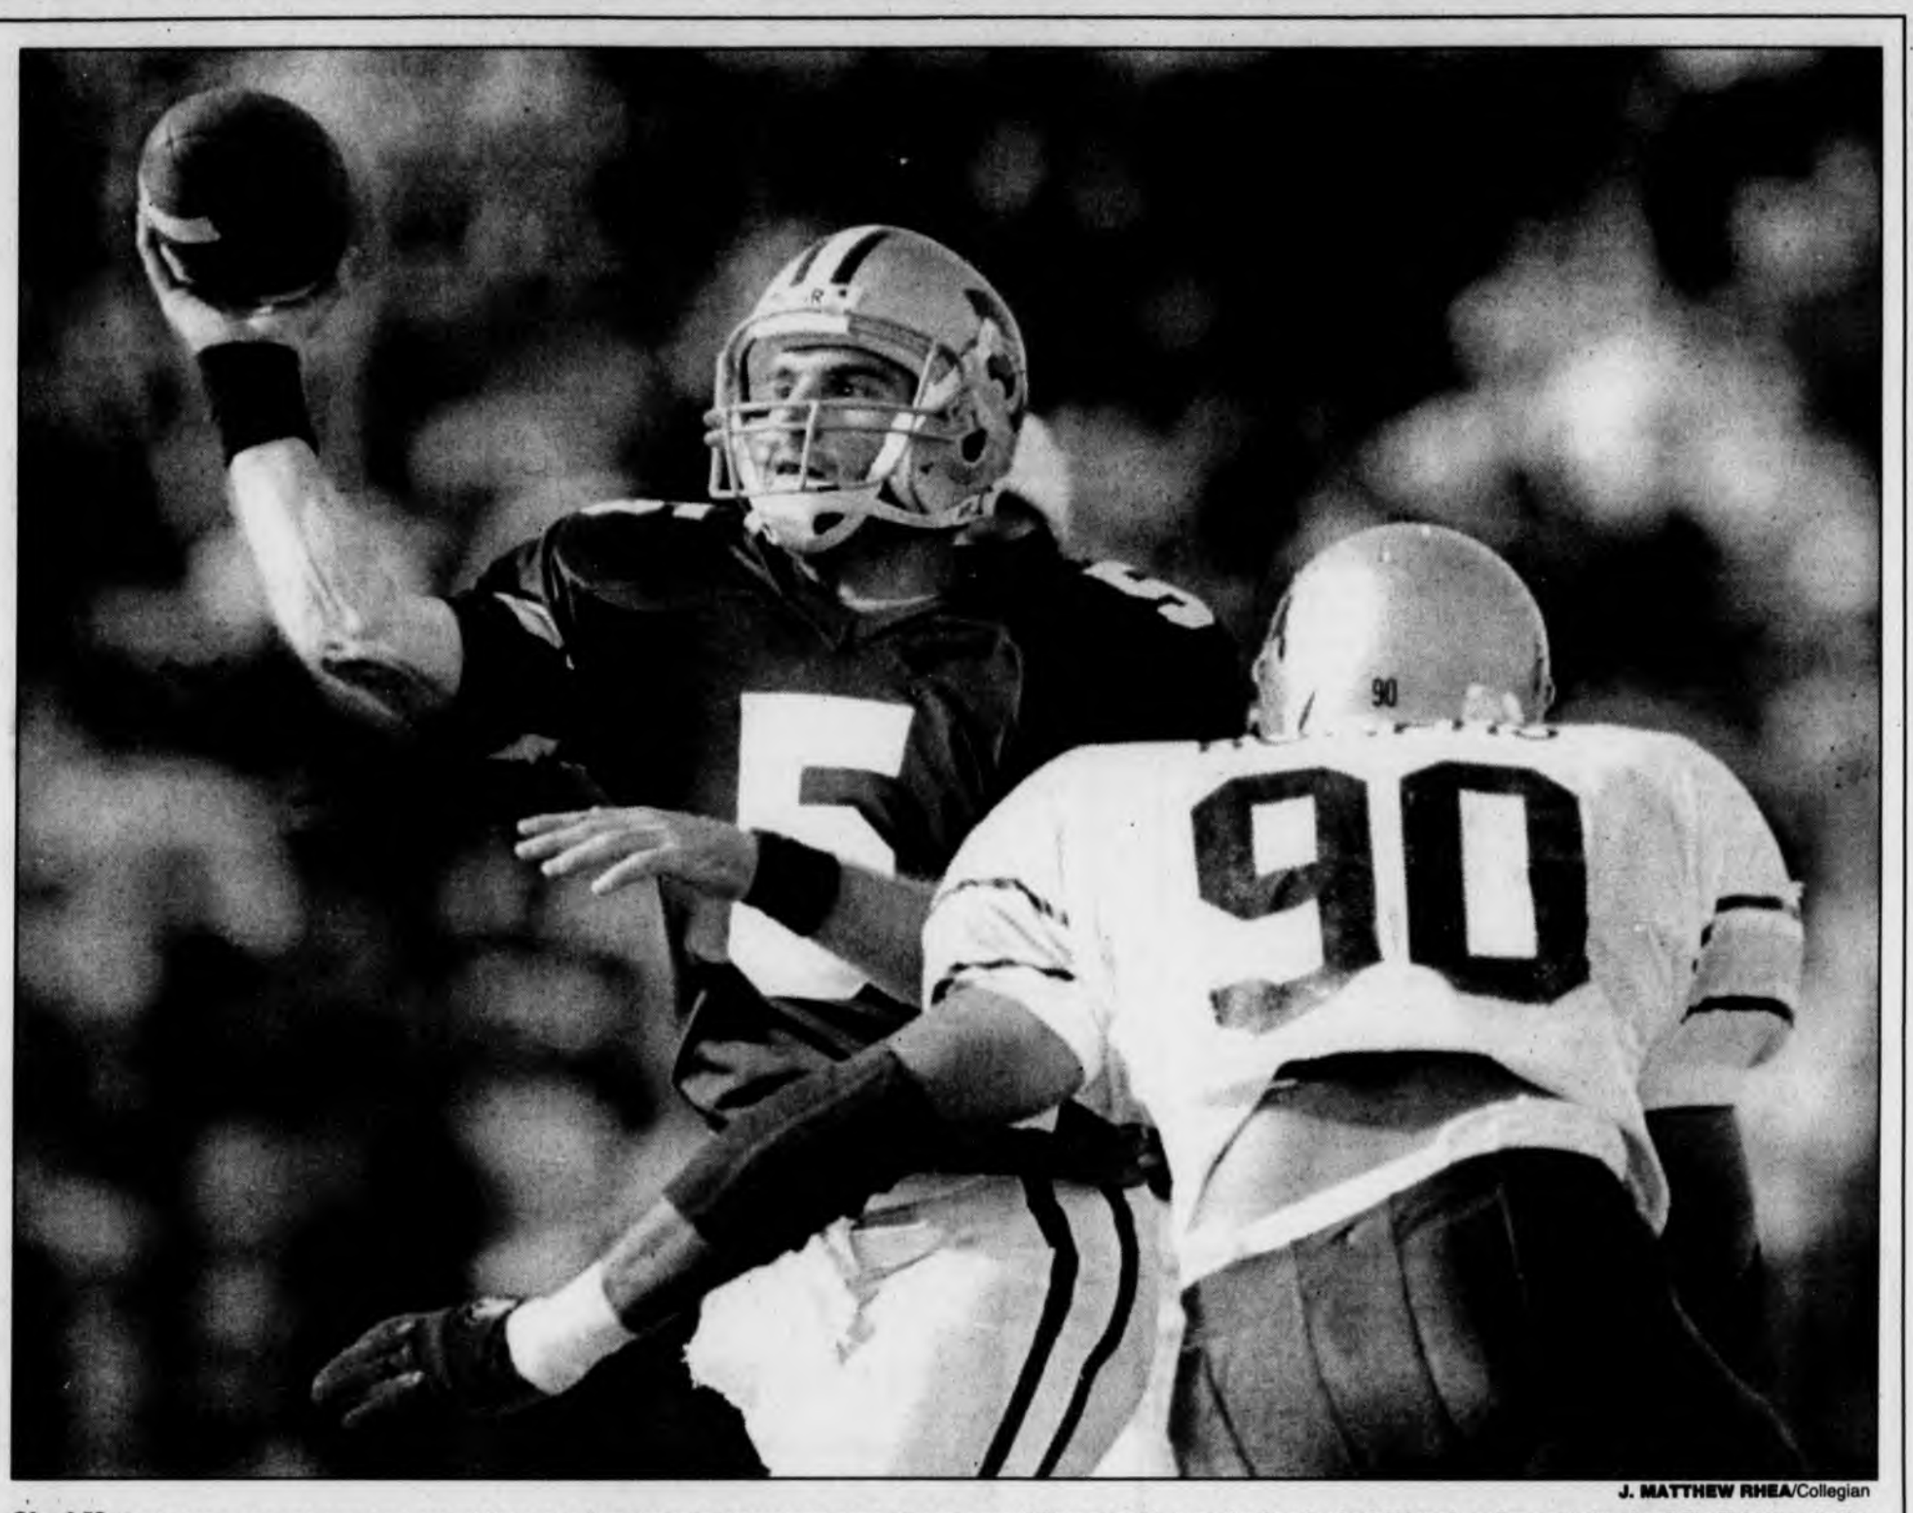
May had a shaky off-season. He had to have knee surgery, and he was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol in July.

The DUI charges where dropped against May, but the prosecution is seeking an appeal.

May has been under more scrutiny from the press and from the public, but he said he doesn't feel the pressure.

"I put the pressure on myself," May said. "I don't let the media, alumni or the fans put any more pressure on me."

Miller said that is just one of the reasons he thinks May is the best quarterback in the Big Eight.



"I think that Chad is the best quarterback in the Big Eight, if not in the country," Miller said.

"The other guys in the league are great quarterbacks, but what Chad did for this program is immeasurable," he said.

Miller, who saw some playing time as a freshman at Texas A&M, had to sit out a season, but he said that he used that to his advantage to learn the K-State offense better.

"It was a pretty difficult task to adjust to the offense here at K-State," Miller said. "It's a very complicated offense, but once you get this offense down as a quarterback, it's the best offense that a collegiate quarterback would want."

Behind May and Miller is Brian Kavanagh. Last season, Kavanagh played in three games as May's backup. In the spring game, he completed seven of his 10 passing attempts for 55 yards.

J. MATTHEW RHEA/Collegian

Chad May releases a pass under pressure against Colorado's Sam Rogers in last season's game. May set a new K-State record last year by throwing for 2,682 yards and was voted to the all-Big Eight team by the the league's coaches. K-State opens its 1994 campaign Sept. 3 against Southwest Louisiana.

May focusing on season ahead

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Last season, the quarterback position was the biggest question mark for K-State, as the season opener neared.

Returning quarterback Jason Smargiasso did not return to Manhattan for fall practices. All K-State coach Bill Snyder had left was a Cal-State Fullerton transfer named Chad May, and redshirt freshmen Brian Kavanagh to replace Smargiasso.

However, those questions were answered when May captured the starting role, and led K-State to its best season since 1910. By the end of the season, Wildcat fans were found asking themselves "Smargiasso who?"

May took the Big Eight Conference by storm as he passed for 2,682 yards and broke four conference records. May threw for more than 489 yards against Nebraska.

May nabbed first-team all-Big Eight honors from the coaches, and second-team honors from the Associated Press. Then, after gaining the Big Eight honors, May went out and led the Cats to their first bowl victory with a 52-17 win against Wyoming in the Copper Bowl.

After the successful season, May said the first games as K-State's new quarterback were difficult.

"I think it was very important at first to win, especially after nobody has seen me around here," May said. "Everybody probably had their doubts, because they had someone else last season."

Even with May's on-field success last season, it didn't lead to a successful off-season. He ran into several incidents that caused his name to be an even more popular topic around Manhattan.

The first thing that happened to bring May's name back in the forefront was a knee injury.

"Chad injured his knee in a football-related injury," Snyder said.

The knee injury caused May to miss all of K-State's spring drills. Eventually, he had to undergo arthroscopic surgery.

Snyder said May is back in top condition as the fall season rapidly approaches.

"He's running fine," Snyder said. "He's throwing fine, and he has been doing everything that we are asking of him."

In July, May was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol, and making an unlawful U-turn in Aggieville.

At his arraignment, May pleaded innocent to the charges.

Then at the July 14 pretrial, a judge ruled that the U-turn was not unlawful according to a traffic ordinance. The evidence was then thrown out, and along with it the DUI charge.

The prosecution is seeking an appeal, but May said the media's pressure from the case hasn't bothered him.

"I put the pressure on myself," May said. "I don't let the media, alumni, or the fans, put anymore pressure on me."

Despite the off-field controversy, NFL scouts have May listed a definite prospect on the field.

"May is the second coming of Jim McMahon," the NFL draft report said. "Right now, he is the third-best quarterback in the nation."

May said he knows is a pro prospect, but he said he has to still be the Cats' leader this season.

"I know that I am the leader of this team," May said.

"They look to me in the huddle, and I just hope that I have the ball when the game is on the line."

" I put pressure on myself. I don't let the media, alumni, or the fans put anymore pressure on me."

▶ INTRAMURALS

Entry deadlines quickly approaching for fall intramural sporting events

MOLLY WEIGEL
Collegian

The renovations at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex will not put a damper on the intramurals at K-State.

Last year, more than 200 teams competed in the soccer and flag football programs.

"Flag football is by far the most popular fall sport," Bryan Skinner, assistant director of intramurals and special events, said.

Flag football is made up of three seperate divisions: men's, women's, and co-rec.

Soccer has a men's and a women's division. Entries will be accepted for soccer and flag football until 5 p.m. Friday.

If team sports aren't appealing, the Rec offers individual events. Some of the individual events include tennis, badminton, horseshoes, 3-wall handball and raquetball.

Doubles volleyball and one-on-one basketball will also be offered. Entries are due by 5:00 p.m. Friday.

Students interested in swimming can enter the fall swimming meet, which takes place Sept. 13 and 15 in the Natatorium.

Entries for the meet will be available from Aug. 29 to Sept. 2.

Wrestling fanatics can sign up for the wrestling meet, which will be at the Rec Complex Sept. 26-30. Entries will be available Sept. 19.

Bowl game fever catching on before season even starts

Once again, I have captured college football fever, but I have attained a greater sports disease — college football bowl fever.

A few people have caught the fever, even though it is just a little bit early in the year to be thinking where the K-State football team would go for the postseason.

I figure the best way to predict the Cats' chances of bowling would be to combine the preseason polls of the Associated Press and the USA Today-CNN top-25 polls that were released over the weekend.

I found a few interesting predictions by combining the votes of the two polls, such as Nebraska going 12-0 in the regular season, winning the Big Eight title, and then playing undefeated Florida in the Federal Express Orange Bowl for the mythical national championship.

The only other team in the nation to go undefeated during the season will be Arizona. The Wildcats will go 11-0, win the Pac-10 title and play 10-1 Big 10-champion Michigan in the Rose Bowl.

During the season, I predict Florida will win at Florida State on Nov. 26 and at Tennessee on Sept. 17, while Florida State defeats Notre Dame on Nov. 12 and Miami on Oct. 8.

Also, I did predictions for the Big Eight teams for the season:

Colorado finishes the season with a 9-2 record, but gets second place in the league. The Buffaloes will lose at Michigan and at Nebraska. Colorado then plays Notre Dame (10-1) in the IBM OS/2 Fiesta Bowl.

Oklahoma takes third place in the conference with a 9-2 mark, losing at Colorado and at home to Nebraska. The Sooners will make a Christmas Day appearance in the Jeep Eagle Aloha Bowl.

The Aloha Bowl will take Fresno State (9-2), although Fresno State participated in the bowl last year, or Louisville (8-3).

K-State captures fourth place with an 8-3 record and returns to the Weiser Lock Copper Bowl. Because the Cats went there last year, the Copper Bowl might not want K-State to return to Tucson, Ariz.

If that is the case, K-State might play in either the Builders Square Alamo Bowl in San Antonio, the St. Jude Liberty Football Bowl in Memphis, Tenn., or the Poulan/Weedeater Independence Bowl in Shreveport, La.

If K-State returns to the Copper Bowl, I figure they will play Illinois (7-4) or Louisville.

Kansas goes 6-5 and places fifth in the standings. The Jayhawks will not go to a bowl game because they would have only five Division-I wins (Alabama-Birmingham is a Division-II school).

The only other Big Eight school that has a chance to play in the postseason is Missouri. I think the Tigers will be 6-6, but the Tigers must win at Oklahoma State.

The Cowboys will go 4-7 and Iowa State is in the cellar of the conference standings with a 3-8 record, 0-7 in the league.

Yep, I certainly have college bowl fever. This is not a scientific study and I do not claim to know the future, but I am somewhat certain I will be correct.

DEPARTMENT TRANSFERS

Several departments on campus are in the process of moving their locations or have already moved.

Completed moves:
Department of Horticulture, Forestry, and Recreation Resources has moved to the east wing of Throckmorton Hall.
Art Department has moved to Willard Hall.

Moves to be completed in the fall:
Speech pathology faculty will move to Justin Hall. Clinic and graduate students will be moved at a later date.
Department of Economics will vacate the rest of their space in Burt Hall and move to Waters Hall.
Kansas Value-Added Center will move to Call Hall.

Moves to be completed during semester break:
Department of Philosophy will move to Kedzie Hall.
Department of Political Science will move to Waters Hall.

Campus departments relocate offices

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Some campus departments have been playing musical halls over the summer, and more will join in at the end of this semester.

The completion of the Throckmorton Hall expansion has enabled several departments to move into their new offices.

The Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Resources moved from offices in Waters and Call halls to the completed east addition of Throckmorton in June.

"We needed to be in the new facilities," department head Thomas Warner said.

The department and facilities planned the move in phases, Warner said.

"We had all the personnel moved in two and a half weeks. The complete move took about five weeks," he said.

Letters informing students and alumni of the changes were sent out over the summer, and maps were drawn up, Warner said.

He said he hoped the letter and maps would help eliminate confusion, but the real test would be on the first day of classes.

The completion of the west addition to Throckmorton will allow the departments of agronomy and plant pathology to move from Waters and Call halls into their new offices, Helen Cooper, associate director of facilities planning, said.

The departments of agricultural economics, entomology, and grain sciences and industry will then expand into the vacated space in Waters and Call, she said.

It is unusual for an entire department to move, Cooper said. Usually just an office or two will be moved as the space becomes available.

"We're not apt to be moving whole departments," she said.

The departments of sociology, anthropology, and social work will be moving some of their functions from Willard Hall to Waters, she said, and the dean of agriculture will also receive some of the available space in Waters.

All of the moves are expected to be completed by the end of the fall semester, Cooper said.

Prior to the demolition of the Art Building this summer, all functions of the Art Department expanded into space in Willard made available by the departure of sociology, anthropology and social work.

Other departments are expected to move as well.

The Kansas Value-Added Center, which adds value to products made in Kansas, will move from Umberger Hall to Call Hall, Cooper said.

The Department of Economics will vacate the remainder of its space in Burt Hall and move into Waters, she said.

Liberal, conservative student organizations team up

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

The College Republicans and Young Democrats at K-State are gearing up for fall elections by doing something that is sure to surprise the most cynical of voters.

The two organizations plan to work together in order to get students to the polls this November.

This bipartisan effort will include voter registration drives and candidate forums for the different races.

Becca Korphage, chair of the College Republicans, said only good things can happen when the two groups work hand in hand on issues that concern both parties.

"I think that it's good," she said. "It makes us stronger as students."

The 1992 presidential election was a prime example of the power of college students, Korphage said.

"The youth, our generation, made all the difference in the world as far as how the election turned out," she said.

Even though there is no presidential election this year, Kansans will be voting for a new governor among other important offices.

In September the Young Democrats plan to bring candidates to campus for an internship carnival. The candidates will be available to talk to the students about any questions they might have, Smith said

Students will also be able to sign up to work on campaigns for possible credit hours.

With the cooperation of their members, they plan on helping to cover the Riley County Democratic Party headquarters. They will be doing things like stuffing envelopes and answering telephones.

Probably the biggest thing for the Young Democrats this semester, Smith said, is their drive to "Get Out the Vote." They will be trying to register students and make sure they vote come election day.

"When it comes to 'Get Out The Vote,' I really see it as a non-partisan activity," Smith said.

"When we go out and we get people to register to vote, the first question isn't, 'Are you a registered Democrat?' It's, 'Are you registered to vote?'"

Korphage echoed those same sentiments about the College Republicans.

"Our mission is not really to convince people to be Republican," she said. "It's just to make people aware of the government and politics and how it's important to them."

She said they have several things on tap this semester to get students involved in the election process.

The College Republicans plan to start a newsletter that would be distributed across campus and even to Republican leaders in Topeka. She said this will let the politicians know what students have on their minds.

Like the Young Democrats, they plan to bring candidates in to speak at K-State.

"I think groups like College Republicans and the Young Democrats can make students aware of what's going on around them," Korphage said. "How they can get involved and why it's important to get involved."

Johnson & Johnson buys Neutrogena

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Health care giant Johnson & Johnson is buying Neutrogena Corp., maker of skin and hair care products, for $924.1 million.

Yesterday's joint announcement ends nearly two weeks of speculation surrounding Neutrogena, which said on Aug. 10 it was discussing a buyout by a larger company.

The $35.25 per share cash bid will be made directly to shareholders in a tender offer, the companies said.

News of the offer sent Neutrogena's shares up $6 to $34.75 on the Nasdaq Stock Market. The stock has recently been rising from $21.62 1/2, where it closed on Aug. 10 prior to the announcement of the talks. The deal had little effect on J&J shares, which were off 12 1/2 cents to $49.87 1/2 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The merger, subject to J&J's acquisition of a majority of Neutrogena shares, would allow Johnson to continue its recent expansion of skin care products. Johnson bought the Clean and Clear line from Revlon in 1991 and last year bought RoC, a French company that makes products for women with sensitive skin.

Johnson, based in New Brunswick, N.J., also sells such products as the No. 1 non-prescription painkiller, Tylenol, the Mylanta stomach medication, Johnson's Baby Oil, Band-Aids and Acuvue contact lenses.

Occupancy increasing at residence halls

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Occupancy in K-State residence halls is on the increase while the number of students in University of Kansas housing is falling.

K-State's Housing and Dining Services reported 25 to 50 more students in the residence halls this year. At the University of Kansas, residence hall occupancy has decreased by 355 students.

Bob Burgess, assistant director for business operations in the department of housing at K-State, said the increase was because of a larger number of first-year female contracts.

KU associate director of student housing Fred McElhenie said there were a number of reasons why KU residence hall occupancy is lower than last year.

"One thing that is true is that Lawrence is saturated with apartments," he said. "Students are no longer satisfied with smaller rooms."

Over the last five years, both schools have experienced a decrease in occupancy.

This year, the housing department offered freshmen a new opportunity, Burgess said.

All students applying for a residence hall were given the option of having a single room versus a shared room up until a certain deadline this summer, he said.

Most of the female residence halls are at adjusted capacity, Burgess said.

Adjusted capacity is a two-person room made compatible into a single room.

"We have fewer spaces available today than we had last year at this time because we're issuing more singles this year," Burgess said.

As the number of high-school graduates increases, Burgess said he hopes the number of freshmen at K-State will also rise.

Approximately 1,000 spaces are available in residence halls at KU, McElhenie said.

One factor that contributes to the high number of rooms available is that the increase in new students at KU has been predominately upper-class students, he said.

"The number of freshmen students, in general, has been lower in the last four to five years," McElhenie said. "This is our target market."

The price for a two-person residence hall room at KU is $3,236 per year with a 19-meal plan.

The price for a two-person residence hall at K-State with a 20-meal plan is $3,220.

Defense Department may not receive wanted funds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KEY WEST NAVAL AIR STATION, Fla. — The Defense Department's civilian leadership has warned the military it may not get the money it wants for buying major new weapons, such as fighter planes or submarines, the Pentagon chief said today.

Defense Secretary William Perry, visiting the region to review the United States' ability to handle the surge in Cuban refugees, said the military services had requested more money than the fiscal 1996 budget allowed.

Perry said the civilian leadership had gone back to the services, and we've given them some guidance on where to cut. Perry said they chose weapons systems because they did not want the services to take the easy alternative and cut their operations and maintenance budget.

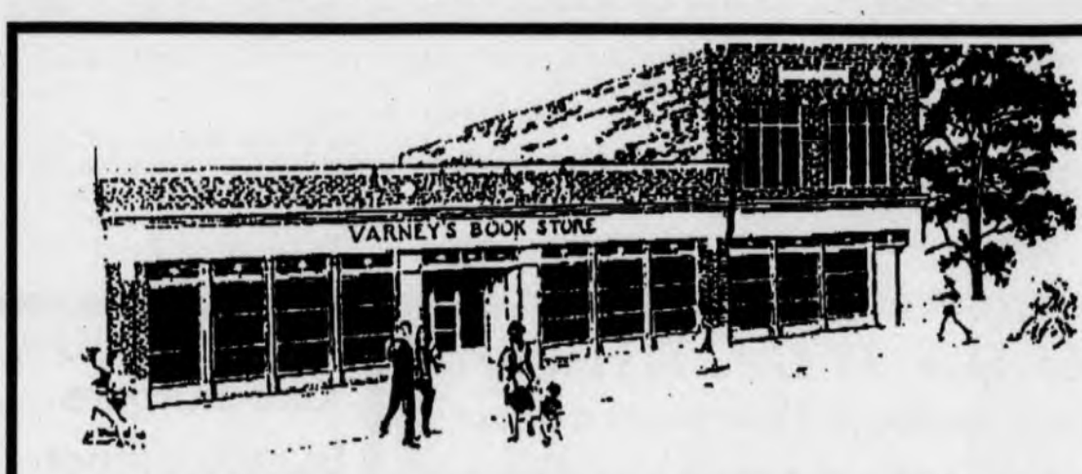
"This doesn't mean that they'll be cut. It's just to say that these are not sacred cows," Perry said.

John Deutch, the Defense Department's No. 2 officer, said the military in a memorandum may not get the money it wants for buying major new weapons, such as fighter planes or submarines.

The memo said the services to prepare different ways of funding all new major weapons systems, ranging from the F-22 to the Navy's new attack submarine, in the years 1996-2001.

The Wall Street Journal and The Washington Post reported Monday that decisions on cuts or delays in the weapons systems could come as early as next month.

Deutch, the Pentagon's acquisition chief, has reportedly targeted:



- The Air Force F-22 fighter by Boeing, the largest planned U.S. procurement for a single weapons system
- The Army's Commanche, or RAH-66, helicopter, jointly in development by Boeing and the Sikorsky unit of United Technologies Corp.
- The Navy and Marines' V-22 Osprey, a versatile two-engine craft that can fly like a plane and land like a helicopter, in development by Boeing and the Bell helicopters unit of Textron Inc.

The cost of helping Cuban and Rwandan refugees, plus the fight against drug traffickers, has forced the Pentagon to find savings by delaying high-priced weapons, according to the Post.

Senate works for common ground

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senate liberals and moderates started a series of meetings Monday to see if they could find common ground on health care. Democrats predicted the Senate would pass a reform bill before leaving on vacation.

"I think we're going to grind it out," Sen. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said after emerging from a session in Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell's office. "There was virtual unanimity in this discussion that to delay it is to threaten not completing the work."

The talks Monday centered on a relatively narrow health reform proposal advanced last week by a self-styled "mainstream" group of Democrats and Republicans.

The proposal aims to raise the level of insured Americans from 85 percent to 92 percent by 2002 through subsidies to low-income families. It would also try to reduce the deficit through Medicare savings and a cigarette-tax increase, and attempt to contain rising health costs through tax incentives.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said the mainstream plan contains impressive insurance reforms, but conservative Republicans complained it did not sufficiently control costs.

Some liberals charged it would drive up insurance costs and encourage employers to drop coverage. Others lamented it provides less than universal coverage, lacks a prescription drug plan and has weak long-term care provisions.

"I couldn't vote for it the way it is now," Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., said.

"It's an awful long way from what we campaigned on," Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., said. "I want to hang in there and see if we can get a good bill."

Sen. John Breaux, D-La., a leader of the mainstream group of about 20 senators, said there is negotiating room, but the other leader, Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., said he'd be distressed at any significant changes.

The two briefed 14 Democrats, many of them liberals who support universal coverage, at a late afternoon session. Daschle said afterward he hoped the new plan would lead to amendments and perhaps some movement in the process this week.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, mentioned the Democrats' determination to stay until the job is done.

"If I have to change my Christmas Eve plans, so be it," he said.

Senators last week began voting slowly on minor amendments to the Mitchell reform bill, which shoots for 95 percent coverage and would require employers to offer insurance if a voluntary system didn't work.

But the work of health reform continued behind closed doors among various combinations of Democrats, Republicans, liberals and moderates who want to pass a bill this year.

Conservatives led by Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, attacked the Mitchell and mainstream bills for failing to sufficiently control health-care costs.

"My feeling is that the health-care debate is over, that President Clinton has lost, and that we're on the verge of going back home," Gramm said.

Liberal Sen. Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., said the "mainstream" plan would make coverage less affordable and shrink employer-based insurance programs.

"The subsidies and tax deductions for individuals ... would result in employers reducing coverage while enjoying a government-subsidized bailout," Wellstone said in a floor speech. "There's every incentive in the world just to drop people."

White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said President Clinton wants the Senate to keep working rather than take time out for a Labor Day recess.

"This is not the time to turn back," she said.

The administration wants progress before they go home, Myers said.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., a mainstreamer, said this to say when asked if there had been "progress" in Mitchell's office.

"That's an ephemeral word."

Tips for watching health care debate

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — When senators began debating health reform more than a week ago, they promised drama, substance and history in the making. They said Americans would get excited and rush to tune in. For those intrepid C-SPAN viewers who actually do, here are a few viewing tips:

Heard two speeches, you've heard them all.

For most of the debate, Democrats and Republicans have swapped turns giving lengthy opening statements on health reform. By now, most have spoken at least once, some many times more, but that doesn't keep them from saying the same things, again and again.

Most Republicans call Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell's health reform bill a government takeover of the health care system. They say it offers more of a lot of bad things — taxes, bureaucrats, inefficiency — and far less of one good thing — choice. They said these things over and over and over again.

Democrats say the Mitchell plan is voluntary and isn't big government. Just in case that doesn't convince anyone, they say people love government programs anyway.

Senators of both parties often tell sad stories about their own families, or at least about families in their states. They repeat these stories often, each time giving the impression they are baring their souls on the subject for the first time.

Beware of big talk of bipartisan compromise. It tends to center on the tiniest of agreements. Senators have been quick to congratulate themselves for unanimous or near-unanimous votes on amendments this week.

While the amendments will, for instance, expand rural health care, they do not touch at all on the key issues that divided the senators in the first place.

Just because one senator has made a point perfectly moments before doesn't mean another senator won't get up and say the exact same thing less well moments later.

On Thursday, the veteran Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., made the most eloquent of speeches, urging fellow senators to get down to business on health reform.

He asked them to be financially realistic. He asked them to come together across party lines. He said what he said beautifully. Seconds after he yielded the floor, however, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., got up and praised Byrd to the skies.

"That speech, which was only 20 to 25 minutes, has put in better perspective the problem this Senate faces than it could ever be put," Packwood said.

▶ COLUMN

It's hard to share a page with Calvin

As the fall Collegian arts and entertainment editor, I am proud to announce a new addition to our paper — the arts and entertainment column.

The purpose of these columns will be to highlight events in the Manhattan/K-State community that may not merit a full article, or offer commentary on the local arts scene.

The area has a rich arts and entertainment scene, and often, due to space constraints, we cannot give every event in the area the coverage it deserves.

In this space you may see an announcement of a local art show, a short movie or album review, or brief criticism of current offerings. The text you read here will be a column, and thus the ideas will be the opinion of the columnist.

We do hope to motivate those who provide entertainment in the area to continue to refine and improve their product.

I would like to invite all those who feel they have an event that deserves mentioning in this forum to contact me at the Collegian newsroom.

Introductions aside, I would now like to point out a few cheap entertainment options around the area:

■ The Internet

The campus computer labs. A world of information is availible, and it's all FREE. The only cost is in the study time you will lose as you surf Al's information superHYPEway.

■ KSU Theater

KSU Theatre's production of "Laundry and Bourbon" and "Lone Star." The show was produced in the summer, and features a cast of K-State theater veterans, many of whom are gracing the K-State stage for the last time. Be sure to check it out.

Look for a feature and review for the show later this week in the Collegian.

■ Union Program Council

With the new cash given to the Union Program Council courtesy of Union expansion, they hope to be able to treat the campus to some real fine concerts, finally. Many past efforts to produce a quality outlet for live music have failed, so they will definitely have their hands full.

Live music in Manhattan can only get better, but only if we, the students, will be supportive of it.

■ Freshman fun

The best free entertainment for the K-State community this week lies in taking a break in one of the wooded areas of campus, and watching all the freshman and transfer students park and wander about campus looking for Willard Hall.

'Jurassic Park' returns to screen

RUSSEL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Anyone who missed "Jurassic Park" at the movie theater has one last chance to catch the thrills and excitement of the movie's awesome dinosaurs.

Special effects technology proved, once again, that any film can be enjoyable if it includes one or two out-of-this-world scenes involving something impossible by the day's standards (life-like dinosaurs, recreated in 1993 by DNA reproduction, running around a theme park makes for a wonderful movie).

On the negative side, the movie stripped Michael Crichton's book of all its scientific glitz and information.

The movie gives you about thirty seconds worth of real, factual information about DNA, cell reproduction and the actual process of reproducing live dinosaurs.

Don't go to this Speilberg movie expecting the most compelling acting you've seen on the screen in decades.

Sam Neill and Laura Dern do all right just keeping their hides out of the mouth of T. Rex. Jeff Goldblum plays the "comical" stock character.

How much more can you say about a movie that grossed more money than most developing countries' budgets?

Go see it before the sequel comes out.

'JURASSIC PARK'

The Union Program Council will be presenting the movie, "Jurassic Park," at 7 and 9:30 p.m. on Friday, August 26 and at 7 and 9:30 p.m. on Saturday, August 27 in Forum Hall. All tickets are $1.75.

Keen not typical

Keen's only claim to fame is being Lyle Lovett's college roommate at Texas A&M.

The high point of the disc comes on "Merry Christmas from the Family," a telling of the celebration of the birth of Christ from the perspective of a white trash family.

"Sister brought her new boyfriend / he was a Mexican / didn't know what to think of him, until he sang "Feliz Navidad."

The song describes the celebration of the holidays with trips to the convenience store for alcohol, tobacco and firearms, as well as a brother who shorts out the Keen family lighting after plugging in his motor home.

Keen is the quintessential working man's singer. What he lacks in ability, he makes up for in heart and passion.

Researchers find new uses for Thalidomide

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The thousands of deformed thalidomide babies, those that survived, would be in their '40s and '50s now, and are awful testimony to the wide use of a drug before it has been proven safe, effective and potent.

Thalidomide, a powerful tranquilizer that seemed convenient to curb morning sickness in pregnant women, was effective and potent, all right. But never safe.

The drug was banned over most of the world. It was never approved for use in the United States, thanks to the diligence of scientists at the Food and Drug Administration, who were keenly attuned to early reports of birth damage from Europe.

The reaction to the horrors of thalidomide prodded the Congress to pass some of the most stringent drug safety laws in the world.

But now scientists are discovering the old bugbear is useful in a number of stubborn diseases for which there are few effective remedies: leprosy, lupus and rheumatoid arthritis. And it helps control one's immune system, which tends to reject foreign tissue when it is transplanted into a host.

Now, too, researchers at Rockefeller University are planning to test it on tuberculosis and AIDS.

By now scientists have learned much more about how thalidomide works.

It controls a particular part of the immune response called tumor necrosis factor, or TNF, produced by the macrophages, those cells in the immune system that engulf and kill invasions of viruses and bacteria.

Just by its name, one knows that this substance attacks tumors, which is good. But there can be too much of a good thing.

Too much TNF produces a number of symptoms such as debilitating fever, fatigue and weight loss, signs that the immune system is fighting itself.

That happens when strong agents are used to combat the leprosy bacilli. Thalidomide knocks down this complication of leprosy treatment.

Both HIV and TB stimulate the body's production of the tumor necrosis factor. So now they want to determine whether taming the TNF can aid in those disease treatments as well.

It seems that thalidomide is specific for TNF without daunting the other elements of the immune system.

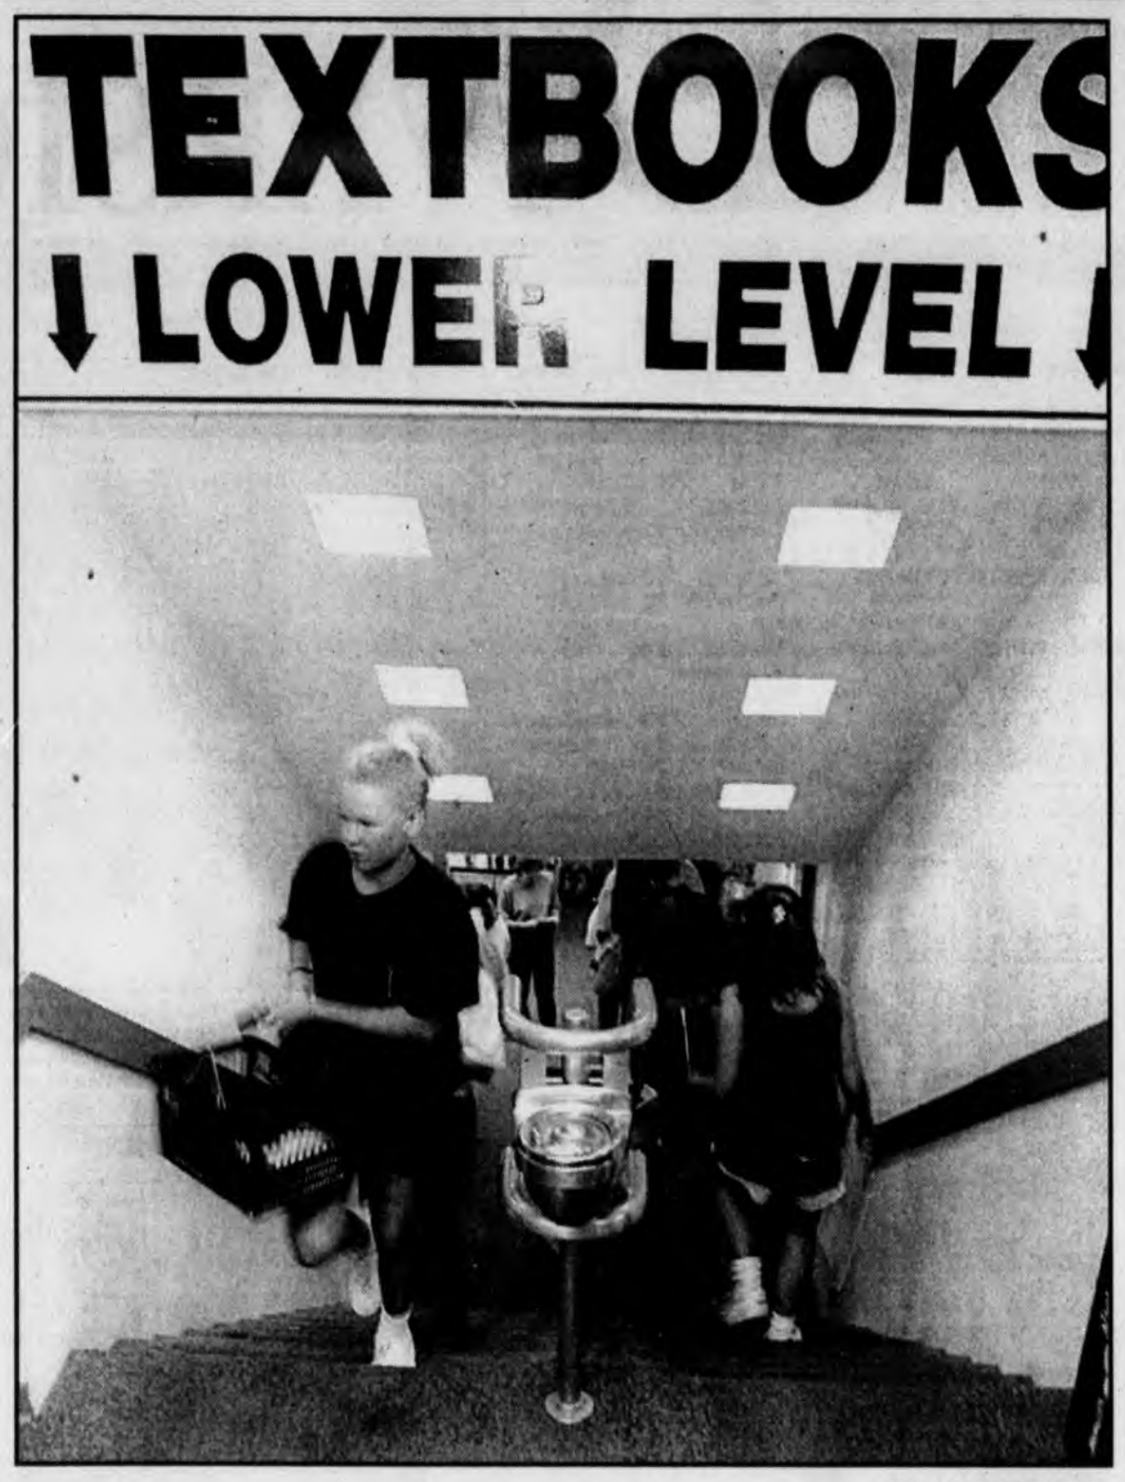
Dr. Gilla Kaplan, of Rockefeller University, has worked with thalidomide in continuing studies of leprosy treatment.

Kaplan said, "Thalidomide was first prescribed as a tranquilizer. That would never happen again. Now we're talking about using thalidomide for critically ill people, such as those with cancer, AIDS, TB, or those with endotoxic shock."

In some diseases, doctors try to enhance the patient's immune response and in doing so trigger excessive production of TNF. Thalidomide might help control that as well.

In Kaplan's laboratory, thalidomide has engendered dramatic weight gain and reductions of fever in people with AIDS and tuberculosis.

In the current issue of SEARCH, the Rockefeller University Magazine, the scientists say "most recent studies indicate that thalidomide may prove useful in combatting not only the symptoms of AIDS, but the replication of its causative virus as well."



It is a tactic of the AIDS virus to lie dormant in the cellular structure of patients it infects. When TNF is introduced in the scene, the dormant HIV genes are turned on at the same time as immune cell genes are mobilized to fight the infection.

According to the magazine, "HIV 'parasitizes' the regulatory mechanisms of immune cells for its own purposes.

"Test-tube experiments by Kaplan and her colleagues have already indicated that thalidomide can stop HIV replication in certain laboratory cell lines, as well as in blood cells taken from patients and grown in culture."

Now the Rockefeller researchers are giving thalidomide to AIDS patients both with and without tuberculosis to further explore the promising indications that thalidomide might provide an effective new therapy in the fight against AIDS.

So it may be that some good may come of the misused drug that left its path of agony across the face of the Earth.

▶ MIGRAINE DRUG

Medicine labels to bear warning

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — The British drugmaker Glaxo Holdings PLC has agreed to put a warning on the labels of its migraine headache remedy Imitrex, telling about a Missouri woman who died shortly after getting an injection of the drug.

Glaxo agreed to the label revision after a recent request from the Food and Drug Administration, even though the death of Dianne D. Riley of Kansas City, Mo., hasn't been positively linked to Imitrex, Food and Drug Administration spokesman Arthur Whitmore said.

Doctors may continue to prescribe the drug as they see fit, he said.

Imitrex "has been widely used and we're very confident in the safety profile of the drug," Ramona Jones, a spokesman at Glaxo's U.S. headquarters in Research Triangle Park, said Monday.

"What these labeling changes are to do is make sure the physician has appropriate information to make sure and prescribe appropriately," Jones said.

"It's important that physicians are aware of what happened in this case so that they can be of help in their prescribing the drug."

Riley, 41, began having reactions to Imitrex about seven minutes after her doctor injected her with the drug, the labeling will say. She died after developing heart problems, so the label will warn doctors against prescribing the drug to people with heart diseases.

The warning will also state Riley had a history of heart disease, asthma and an allergy to codeine.

The new warning will be included in directions for the drug's use and in a mass mailing to physicians, Jones said.

Anyone worried about the drug should talk with their doctor, Whitmore said.

"Migraines can be extremely debilitating. It really comes down to the individual practitioner's relationship with the patient, the patient's desires and the doctor's evaluation of what's best for the patient," he said.

About 1 1/2 million patients have used 25 million doses of Imitrex since it was first introduced in 1991, Jones said. It has been approved for use in Canada, Mexico and more than 60 other countries. Glaxo has sold Imitrex in the United States since March 1993.

The drug, known generically as sumatriptan succinate, is available by injection only, but kits are available allowing patients to administer it themselves.

It reduces swelling of blood vessels in the brain during a migraine headache. Imitrex treats all symptoms of the ailment, which can include severe pain, sensitivity to light and sound, nausea and vomiting, Jones said.

It must be injected under the skin, but not into blood vessels, or it can constrict the blood vessels leading to the heart.

The impact of the new warning on the drug's sales or the company's stock is uncertain, Hemant Shah, an analyst who tracks Glaxo for HKS & Co. in Warren, N.J., said.

"Anytime you have to add new labeling to a drug, it's definitely not a positive. How big a negative, it's difficult to say right now," Shah said.

Shah said she projected worldwide Imitrex sales at about $465 million for 1994. Imitrex generated $188 million in sales during the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1993, Jones said. Sales jumped to $170 million during the second half of 1993. U.S. sales were $87 million during that period.

Joblessness rate dips

Kansas' unemployment rate dropped below 5 percent. This drop is attributed to seasonal workers stopping the job hunt.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The state's unemployment rate was 4.7 percent in July, down from 5.1 percent in June, according to a report released today by the Kansas Department of Human Resources.

Kansas officials attributed the slight drop in joblessness to the fact that many people who were seeking summer employment simply quit looking for work in July.

"The rate is lower because many of the students and other seasonal job seekers quit looking for work in July," said Joe Dick, secretary of human resources. "Once they quit their job search, they are, by definition, no longer part of the labor force and the unemployment numbers decrease."

The Kansas un-employment rate also was 4.7 percent in July 1993. Over the year, both employment and un-employment increased.

In July, there were almost 2 million people working in Kansas, while more than 64,000 people were looking for work.

One year ago, there were 1.2 million people working, while more than 62,000 were unemployed.

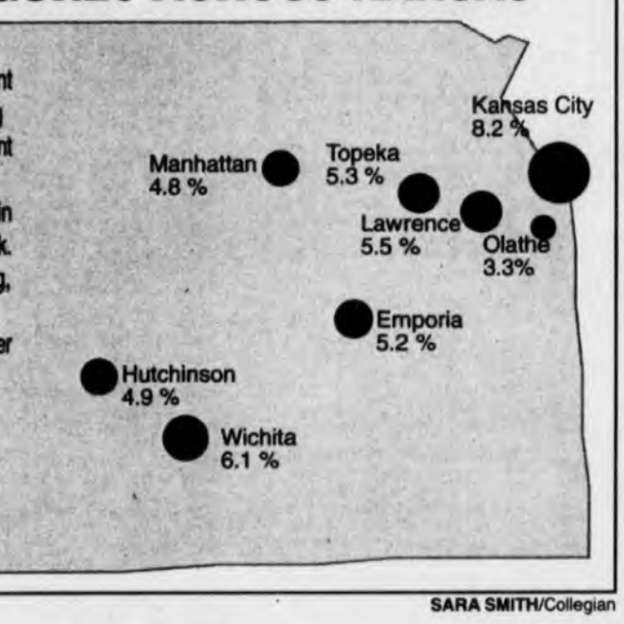
That is an increase of nearly 23,000 in the number of people holding jobs.

The Wichita area unemployment rate was 5.4 percent in July, down from 6.2 percent in June. The Wichita rate was 5.2 percent in July 1993.

The Topeka area was 4.6 percent in July, down from 4.8 percent the month before.

Both employment and unemployment were lower over the month. In July 1993, the Topeka jobless rate was 5 percent.

The Lawrence area unemployment rate was 5.1 percent in July 1994. That is down from 6.2 percent the month before. In July 1993, the unemployment rate there was 4.9 percent.



The Kansas side of the Kansas City metropolitan area had a 4.2 percent unemploy-ment rate, up from 4 percent. The area had a 4.1 percent rate in July 1993.

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES ACROSS KANSAS

The state's unemployment rate was 4.7 percent in July, down from 5.1 percent in June, according to a report released today by the Kansas Department of Human Resources.

In July, there were 1,299,835 people working in Kansas, while 64,469 people were looking for work. A year ago, there were 1,276,853 people working, while 62,633 were searching for employment.

That is an increase of nearly 23,000 in the number of people holding jobs.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORFOLK, Va. — As Cuban refugees took to the sea in record numbers, Defense Secretary William Perry headed for southern Florida today to observe the exodus of Cubans and to meet with top Navy and Coast Guard officials.

Perry was scheduled to meet with Coast Guard officials in Key West, Fla., before conducting an air tour of the Florida straits to assess the flood of refugees.

A senior defense official, speaking on board Perry's aircraft, downplayed reports of a potential blockade against Cuba.

"The idea of a blockade is not something currently at the forefront of our planning," the official said.

Perry flew from Washington this morning with Deputy Transportation Secretary Mortimer Downey to Norfolk, where they picked up Adm. Paul D. Miller, the four-star admiral in charge of U.S. naval operations in the Atlantic region.

On Sunday, White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta raised the distant possibility of a naval blockade, presumably to prevent other countries from selling goods to Cuba, to turn up pressure on Cuban leader Fidel Castro.

"We've got to continue to put pressure on Castro, because the problem here is not the problem of refugees, it's not the problem of migrants. It's the problems within the Castro regime," he said.

Another official, who spoke on condition of not being identified by name, said the Navy has contingency plans to put as many as 10 Navy ships to work picking up Cubans adrift at sea. Up to now, mainly Coast Guard vessels have been used.

Panetta said the pressure on Castro now is coming in the form of economic sanctions announced Saturday by President Clinton, including a ban on cash payments sent by Cuban-Americans to their relatives in Cuba.

"We want to see Castro move toward a democratic form of government, and that clearly is not happening. As a consequence, we're putting pressure on the Castro government," Panetta said on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley."

Some Republicans have rebuked the White House for focusing too much on the refugee exodus, and not enough on pushing out Castro.

Reversing a 28-year U.S. policy, the Clinton administration announced last week that Cuban refugees caught at sea would be turned away from the United States and detained at the U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Clinton barred cash payments by Cuban-Americans to relatives in Cuba and put new limits on flights between the United States and the island nation. He also pledged increased and amplified U.S. radio broadcasts into Cuba warning residents not to take to the sea.

▶ CUBAN POLICY

Base receiving 1,000 Cubans per day

GUANTANAMO NAVAL BASE, Cuba — The United States is prepared to hold up to 10,000 Cubans here "indefinitely," in a sign of the administration's resolve to prevent an exodus of refugees from reaching U.S. shores, Defense Secretary William Perry said Monday.

The get-tough policy has had little effect on its intended audience; however, more than 1,000 refugees a day are being intercepted. By Monday afternoon, more than 11,000 Cubans had been ferried to the naval base on the southeast tip of the island, far from their goal of the United States.

In Washington, the administration slammed the door on treating the fleeing Cubans as political refugees. Asked whether the Cubans taken to Guantanamo had any chance of being admitted on political grounds, Immigration and Natural Service Commissioner Doris Meissner said, "No, they do not."

More than 50 Coast Guard and Navy vessels patrol the waters between Key West, Fla., and Cuba, forming, in effect, a seaborne sea wall. Thirty planes patrol overhead.

Perry flew here across those waters, gazing from the cockpit of his C-20 executive jet as it swooped over several ships, plucking refugees from the sea. During the flight, Perry observed at least 20 tiny makeshift rafts.

"It's a stunning sight," Perry said. "There's a tidal wave of people forming out there."

The White House said it believed the number of refugees would drop off substantially within a week, as word of the change of policy filtered into Cuba.

Say goodbye to Star Trek

On Sept. 12, re-program your remote control for yet another NBC channel. KSHB-FOX 41 will no longer be broadcasting.

Instead of the normal FOX broadcasting, the channel will become the third in the Manhattan area to carry NBC programming, Ron Frazier, TCI general manager, said.

One option for TCI, he said, would be to add station KSAS-4-24 from Wichita, which carries Fox programming.

Another option would be to switch to station WDAF, which will be Fox programming, Frazier said.

"We are scrambling to determine the best route for us and the viewers," Frazier said.

Viewers concerned about missing NFL football games can find them on channel five, KTKA, because it carries Fox football games, Frazier said.

Jeff Palmer, freshman in journalism, said many of his favorite shows are on Fox.

"It has all the shows I grew up with," Palmer said. "Leave it to Beaver, I Love Lucy, Growing Pains. I like all of those."

Unfortunately, Frazier said, there are a lot of technical situations that need to be handled before action can be taken.

"It is not just as easy as flipping a switch," Frazier said.

"Viewers just need to hang in there with us until we can figure out which way to go," he said.

Despite obstacles, concert will go on

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

The show will go on for the KSDB-FM 91.9 Welcome Back Concert, after a series of obstacles involving the Union Program Council.

After last year's FallFest '93, which was supposed to revolutionize the tired welcome back concert venue bombed, UPC nixed all ideas of having a similar concert in fall 1994.

FallFest was UPC's idea of revamping the tired welcome back concert scheme. They moved the event to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex west lawns.

Eric Melin, music director for DB92 and junior in radio-television, played at that festival. His band, Truck Stop Love, opened for the larger group, The Fishheads.

Between the two musical groups, a motivational speaker entertained the audience with some group games. Few people attended.

This past summer, Melin was informed that UPC was not having a welcome back concert this fall. So he decided to organize a concert through DB92 and Manhattan business sponsors.

After considerable time and effort was spent talking to bands and organizing sponsors for the concert, Melin went to UPC program adviser Sharon Willits on July 25.

At that meeting, Melin asked for approximately $600 to pay for half of the event.

"Initially, Sharon Willits gave the impression that she was fairly certain she could find some money for the show," Melin said.

Eisenhower revisions to cause most trouble

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

K-State is in the midst of one of the most progressive building cycles in its history.

What is progress to some, however, may be an irritation to others.

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, has been working with facilities director Jerry Carter and the departments affected by ripped-out walls and loud machinery to make the process as smooth as possible to everyone concerned.

"Inconvenience to students, faculty and staff is the price of progress," Rawson said, "but everyone has been extremely cooperative and understanding."

Building projects that students will find most inconvenient to parking, biking and learning are the renovations to Eisenhower Hall, Farrell Library, Calvin Hall and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

■ Eisenhower Hall

The project most bothersome to students will be the renovation of Eisenhower Hall, Carter said.

Faculty and students will have to track through drywall dust and strain to hear themselves think over whining drills and banging hammers.

Since July 1, workers have gutted all the restrooms on three floors and have cut out an elevator shaft to make Eisenhower more accessible to the disabled, Carter said.

The $230,000 project will be under construction throughout the semester, he said, although the restrooms should be done by Oct. 1.

"We want to get the restrooms brought on line as soon as possible," Carter said. "It's not a good idea to send all those students to Denison or to Holton Hall."

The campus Committee for the Disabled, which set the priorities for handicap accessibility projects, put Eisenhower at the top of its list, Ed Rice, assistant vice president for facilities, said.

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, said it would have been better if the construction had begun earlier in the summer, but the money for the project didn't become available until July 1.

The project is being financed by state money deposited in the University's Repair and Rehabilitation fund, Rawson said.

This year, the Kansas Board of Regents allocated $2.3 million to K-State for capitol improvements, handicap accessibility projects and infrastructural upkeep, Rawson said.

Carter said he knew the noise and mess was going to be an annoyance to the building's occupants but that the workers would try to keep the noise down.

■ Farrell Library

The Farrell Library construction site, an impassable island in the center of campus, will likely be a thorn in the side of many students and faculty.

However, they will have 2-1/2 years to get used to it, Carter said.

"Once people get used to where they have to walk in and around the library, there shouldn't be any problems," he said.

Construction irritating but necessary

PRUDENCE SIEBERT
Collegian

If squeezing your way through a tunnel next to a noisy construction site and walking half a mile out of your way to class taints your idea of college life, get used to it.

The inconvenience of construction is the price the University has to pay for progress, but most faculty and students say they are tolerant of the confusion.

Faculty in Denison Hall, adjacent to the construction site, particularly notice the construction activity.

"Especially here in Denison, we feel kind of caged — kind of like a camp or compound with all these fences," Craig Stroupe, instructor of English, said.

Stroupe said the atmosphere of campus has been disturbed but also thinks growth is positive for the University.

"I think people, especially on a college campus, like the green grass and wide sidewalks. It (the construction) doesn't fit the tone of tradition and study," he said.

"But, if we are to continue to grow, I don't know what the alternative is. I think we find the mess and disruption bothersome but will like the end result."

Greg Tadtman, senior in sociology, said he also sees benefit from the temporary nuisance.

"We'll finally have a library that's no longer the bottom of the Big Eight," Tadtman said.

Troy Huber, freshman in business, said time and usage seemed to be the only inconveniences to him but the construction was needed.

"It's a necessary inconvenience — one of those things that needs to be done, but nobody wants it," Huber said.

Some students said they think too much construction on campus is being done and planned at once.

"It needed improvement, but I wish they could space it out," Tadtman said. "There's the library, the art museum next, then the Union."

Inconvenience to students resulting from the construction has made some students either late to class or forced to set their alarm clocks a little earlier.

"I have a class at 9:30, and I have to go all the way around," Lorraine Martinez, junior in secondary education, said. "I used to be able to leave 10 minutes before class to make it on time. Now I have to leave 15 to 20 minutes early to go around."

Other students said they were confused about building entrances.

"I haven't figured out a way into the library yet, but I will," Tadtman said.

Donna Ekart, director of the K-State Info Center and graduate student in educational psychology, said the center has received calls about the library.

"Some people are confused about how to get into Farrell. We received a couple of calls on Monday about how to get in," Ekart said.

▶ COURT-MARTIAL BEGINS FOR FORT RILEY SOLDIER ACCUSED OF MURDER

FORT RILEY — An Army private punched, kicked and choked another soldier to death, a prosecutor said as a court-martial began.

Pvt. Robert Grady, 19, of Warwick, R.I., is charged with premeditated murder in the killing of Pfc. Michael Regehr of Springfield, Ore.

During opening statements Monday, prosecuting attorney Capt. Andy Nastoff alleged that Grady punched Regehr in the head and stabbed him in the throat, skull and cheek on March 10.

Grady's defense attorney, Capt. Dave Conn, contended that Grady was pressured into telling investigators that he may have killed Regehr.

▶ HOSPITAL EMPLOYEES NAMED, CONVICTED OF BRIBING COUNSELOR

TOPEKA — U.S. Attorney Randy Rathbun announced Monday that a former hospital administrator and a former marketer for Parkview Hospital have been convicted of 31 counts in connection with a scheme to pay a public official to refer patients to the hospital.

Mark M. Jackson, 43, and Robert Martinez, 40, both of St. Simons, Ga., were convicted after a three-week trial.

The jury deliberated for about five hours before finding the two guilty on 15 counts of bribery by giving money to a former counselor for the U.S. Postal Service.

The total amount came to more than $40,000.

They also were found guilty of 15 counts for aiding and abetting the postal worker in receiving the money and one count of conspiring to defraud the U.S. government.

The pair face up to 15 years in prison and a $250,000 fine for each of the 15 bribery counts and five years and $250,000 for the other 16 counts.

He faces up to five years in federal prison. No sentencing date has been set for him.

Garcia referred 41 postal employees or family members to Topeka's Parkview Hospital, a pyschiatrict institute, where they were treated for alcohol or drug abuse, or for behavior problems.

▶ AUDIT COMMITTEE LOOKING INTO 'LIFTING OF BRIEFCASE' INJURY CLAIM

TOPEKA — A legislative committee plans on Wednesday to review an audit of the workers' compensation case of former Insurance Commissioner Fletcher Bell.

The Post Audit Committee will begin its meeting at 10 a.m. and take up the audit. Legislators want to know whether state officials handled the case properly.

Bell received a $94,469 workers' compensation award in February 1991, just six weeks after he retired from office.

He filed a claim for a back injury he sustained while lifting a briefcase from the trunk of his car.

The Division of Workers' Compensation reviewed the case, and an administrative law judge approved the award. The state Self-Insurance Fund paid Bell's tax-free benefits.

SAUGERTIES — By the time we get back to the garden for Woodstock III perhaps the garbage from Woodstock II will be gone.

Or perhaps not. As more than half the estimated 1,400 tons of garbage produced at Woodstock '94 is still there, mired deeply in mud.

It rained heavily during part of the Aug. 12-14 show, it rained all day Sunday and it rained some more Monday.

"It's no longer a field. It's just mud," Charles Shaw, director of the Ulster County agency monitoring the cleanup, said.

"You can't even get in there now because of the mud," Shaw said Monday.

It's not just programs or paper cups embedded in the mud, he said.

There's clothing, camping equipment, plastic bags, shoes and thousands of pizza boxes.

There's also a few hundred thousand beer cans.

Organizers billed Woodstock II, a celebration of the original 1969 Woodstock concert, as an alcohol-free show. But many people carried in beer when security at the gates fell apart.

Shaw said a modest amount of garbage was recycled by vendors, including a half ton of glass and 15 tons of cardboard.

Anything else recyclable that was contaminated by mud has to be thrown out.

In spite of the mess, representatives of the state Department of Environmental Conservation have inspected the area and found there is no imminent environmental danger, said R.W. Groneman, a spokesman for the state Department of Environmental Conservation.

Jumping the construction barriers at Farrell Library might get you to class faster, but it might also get you arrested.

"For all intents and purposes, the construction site is not part of the campus," Ed Rice, assistant vice president of facilities, said.

"It is legally controlled by the contractor."

The contractor is liable for any accidents that happen on the site and has the right to prosecute a trespasser to the fullest extent of the law, Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said.

"He is within his rights to call campus police or the Riley County Police Department and have (the trespasser) booked on trespassing charges," he said.

Construction companies are sensitive to litigation and damage to equipment, Rice said.

Carter said he is giving students the warning only because he is concerned with their safety.

"People need to realize there are some major safety concerns that we need to be aware of to protect the students, faculty and staff during the construction of this building," Carter said.

Assistant Vice President of facilities

"We have to keep people away from the site so they are not inadvertantly injured by construction going on across the fence," he said.

Carter said he doesn't expect many problems with trespassing, because he thinks students will respect the barriers.

"I believe that if we make the student body believe that we're doing this for their safety, that they are bright enough to accept that," Carter said.

Carter's concern is safety

"Some people try to get in on the Lafene side and walk around, only to find more fence. They don't realize there's a tunnel you have to go through."

Besides the construction on the library, there are projects inside Eisenhower and Calvin halls. An elevator is being installed in Eisenhower, and work is being done on the restrooms.

Shirley Olson, administrative assistant to the dean of arts and sciences, helped coordinate construction so that disturbance was minimum while students were in class.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said they tried to schedule the extremely noisy activity during the summer. His main concern, though, is the safety of those walking by the construction.

"A construction project is an extremely dangerous place for people to be," Carter said. "For the past year and a half, we've been considering where to put fences and temporary sidewalks so students, faculty and staff can move safely around the project without putting them in any danger.

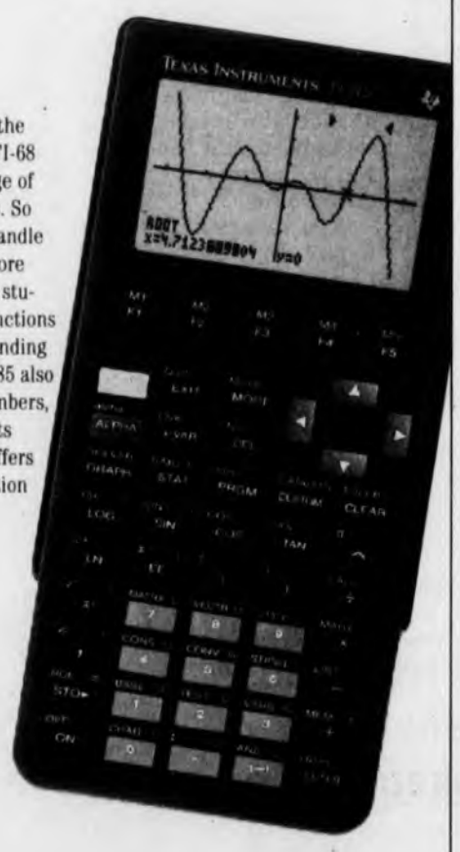
Carter said bicyclists have been riding where they shouldn't be, especially the sidewalk by Lafene Health Center.

"I saw some guys scooting through there at about 30 mph while walkers were trying to get through. Bicyclists need to understand they will have to get off and walk their bikes down those sidewalks where we're asking them not to be riding."

Although he said it would get worse before it gets better, Carter said facilities planning is doing its best to make it as accessible and safe as possible.

"We're really trying to be responsive to what people are seeing and feeling," Carter said. "If anyone has any suggestions about some other improvements or does not feel safe in an area, please let us know."



While most of Farrell Library is being gutted, some parts are being salvaged. These two decorative water fountain pieces may be used in the new addition to Farrell.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Bicyclers should stay off sidewalks

On a campus that has a reputation for friendliness, a few bicycle riders are building a reputation for being inconsiderate.

Students have already had to deal with the inconvenience of the crowded, rerouted sidewalk detour in front of Farrell Library.

Bike riders zipping through that narrow path and weaving among pedestrians are not only rude they are a hazard.

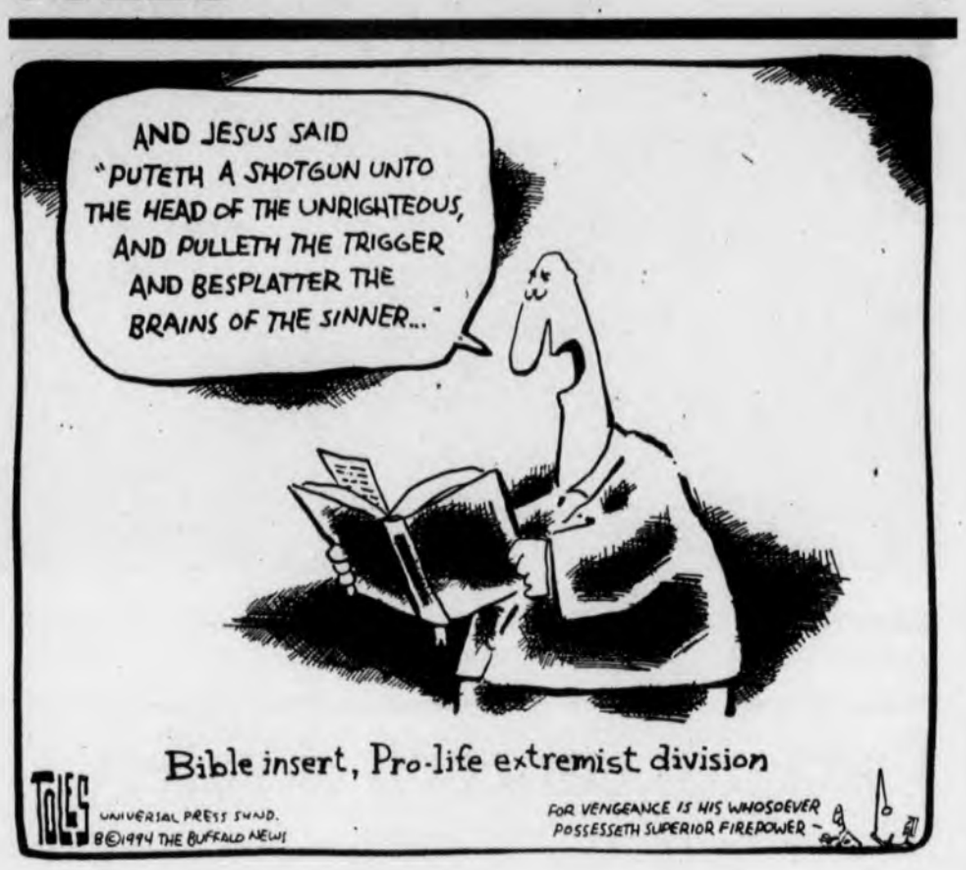
The K-State Police have received numerous complaints about the problem, and has tried to deal with the situation as best it can by placing an officer in the sidewalk area to watch for these inconsiderate bicyclists.

However, the campus police are not able to have someone there round the clock or even all the time during the day.

Bike riders are still slipping through, and although no injuries have been reported, there have been a few near misses.

Bicyclists and pedestrians have a history of butting heads over who can travel where, but the safety concerns on this particular narrow, enclosed path override the rights of bicyclists to pedal anywhere.

Riding on this harrowing pathway creates a hazard that shouldn't exist.



Everyone who has to walk that route is hassled by the crowded condition of that well-traveled sidewalk.

Everyone else is having to plod through the 200 feet of detour. Bike riders need to put others' safety ahead of their own selfishness and simply dismount.

TOLES

ADVICE

Use your resources; play nice with kids

I am a sixth-year senior.

God, that's hard to say. I feel like I'm admitting that I have leprosy or some kind of chronic, incurable halitosis.

I feel like I should be standing in front of this huge crowd of people, crying, "I thought I could handle it. Y'know? I didn't think it was a problem, but then it started to be one semester after another, and it just went on and on. I couldn't stop!"

Honestly, I am not in the least bit ashamed of my status as "artifact" on this campus. (That's the classification right after "senior in engineering" and right before "professional student").

The fact that the people in the enrollment center have my social security number memorized and a special pile of Drop/Add sheets embossed with my name and permanent address on them doesn't even make me flinch anymore.

Well, OK, maybe just a little.

But, having sacrificed six years of my life in the pursuit of higher education, I have learned a hell of a lot about myself and this University.

And I have the therapist to prove it.

One thing I've learned is that advice is wasted on the young, i.e., the freshmen.

I could tell them things they need to survive on this campus and still see the same shell-shocked expression at the end of the year I had hoped to help them avoid.

So this year, I decided to give my beginning-of-the-year survival tips to the people who might actually listen to me. Everyone else — use them.

1. Don't torture the New Meats.

I know that there are some of you who've only stayed in college this long in hopes of inflicting the same kind of physical and mental anguish that others visited upon you when you were a freshman, but be humane.

The freshman are gonna bug you.

They are going to ask stupid questions and get on your nerves, but be patient with them.

You were a youngin' once too, and they deserve to be treated, somewhat, like human beings.

Especially you dorm rats.

Tying some drunk freshman to a chair and sticking them in the elevator may seem pretty funny at three o'clock in the morning, but it's not.

It's damned immature.

Play nice!

2. Save your pennies.

Remember those few cents you get from financial aid.

You'll need them after you've paid off your tuition, books and Emergency Skydiving Loans and use them at the Union.

Someone, somewhere along the way instituted this tax thing that now requires you to have about twenty dollars in pennies on you when you want to buy a pop there, so be warned.

3. Renew your Manhattan Public Library card.

Construction has begun on the new library addition, which means the whole place is even a bigger mess than it was before.

To avoid the hassle of having to send some library staff person off in search of a hard hat so they can get a book for you, go to the public library.

You might want to consider investing in a pair of hiking boots, too.

With all the other construction on campus, they might be the only way you'll get from Thompson to Cardwell without breaking a limb.

4. Don't forget to take Concepts of P.E.

It took me five years to get around to doing that.

Do it as soon out of high school as you can and I'll bet the body fat test won't be nearly as embarrassing.

5. Find your adviser.

This is especially for you seniors.

Remember that person you dumped two years ago thinking that you could figure out how to get out of this place on your own?

Find them and make sure you did it right.

As a freshman, it may have looked like they didn't know their Funk and Wagnell's from a hole in the ground. But you were pretty clueless back then, so give them a ring.

And don't forget to turn in your graduate check as quickly as possible.

There might be an off chance you misread that raggedy student handbook you've been checking your classes off in.

You have enough time to take that Fundamentals of Lego Building class that's required for your degree.

There is one more piece of advice that I can think to give.

I would suggest one thing to all those who have begun studies or have been at K-State for many hears already.

Don't forget to leave.

#32 a backscratcher

Perpetuating myths, stereotypes are not part newspaper's job

Good morning and welcome back to K-State.

I face the dilemma of trying to come up with an opening piece that is at once intellectual and exciting — witty, yet ready to tackle issues of relevance to all K-Staters.

Many ideas were used up last year (although I again want to strongly encourage you to return blank all of the BUSINESS REPLY MAIL so thoughtfully provided by Citibank and associates, as they so desperately want to hear from you.)

This semester, we of the opinion page will try to bring a more local slant to the paper you read. Important issues on campus, in the community and around Kansas are a top priority.

This creates interesting new challenges, as more traditional topics — health care, Bill Clinton and toilet paper are less likely to be covered.

There has been some griping, complaints that local issues are boring and that our readers really want to hear us drone on and on about "What I Did on My Summer Vacation." Others fear a lack of newsworthy stories.

But one need look only as far as the Collegian itself to find ample fodder for campus outcry.

I'm talking about sexism.

As a returning Collegian columnist, I was actually encouraged by our training schedule. Seminars on diversity and sexism were a first in my tenure with this paper.

We recalled incidents in our past, discussed ways of overcoming prejudices, and reiterated the need to represent women and people of color more accurately in our paper.

If you still have Monday's paper, turn to page six, where sports editor Wess Hudelson encourages K-Staters to hate the Jayhawks.

Sounds good to me. Hate can be a good thing, in a twisted sort of way (wasn't it Richard Bach who said, "Hate is love misunderstood?"). But his four-step method leaves much to be desired.

"Second, sit down with some friends and make up some dirty jokes about the Kansas players, coaches and, especially, the cheerleaders."

It's football season, and this is a football column, so I think we can reasonably assume that the players and coaches we are to make jokes about are male.

It sounds as if it is critically important that we make up dirty jokes about the KU cheerleaders.

Why, do you suppose, were only the women in this whole equation specifically targeted?

What's even more disturbing is that this statement probably raised few eyebrows on campus.

Dirty jokes about cheerleaders, and about women in general, are quite readily accepted by most in our society.

Perpetuating myths and negative stereotypes is not part of the job I signed up for.

As journalists, I feel we should go out of our way to look for these things and prevent them from happening.

The fact that this immediately followed our informative seminars simply underscores the need for greater scrutiny of the Collegian, both from within and from without.

I doubt many of us would be involved in this venture if we didn't believe that the media can profoundly affect the direction of our society.

▶ RESPONSE

Hatred for KU athletics didn't get the Cats to Tucson

Dear Editor,

I would like to write in response to Wess Hudelson's Aug. 22 article "Fans need to hate Jayhawks."

Where have you been, and who the hell do you think you are?

The rivalry between K-State and KU is much bigger than you or I.

It has been going on for many years and will be going strong long after your column is dead. (It doesn't need a "new spark.") Webster says hate is "to dislike violently."

So tell me Wess, were you the jerk who threw the pennies?

The K-State/KU rivalry is the backbone of Purple Pride.

However, if we lose every game but the KU game, we still end up in last place.

School spirit is about unconditional love and support for your school, not hatred for another school.

Summer play held over

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

KSU Theatre has decided to carry over the one-act plays "Laundry and Bourbon" and "Lone Star" to the fall semester after the production experienced a summer of success.

The plays were first presented during the end of June and will be returning to the stage at Nichols Theatre at 8 p.m. Aug. 25-27 and Aug. 31-Sept. 3.

"We decided to hold it over so students could come back and see it. The plays are a lot of fun and have funny characters with funny stories to tell," Marci Maullar, KSU Theatre managing director, said.

Karen Doerr, junior in music and theater, said she is thrilled that the theater department decided to carry it over.

"It's one of the most fun shows I've ever done at K-State because there are fun people to work with and we all have a fun time on stage," Doerr said.

"Laundry and Bourbon" and "Lone Star" center around the lives of three men and three women in a small Texas town.

In the first one-act play, the women talk about their husbands and children, gossip and drink bourbon while they are doing laundry in the backyard.

The second play, titled "Lone Star," involves three men, Roy, Ray and Cletis, who talk about everything from cars to Vietnam in the back of a saloon at 1 a.m.

"They are raucous and funny down-home Texas guys who mince no words. It's wild and funny but underneath the humor is a kind of wistfulness and sadness because Roy's life has fallen apart," Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of theater, said.

"Lone Star" is a slice-of-life portrait of the husbands and brothers of the women who performed in the preceding production, "Laundry and Bourbon."

"They are called companion plays, because they are two one acts which are meant to go together," MacFarland said.

Laura Camien, graduate student in theater, said the companion plays add to the suspense of the whole show.

"It's a cool idea. It really stirs a lot of curiosity about the male characters before they even get on stage," Camien said.

MacFarland said the actors and actresses are K-State students who have performed in many of the K-State productions over the years.

"It was wonderful to work with them because they were really experienced and mature and fun. They were all playing different roles than they had ever played before, so it was also an interesting experience for them," MacFarland said.

Camien said the production is much different than the other shows she has performed in at K-State.

"It's fluffier because there's so much more comedy compared to what we normally do. It's one of the funniest shows I've ever done, because it has enjoyable characters for us to play and at the same time is a lot of fun for the audience to watch," Camien said.

Camien said the show has humorous characters, but has a deep message under all the comedy.

"It's hysterical on the basic level, but there's a lot of emotions under the surface and the pain is covered up by the humor," Camien said.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — The interim head of the NAACP moved Monday to put an optimistic spin on turmoil in the nation's oldest civil rights group following the ouster of executive director Benjamin Chavis.

"Those who believe in the cause of the NAACP will stick with the NAACP," Earl Shinhoster, the new interim senior administrator, said.

Shinhoster, appearing confident at a news conference, announced a 30-day membership and fund-raising drive to help erase a $2.7 million deficit left by Chavis.

Chavis was fired Saturday by the group's board of directors, who objected to the deficit, his use of NAACP funds to settle a sexual discrimination claim and his overtures to black nationalists, Pan-Africanists and more radical groups.

Chavis criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at a rally Sunday that included Farrakhan and hinted at future division. "Between now and the end of this year, blacks will have to decide which direction the struggle should take," Chavis said at the rally, part of a black leadership summit from which the NAACP has distanced itself.

After 16 months of being stretched into new directions, the NAACP tried Monday to snap back into the moderate shape it has held for much of its 85-year history.

Shinhoster stuck to traditional themes of membership, fund raising, economic development and voter participation in outlining the focus of his interim administration. He spent 17 years as the NAACP's Southeast regional director and had competed with Chavis for the executive director's post.

Ben Andrews Jr., board vice chairman, said that while he supported much of what Chavis did, his leadership drew fire and "being able to withstand that fire became an issue that affected his management. I don't think he gave enough attention to the dynamics of the politics of the association."

Chavis and Farrakhan criticized the NAACP on Sunday for giving in to corporate sponsors, a reference to the Ford Foundation decision last week to delay awarding a $250,000 grant to the NAACP.

"How can you have a freedom movement if somebody else is paying for your freedom?" Chavis said Sunday.

Andrews rejected the allegations of corporate influence, and said he suspected Chavis spoke out of turn, or was emotional at the time.

Andrews also said he did not believe Chavis' firing would split the black community, but said time is needed to heal wounds.

"It's like after you have a presidential campaign, there's a healing process you must go through," he said.

Board Chairman William Gibson said no timetable had been set for selecting a new head for the group, but noted that it took the board a year to pick Chavis.

"We should be just as deliberate this time as we were before," Gibson said.

Schiller returns from knee injury

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State running back Rod Schiller said he remembers his knee injury like it was yesterday.

But the vision is not constituted primarily on physical pain. The knee injury Schiller sustained in the last game of the regular season was one that could have ended his career.

Coach Bill Snyder said last spring he was not optimistic about Schiller's return to the Wildcats. There was a point when Schiller himself doubted a recovery.

Schiller, who gained 505 yards on 124 carries and had seven starts last year, missed the Weiser Lock Copper Bowl and spring drills.

"I saw my knee all cut and sewed up. I thought there was no way I could come back and compete at this level."

ROD SCHILLER
Senior fullback

"I sat in my hospital room after my surgery and the doctor took off the bandages," Schiller said. "I saw my knee all cut and sewed up. I thought there was no way I could come back and compete at this level."

Snyder said he wasn't certain Schiller would begin the process of making a return to the team until early in the summer months.

"Rod is an immensely competitive young man," Snyder said. "Rod is one of those guys who wants to do it full speed ahead. There was question in his mind whether or not he would be able to do that.

"At no time did I ever bring him into my office and say we had to have him back.

"I wanted him to make the decision based on how comfortable he was with the rehabilitation. I was relieved when he came in and told me he wanted to play."

Having Schiller back adds to the depth of the Wildcats' backfield. J.J. Smith and Schiller split time at running back last year, combining for almost 1,300 yards.

"Rod is a very good player, but he is also a motivational force," Snyder said. "I think people enjoy seeing him. He is a very spirited young fellow."

Schiller led K-State with an average of 4.1 yards per carry last season. He had 28 yards on nine carries before he was sidelined in the first quarter of the game with the Cowboys.

"Very, very, very painful," is the way Schiller describes the knee injury.

"I was running the ball, and one guy jumped on my back, and another hit me square on my knee, and my foot was planted," he said. "It buckled my knee. It's a feeling I'll never forget.

"I had never felt pain like that before. I had never been hurt like that before. Honestly, I never thought I would lie on the football field hurt. I couldn't get up.

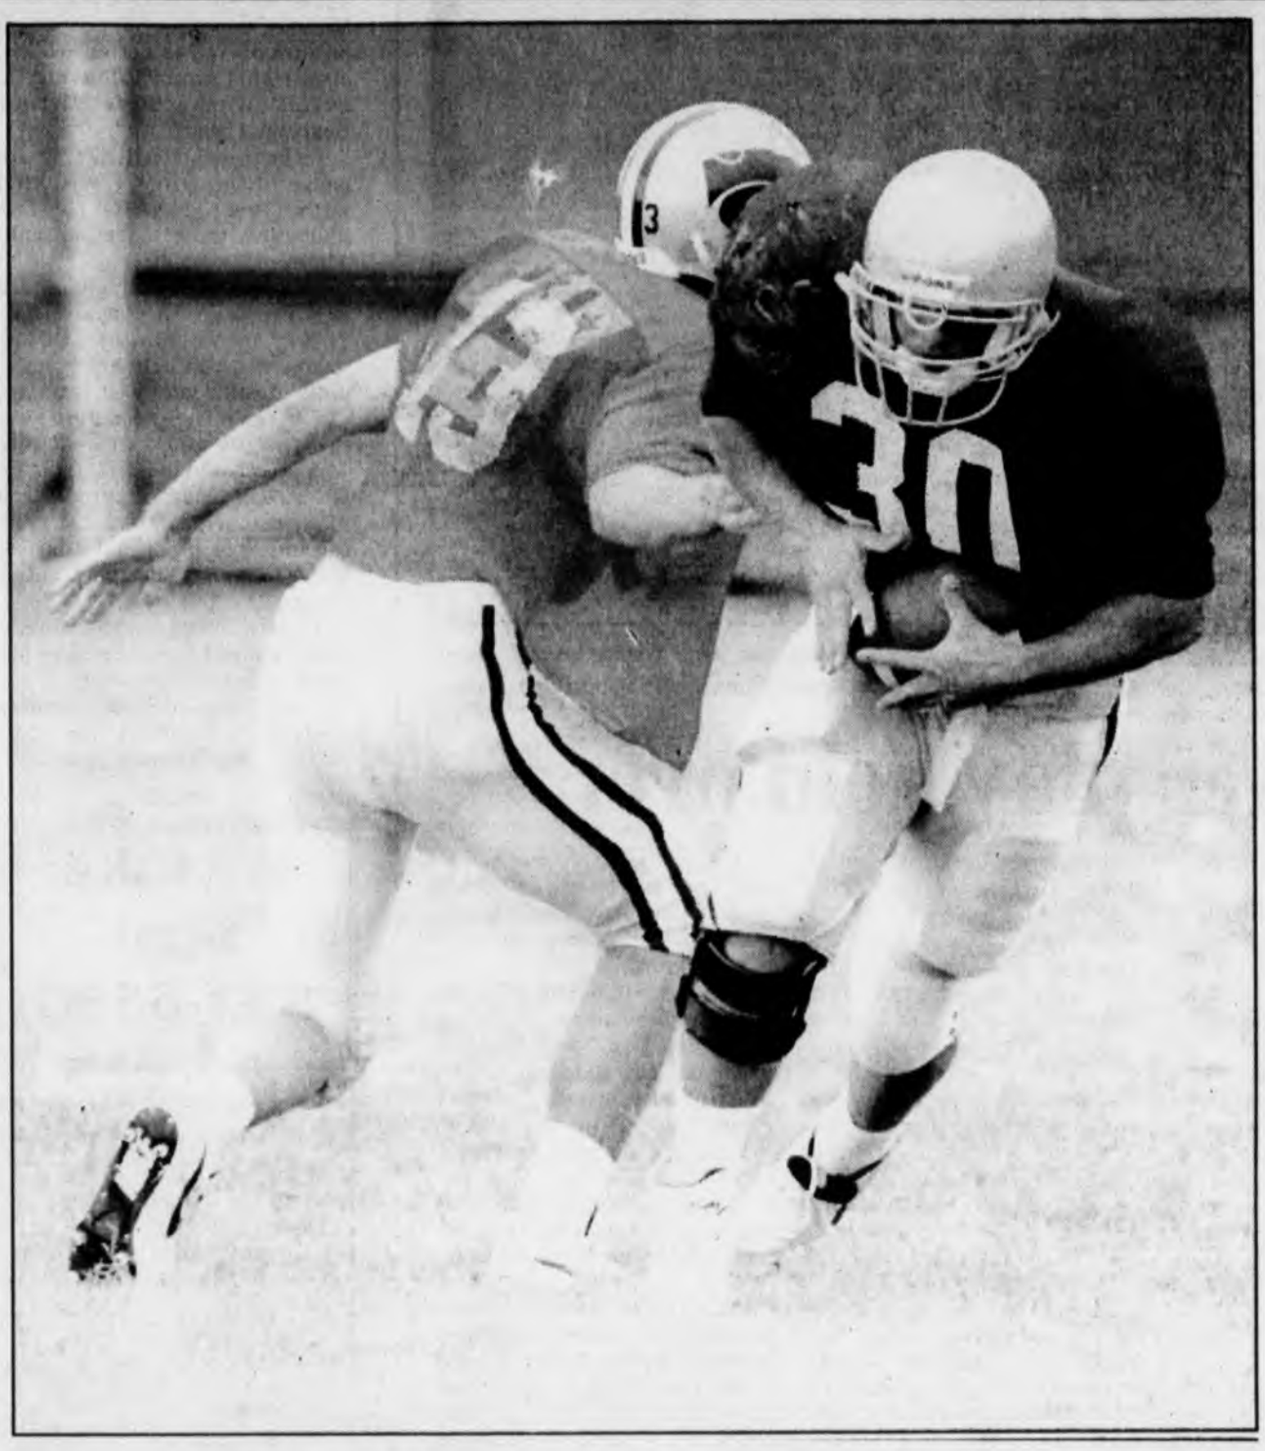
"It's one of those things where you think it's never going to happen to you. But it did," Schiller said.

He said missing the Copper Bowl was a severe letdown.

"I didn't want to go to the game," he said. "When you are that involved and you get out here and play with these guys and then that gets cut off, it's a tremendous disappointment. It was very hard to sit on the sidelines and watch."

Schiller was K-State's first 100-yard rusher last season.

In the Wildcats' dramatic 21-7 victory against Oklahoma, he ran for 111 yards, 81 of those yards coming in the fourth quarter.



Schiller has been a fixture in the backfield since his freshman season.

But he is uncertain just how much he will be able to do.

"I don't know how much running back I'm going to play and that's really not my concern," Schiller said. "I just want to do whatever it takes to contribute to the team."

"I want to be on the field somehow."

The running backs want the ball and some of them will play anywhere to get it.

J.J. Smith and Rod Schiller once again look to share time at the position in Bill Snyder's offense, but Leon Edwards and Dederick Kelly are also looking for some carries.

The duo combined for 1,253 yards last season.

"I would like to rush for 1,000 yards," Smith said. "But mostly I just want the ball so I can contribute to the team."

Smith hauled in 20 passes for 247 yards last season and made himself the only back in the Big Eight Conference with at least 700 yards rushing and 200 yards receiving.

"My biggest goal for the season is the Orange Bowl, period," Smith said.

It looked as if Smith might have had the ball most of the season last year after Schiller suffered a knee injury.

During spring drills, Schiller said he was doubting whether or not he could return to form after the injury.

"I wasn't certain he was coming back until he came into my office and said something to me," Coach Bill Snyder said. "He is extremely competitive and wants to play hard.

"I was relieved when he decided to come back."

"To tell the truth, I'm not there yet," Schiller said. "Rehab is not totally done for me. I'm not just going to be able to go out there and throw myself into drills."

Against Oklahoma last season, Schiller had his best effort with 111 yards on 19 carries.

Schiller led K-State with 4.1 yards per carry last season.

However, if all of the running backs want to avoid injuries this season, the offensive will have to play well.

Despite the loss of four-year starter Quentin Neujahr at center and guards Eric Wolford and Brian Campbell, Smith said he feels secure.

"I feel as confident if not more confident than last year behind those guys. They're a good bunch," Smith said.

Schiller's return not only lessens the load on J.J. Smith, but the chance of playing time for the reserve running backs.

As a result, K-State's stable of running backs are looking to other spots on the field.

This season, Smith's backup, Leon Edwards, has played wide receiver during practice drills this fall as have redshirt freshmen Andre Anderson and Eric Hickson.

"I'm just looking to do whatever it takes to get on the field and show people what I can do," Edwards said.

Smith, Hickson, Anderson and Edwards could play a role on the Wildcats' special teams.

The graduation of wide receiver Andre Coleman has opened up an opportunity for a new return specialist.

"Returning punts, catching passes, whatever I can do I will do," Edwards said. "I want to get on the field and show my skills."

▶ CROSS COUNTRY

Etzel likes to rock and run

JAMIE BUSH
Collegian

Seasons of change.

Talk to John Etzel, and he will tell you that statement sums up his life for the past few years to a tee.

Not only is he a student at K-State, he is also a member of the cross country and track and field program, and he is a very talented musician.

The 20-year-old with the curly brown hair, long limbs and quirky smile is the first to admit though that his life has indeed changed in many ways since he was a child growing up in the suburbs of St. Louis, Mo.

After attending three years of high school at DeSmet High School, an all-boys Catholic school in St. Louis, his family moved to Topeka, where Etzel attended Hayden High School for a little more than a year.

Finding himself in new territory, and with nothing to lose, he began running hard and made a goal to win a state championship.

"I told myself that it was my senior year, and I'm going to go for it and win state," he said.

Although he didn't win state, he did make a life-long friend.

"I lost the championship by five seconds," Etzel said. "I was trying to sprint for the end, and this guy named Ryan Johnson just came out of nowhere."

After the race, the two rivals grew to be close friends, went to different colleges and now are teammates.

Johnson, after attending Johnson County Community College for two years, transferred to K-State and is also a member of the Wildcats' cross country team this season.

Running was always a fun way to spend time for Etzel, but one thing that has always intrigued him was the sound of music.

With no prior knowledge of the piano, he began playing with a few bands in St. Louis, where he picked up pointers on Rythmn and Blues and Reggae from a drummer named Blue Massa.

After playing a few times with Massa, the word spread of Massa's talents. A Jamaican band named Al Jones and Innerforce signed Massa as its head drummer. Then after Etzel finished the spring semester of his freshman year, he began playing with Al Jones and Innerforce, which brought another season of change.

"In May when I got out of school, I found out that Innerforce was looking for a new keyboard player," Etzel said. "So I kind of auditioned and got the spot."

Etzel then decided to take off a semester at K-State in the fall of 1993 to prepare for an upcoming European tour.

"After playing with the band for a while, they asked me to stay on and go with them to Europe," Etzel said. "We were going to play 36 shows in 11 countries, including stops in England, France, Germany, Sweden, the Netherlands, Italy and Scotland."

Although as luck would have it, two weeks before the tour was to begin, it was canceled.

"The tour was called the Reggae Extravaganza, and we were going to play with other Jamaican bands like Andrew Tosh, Ross Michael and Half-Pint," Etzel said.

The four-band tour was to be sponsored by a few record labels, and when the European tour fell through, Innerforce was scheduled a tour around the U.S. comprised of Innerforce and Ross Michael. The tour which took Etzel from coast to coast.

John Etzel performs for the crowd at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon alongside Jeff Barret. Etzel runs on the K-State cross country team.

DARREN WHITLEY
Collegian

"We played at festivals and outdoor shows from Miami to Las Vegas to Chicago to Washington, D.C., and everywhere in between," Etzel said.

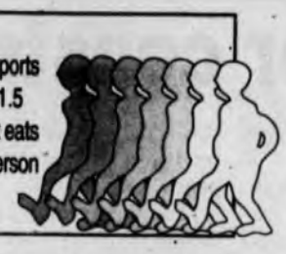
After a short tour, Etzel came back to school, but still didn't lose his love of performing music in front of a crowd.

"One night I saw a sign outside of Rusty's Last Chance for an open mike, so I went in and started jamming," he said.

Etzel found himself in a permanant gig when the owner asked him to come by weekly and play a small show with another guitar player.

The support Etzel has received from his teammates is something that he really appreciates.

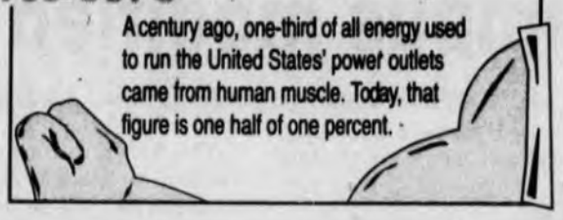
"When I told Ryan and Billy, the other guys on my team, that I was going to take off a semester from the team to go to prepare for the tour, they were really supportive," he said.



For the time being, Etzel seems to have his plans in order and is content with running and making music.

"This year I am focusing a lot on my running, because I don't think I have ever given it a real shot," Etzel said. "The shows I do play will be scheduled so they don't interfere with my training."

Life



Tidbits

The American Heart Association reports that if a 200-pound person walks 1.5 miles a day briskly for one year, but eats the same number of calories, the person would lose 14 pounds.

Tidbits

A century ago, one-third of all energy used to run the United States' power outlets came from human muscle. Today, that figure is one half of one percent.

THE BENEFITS OF EXERCISE

Exercise can:

1. Help control weight, when used in accordance with the proper diet.
2. Give you more energy and increase resistance to fatigue.
3. Improve your self-image.
4. Relieve tension and help you relax and go to sleep.
5. Increase your stamina.

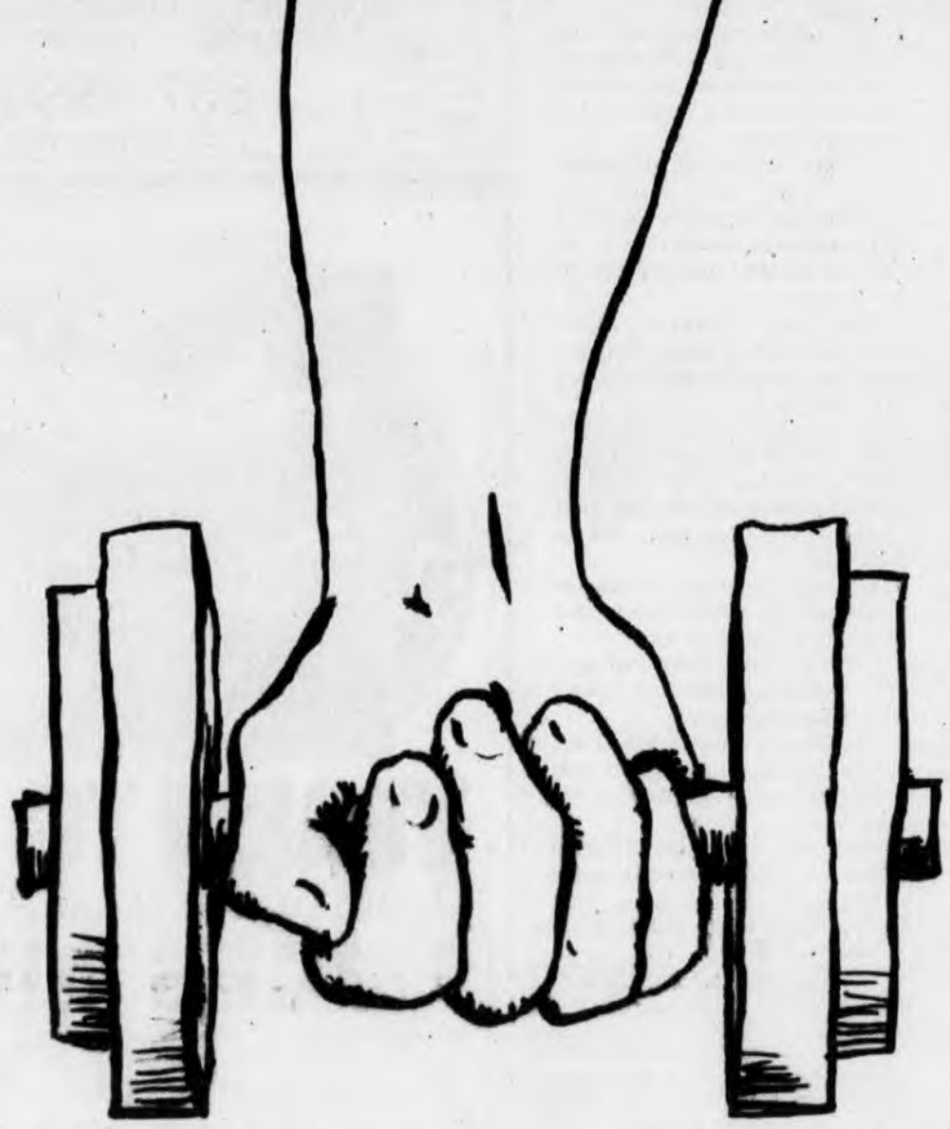
Sweat

Beyond getting in shape

WARMING UP

Warm ups should limber up your body and prepare it for more strenuous exercise. Suggested stretching techniques include:

Wall Push



Stand one and a half feet away from a wall and lean forward, pushing away with your hands. Keep your heels flat on the ground and hold for 10 seconds. Repeat.

Palm Touch

Bend your knees slightly. Try to touch the floor by bending from the waist. Hold for 10 seconds, then repeat two times.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

Through sweat and self-discipline, many K-State students have discovered that the benefits of exercise go beyond getting in shape.

Ashley Souther, sophomore in political science and international studies, said he exercises everyday.

"Exercising helps you think, regulate energy and sleep better," he said. "Your body is like a machine, but if you don't use it and maintain it, it will just go downhill."

To keep in shape, Souther swims, jogs and lifts weights. For an extra cardiovascular work-out, Souther said he sometimes uses the heavy punching bag at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Karla Johnson, junior in biology and pre-veterinary medicine, teaches water aerobics five times a week in the Natatorium, but said she also tries to vary her work-outs by bicycling and walking.

"It keeps you from getting bored," she said. "Besides, you have to vary activities when the weather changes."

Johnson said she admits that her exercise routine goes through spurts, and sometimes she is not as motivated to exercise as other times.

"I just look at those calendars with those girls wearing bikinis and I say to myself, 'I want to be like that,'" she said.

Johnson said she enjoys leading a water aerobics class and helping other people get in shape.

"My advice to others considering an exercise program is to start gradual and not expect results overnight," she said. "It's important to try a lot of activities and find a few you like."

For many K-State students, being active in various organizations on campus not only helps them to stay fit, but also provides a social outlet as well.

Andy Carson, junior in business management, became involved with the rowing crew through a friend. To stay in shape during the summer, he ran six miles three times a week. During the school year, he will be practicing every weekday and traveling to regattas on the weekends.

Carson said he believes exercising helps him to have more efficient study time by lowering his stress level.

"People say they don't have enough time to join (the rowing crew), but it's just like going out on your own and exercising," he said.

Dave Lewis, senior in nutritional science, also is a member of the rowing crew. To stay in shape during the summer, he biked 13 to 15 miles a day.

"Rowing is a sport you can take as serious as you want," he said. "You can have fun with it, or you can become serious and learn to compete against other schools."

Lewis said an added advantage to being on the team was having the opportunity to play and beat the University of Kansas last year each time the team competed against KU.

Marj Barngrover, junior in animal science, is an active member of the Rodeo Cclub. She said time management is essential for balancing studying and outside activities.

"You have to organize your time well," she said. "You don't have time to screw off; you have to balance your time for studying and practice."

WAYS YOU CAN AVOID INJURY

1. Consult your physician before starting an exercise program.
2. Wait for two hours after eating before you exercise.
3. Improve your self-image.
4. Warm up for five minutes before you exercise. Stretch fully and start slowly. Cool down the same way.
5. Don't overdo it — increase amount of exercise gradually.

YOUR TARGET HEART RATE

Your target zone depends on your age and your maximum heart rate. Usually your maximum heart rate is determined by subtracting your age from 220. Your target zone, which is the rate you want to exercise at, is at 50-75 percent of your maximum heart rate.

20	100-150
25	98-146
30	95-142
35	92-138
40	90-135
45	88-131
50	85-127
55	82-123
60	80-120

Beyond the physical benefits of exercise

KIMBERLY HEFLING

For LaDonna Grenz, coach of the K-State women's rugby team, staying fit and playing rugby are a way of life.

"For me, rugby is a social outlet, a physical outlet and an emotional outlet," Grenz, graduate student in laboratory medicine, said.

Grenz said if she was not physically active her life would be much different.

"I think I would be very stressed out and high strung," she said. "I wouldn't look as good as I do, and I would probably be sick more often."

Besides being physically beneficial, Grenz said playing rugby has helped her socially.

"If I didn't play rugby, I wouldn't have half the friends I have now," Grenz said. "I work in a biology lab, and there just aren't very many people that walk through there."

Similiar to a fraternity or sorority, Grenz said playing rugby serves as a network. If she decides to move to another city, Grenz said she has friends she met through rugby who could help her find a job or place to live.

"It's almost like we're bound together by playing a minority sport," she said.

Unlike men, Grenz said most women don't grow up with the opportunity to gain a background in sports such as football, which drives men to their maximum potential.

"Most women don't even know what their limits are," she said.

"I don't think most women play sports that drive them to their max," she said.

"They don't realize how strong and coordinated they really are."

Grenz said some players are surprised at the feeling they have after making a tackle.

"Women just don't know they have it in them," she said. "Playing rugby gives you a feeling that most women never experience."

Grenz began playing rugby seven years ago and has coached for about five years.

Grenz is a member of the 1993 and 1994 Eagles team, a select group of the top 40 women rugby players in the nation.

During the rugby season, Grenz practices with the team three times a week and cross trains one or two days a week at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

In the off-season, Grenz cross-trains for about two hours several times a week at the Rec Complex.

A chain-link fence was erected around the site, which cut off Mid Campus Drive and closed two parking lots.

Only a narrow space for a sidewalk was left between Lafene Health Center and a plywood wall protecting pedestrians from an 18-feet deep hole on the other side, Carter said.

The fence was erected for safety and not to inconvenience anyone, Carter said.

Construction on the Farrell began with the demolition of the Art Building this summer and is expected to last 2-1/2 years, Carter said.

The $28-million project was financed by student fees, private donations and $18 million in funds appropriated by Gov. Joan Finney, Rawson said.

■ Calvin Hall

Calvin Hall is in the second phase of a multi-year renovation project, Carter said.

Restroom facilities have already been upgraded as part of the first phase of the construction, and work has begun constructing fire stairs on the north and south ends of the building as part of the second phase.

The third phase will call for the demolition of the main center staircase, Carter said.

The renovations are expected to last through this semester and the next and cost $520,000 of the repair and rehabilitation fund, Rawson said.

The third phase of the construction may affect traffic on Mid Campus Drive in front of the hall if the street is temporarily blocked by construction vehicles, Carter said.

■ Chester E. Peters Rec-reation Complex

Access to the playing field is restricted by light poles waiting to be sunk in the ground, he said.

All facilities inside the complex are open to students, faculty and staff, he said.

In 1991, students approved a referendum to use student fees to add to the complex, which is estimated to cost $7.9 million.

▶ CITY COMMISSION

Youth organizations to help plan center

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission took the first step Tuesday afternoon in the eventual forming of a community youth council to serve Manhattan and Riley County.

While discussing the mayor's Youth Task Force Report during the weekly work session, it was suggested that several organizations and agencies meet by at least mid-September.

Commissioner Edith Stunkel said groups that are familiar with the needs of area youth will be invited to attend. They include the Manhattan Youth Task Force, County Juvenile Task Force, City and County Commissions, Board of Education, the YES group and the Community Needs Assessment group.

What happens after the meeting is up to the entire group.

"I don't know what the next step will be," Stunkel said. "I suspect it would be a community youth council."

On hand at the meeting will be a representative from the Topeka-based Cooperation For Change, who will talk about ways to set up a youth council. Stunkel said Cooperation For Change has helped communities around Kansas set up similar programs.

The report that led to was the Youth Task Force report. Terry DeWeese, director of Manhattan's parks and recreation department, was there to discuss the report with the commission.

He said the report contained impressions from interviews conducted by the task force, which challenges the youth face in the community and suggestions on how to help.

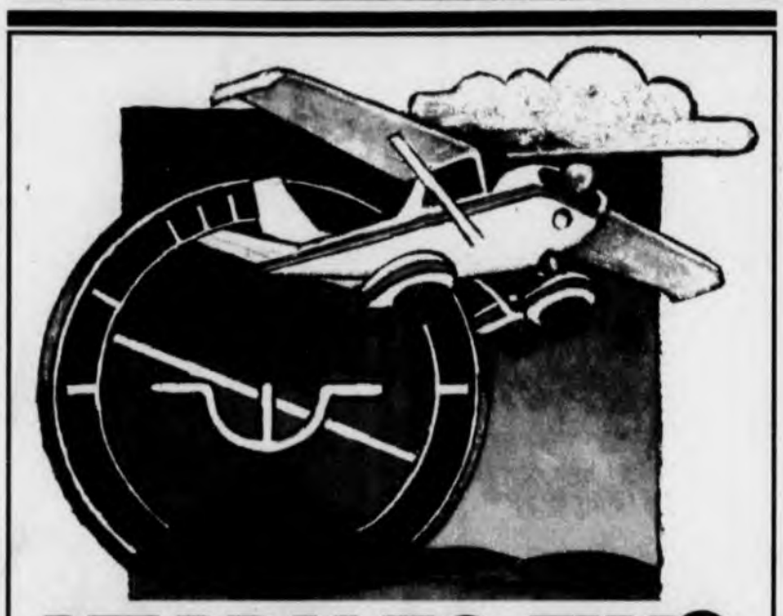
The 12-member task force was made up of representatives from a wide variety of organizations, DeWeese said, such as the Riley County Police Department and the Job Corps.

Riley County is also working on a similar task force report. That report should be ready soon.

"They have the individual parts of it," he said. "They just haven't put it into a package yet."

From here, DeWeese would like to see things get done that will eventually help the youth in the community.



"We don't have major problems right now. We do have some youth problems. We do have some youth that need some help," he said.

"We want to do some preventative-type things that will help us do the right thing here in Manhattan," he said.

Council plans activities

CHRIS STEIN
Collegian

The Education Student Council launched its semester with its first meeting on Tuesday night.

All the council officers and student representatives from Pi Omega Pi, Music Education, Teachers of Tomorrow, Kansas State National Educator's Association and several student senators from the College of Education were present.

The meeting was led by Council President Nina Moore, and Faculty Adviser Willard Nelson, who is the associate director of the Center for Student and Professional Services.

The meeting began with brief introductions and then continued with reports from each representative on their group's activities, such as the "Chalkboard," which is the College of Education's newspaper.

The council's purpose is to foster all types of activities in the College of Education for the students in the college, Nelson said.

The council is co-sponsoring the Education Symposium Sept. 16 with the Student Senate Student Affairs Committee.

This year, they are looking for a little more diversity and multi-culturalism in the symposium, Nelson said.

A career fair, an open house in April and a series of mock interviews are also in the works for the Council.

They also run simulated interviews so the students have a chance to practice before the real thing.

The next meeting for the council will be a retreat which is scheduled for tis weekend. The group will be organizing and planning.

BSU working to be stronger voice on campus

MIKE MARLETT
Collegian

The Black Student Union wants to be a stronger force on the K-State campus.

Jawwad Abdulhaqq, president of BSU, said he hopes students will be more aware of the organization this year.

BSU, he said, is the largest group on campus with more than 500 members. It is open to all races.

"There are a lot of stereotypes," Abdulhaqq said, "and we keep it open to kill the ignorance between races.

"It's an avenue for us to educate others about our culture," he said. "Unity doesn't have a color."

More than 60 students attended BSU's first meeting Tuesday in the K-State Union.

Meetings will continue at 7:00 p.m. every Tuesday in Union 207, Abdulhaqq said. Annual dues are $1.

BSU is sponsoring a welcome back picnic from 3 to 8 p.m., Saturday in the Quinlan Natural Area. The picnic is free for the whole campus and will have an African drummer, a storyteller and music by KSDB-FM 91.9.

According to Melin, Willits suggested besides the money, UPC could provide people to organize, construct and run the event.

"They offered everything but the money," Melin said.

With a seemingly positive go ahead from UPC, Melin and the DB92 staff proceeded with the organization of the concert.

A second meeting on July 29 was scheduled with UPC. Attending that meeting was Ann Claussen, assistant director and program director of the K-State Union, and Willits.

"The only service we saw at that point that they were particularly interested in was the money," Claussen said.

Claussen said UPC usually does not get involved financially with a program it did not have some part in organizing.

"They had already made the decision that they weren't going to give us the money," Melin said about the meeting. Besides not offering money, UPC refuted to offer help and services for the concert.

"They had all sorts of excuses," he said.

Melin said a reason UPC wasn't interested was because of the non-multicultural aspect of the concert. UPC felt that the band line-up was not diverse.

The location of the DB92 concert, Manhattan City Park, did not agree with UPC, either. Claussen said the event should take place on campus in order to include more residence hall members.

"I know they were disappointed, but sometimes you make a decision that is in the best interest of the student body," Claussen said.

UPC's budget for 1994-95 is around $100,000 to $130,000. Seventy thousand dollars of that money comes directly from the newly levied $2 student fee.

"Nowhere in our mission statement or our understanding of having received the student fee are we being asked to fund other organizations," Claussen said.

UPC thought FallFest's new premise would revive the welcome back concert's tradition. UPC approached the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls for insight on how to improve the concert.

UPC said they felt by getting some campus organizations in on the planning and organizing, a food/entertainment festival would go over well.

Claussen said FallFest was not successful.

Claussen said UPC has never, in the past three years, organized a poll of the general student body for trends, likes, dislikes or general information regarding entertainment on campus.

This year, UPC plans to change by implementing extensive surveys and general polling of the student body to increase UPC's understanding of what the campus wishes to see and hear.

After the demise of FallFest, UPC decided to abandon the idea of a welcome back concert.

"That whole concept was dead," Claussen said.

"We needed, as a programming organization, to move on," she said.

On Friday, UPC announced a new partnership with DB92.

This happened two days after the Collegian began interviewing UPC.

Claussen said that UPC and DB92 have always had a relationship, just not an aggressive one.

Claussen said DB92 is considered a key player in the planning and organizing of all musical events from now on.

The new sponsorship has been very positive for DB92.

"I never thought this would happen," Melin said.

"I'm looking forward to this year," he said.

DB92 has gone ahead with the concert, getting sponsorships from local businesses for the event.

WILDCAT WATCH

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN WEEKLY SPORTS SECTION

AUGUST 24, 1994

Fall Sports PREVIEW

Next week, look for the Big 8 football preview

▶ COLUMN

Welcome back to our second year

Welcome back to K-State, and thanks for joining us for our second year with the Wildcat Watch.

Last year, we started the Watch with high hopes and lofty goals for the future. Things were tough, but after several late nights things started to run smoother.

Even with the improvement, I feel that the Watch still hasn't reached its potential. However, that's our top priority coming into this school year — to reach our goal of bringing you the best coverage of K-State athletics.

I also have spent some time looking at what the readers said we need to improve on. Reactions were mixed, but most suggestions were positive and helpful.

From what we received at the Collegian, our biggest problem seemed to be that the Watch was always received at your homes almost a week late.

Well, to be honest, that isn't our fault, but we have a suggestion that might help.

Readers can alleviate that situation by having a talk with the local post office, and ask them why it takes so long for the Watch to get there.

My parents in Kansas City had the same problem, but they visited the post office and the deliveries have seemed to be more efficient.

To give subscribers some insight of some things to look for this semester, I'm going to give a preview of some of the things that we have planned.

The first thing that we have done is installed a weekly segment called "One on One." This section will be a weekly feature about players, coaches, administrators, and other notables that are important to K-State athletics.

Each week, we will sit down with this person and interview them, one on one, about some of the important topics surrounding them or their team.

The next big thing that we have scheduled will run next week. That will be when we devote an entire issue to previewing the Big Eight Conference football race.

It will be loaded with predictions, previews and features from every team in the Big Eight. The Watch staff will also make predictions for the upcoming season.

This issue of the Watch is dedicated to fall sports. Even though these sports aren't big revenue, they deserve the same coverage, and that's why we dedicated this issue to them.

Later, we will look into how the addition of the four Southwest Conference universities will affect the Big Eight or the Big Twelve. And that's just the beginning.

I'm ready, and I know that the rest of the staff is ready to entertain and inform Watch readers every Wednesday in the weeks to come.

If you ever have any questions or helpful advice, feel free to call me at the Collegian office. I'm always open for suggestions and constructive criticism.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Jim Moore, K-State's new volleyball coach, came to Manhattan after coaching a Division II national championship team at Northern Michigan. Moore has also coached teams that finished second in the nation, but he inherits a team that hasn't won in the Big Eight since 1991.

Moore almost chose different career

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Jim Moore, the new women's volleyball coach, could be coaching golf right now if it weren't for one fateful day at a Los Angeles Dodgers game.

"After I had graduated high school, I had never played volleyball," Moore said. "I played basketball and golf. I had a golf scholarship covering part of the expenses going to Northern Arizona University."

Moore subsequently decided not to take the scholarship after a friend talked him out of it.

"This person had more or less told me that this (Northern Arizona) was not a very good school," he said, "which I then found out that it is a great school. Like an idiot, I decided not to take this scholarship.

"So I decided to play golf at a junior college I was going to. I was playing a lot, and I was playing pretty good then."

Moore's plans were altered when he injured his knee in a freak accident.

"I was working in a grocery store, and we had to stomp down all of the cardboard boxes," Moore said. "I jumped for this trash can and didn't make it."

"I leaned back and straddled across to the wall and I was spread eagle, basically. I looked at my knee and it just popped out."

That summer, Moore attended a Dodgers game with some of his friends, one of his teachers and his teacher's wife. The teacher's wife was a volleyball coach.

"We're sitting at a Dodgers game, my knee's in a cast and she said to me, 'You can jump really high. Why don't you try and play volleyball when you're not playing golf?

"So I started playing volleyball. I played four years of college volleyball and none of golf."

ONE on ONE

Moore finished his degree in health science and had inspirations of becoming a teacher.

"I went to my old high school to do my student teaching," Moore said. "I asked them if they wanted me to help with the volleyball program."

The school gave Moore the job and an opportunity to coach one of the best high school teams ever assembled.

"There were four Division I all-Americans," Moore said. "Three of them were sophomores, and one was a junior. Three of the four were also national team players."

"Those kids as sophomores never lost a match, but I wasn't really happy with them," he said. "They were all pretty much stuck on themselves, and it wasn't a lot of fun."

Moore finished his master's degree after that, and he was planning on teaching at the university level.

However, he gave volleyball one more shot after a local high school offered him a job.

"The first year I was there we struggled a lot. Then we started to build and we got much better," Moore said. "We came close to winning a couple of state championships."

They lost twice in the quarterfinals—both losses were to the eventual state champs.

Wildcats confident under new guidance and offensive system

CRESTON KUENZI

It's true that the K-State women's volleyball team hasn't won a match in the Big Eight Conference since 1991, and it's also true that it ended the 1993 campaign with a 16-match losing streak.

However, with the hiring of coach Jim Moore, attitudes seem to be changing.

"I can honestly say that I'm having a lot of fun," Jill Dugan, middle blocker, said. "We're at practice between seven and eight hours a day, but it doesn't seem like it because we're getting things done and we're having fun while we're doing it."

Moore was hired to replace Patti Hagemeyer, who resigned in January, after her third season.

The Wildcats started last season off with a 2-2 record in the K-State Invitational.

"It was very hard for me," Young said. "There were a lot of times I thought about leaving.

"It made me think about whether this is what I really wanted to do."

After the coaching change, the rejuvenated Cats are setting their sights higher than just breaking their Big Eight losing streak.

> The Cats are looking to break a 24-match Big Eight losing streak.

"The bottom line is that we want to go to the Big Eight Tournament," Dugan said. "We want to finish in the top four in the league."

The new leader of the Cats said if they are to turn things around, it will take longer than overnight.

"It takes time to learn the system," Moore said. "It takes time to get people to believe what you're saying is true.

"We know we can do it," Dugan said.

Cats tee off with freshman talent

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Youth and tough opponents are headaches that will make a strong finish in the Big Eight Conference an uphill battle for the K-State men's golf team.

Facing the powerhouses of Oklahoma and Oklahoma State will be a challenge for K-State to produce some consistent scores, Mark Elliott, K-State's golf coach, said.

"Finishing in the top half of the Big Eight will be like winning it for us," Elliott said. "This conference is very tough."

The Wildcats have no returning seniors and will have a roster sporting six freshmen.

"We will have to rely on our five juniors this season to step up and take a leadership role," Elliott said.

One individual who Elliott said could fill that role is junior Brett Waldman, who sat out last season for medical reasons.

"He is expected to be our No. 1 player," Elliott said. "He has the ability to play with anyone in the country."

Also looking to make a significant contribution is junior Troy Halterman.

"Halterman is someone who should be right up there with the top of the team," Elliott said. "He is a possible leader for the team as well."

Halterman said consistency is the cause for the Cats' sixth-place Big Eight finish.

"Last year, we lacked a consistent No. 1 player," Halterman said. "To finish respectfully, we need that.

"We also need the rest of the team to be consistent with their scores."

A boost for the Cats may be the talent of this year's freshmen, whom Elliott speaks highly of.

"This class has the chance to be the best ever at K-State," Elliott said. "Whether they are remains to be seen, but they definitely have the potential."

He said he expects former Kansas 6A state champ Jeremy Higgins from Dodge City to have an immediate influence on the squad.

Other top freshmen recruits are B.J. Walter and Andy King, who played in the Kansas-Nebraska Cup team this summer.

With the talent and enthusiasm of the squad, Elliott said a young squad won't necessarily rule them out of a trip to the NCAA Tournament.

"We can be competitive," Elliott said. "All it takes is for everyone to play the best golf that they can to get there."

The women's team will also need to make improvements to better last year's seventh-place finish in the league, Elliott said.

"The women's team should be a great deal better," Elliott said. "They have a lot of experience coming back."

Elliott said the new assistant coach, Tim Jennings, will spark more excitement in the squad.

"Jennings has spent a lot of time around K-State," Elliott said. "So he has a lot of enthusiasm."

Jennings played golf at K-State for four years. He played for the Cats from 1986 to 1990.

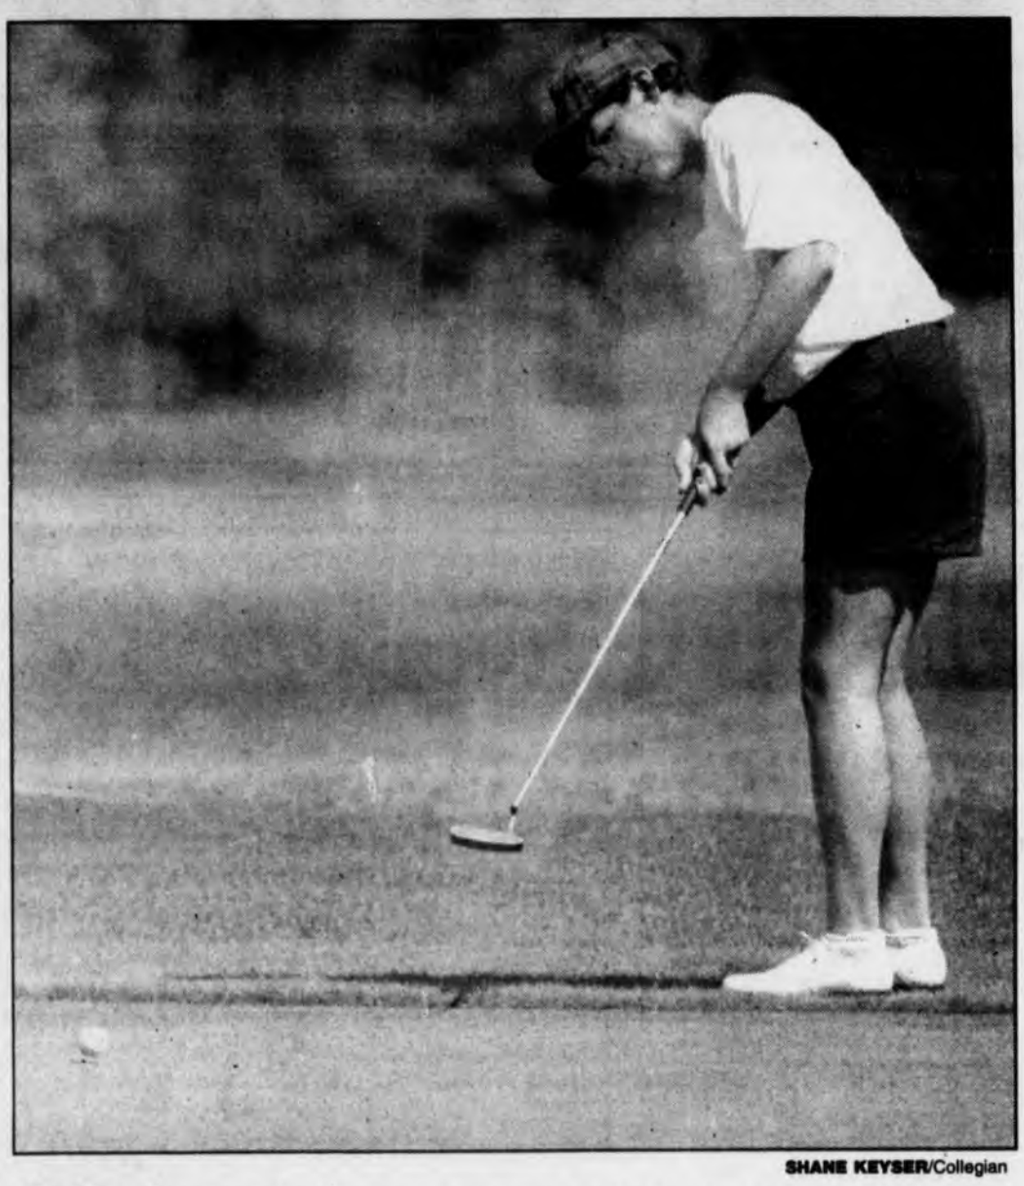
He said his experience with the K-State program will benefit his team.

"Since I played here pretty recently, I can help the girls deal with a lot of the similar type of problems I dealt with," Jennings said.

The Cats have three seniors returning, with Academic all-American Jacque Wright, leading the way.

"Jacque Wright could be the best female golfer K-State has ever had," Elliott said.

Wright will be joined by junior Richelle Bond, a transfer from Arkansas State.



"Richelle will add a lot to the squad," Elliott said. "I expect good things from her."

Rounding off the team are five freshmen, who Elliott said will improve the team.

"This freshmen class is one of the best," Elliott said.

Elliott said the women's program will improve dramatically on last year's seventh-place conference finish.

"We will be better."

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Staci Busch, junior on the women's golf team, practices putting during a recent practice. Busch joins seven juniors and seniors on the women's teams this season. The men's golf team has five juniors and no seniors.

Women looking to run mistake-free Big 8 race

"We've got the talent to win the conference, but we must have everybody perform."

TERRY DRAKE
Cross Country Coach

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Cross country coach Terry Drake said his women's team can capture a Big Eight title, but it can't make mistakes.

"We've got the talent to win the conference, but we must have everybody perform," Drake said.

The team will get its chance to capture the title this year in Manhattan at Warner Park.

"The fact that the meet is at home is definitely in our favor," Drake said.

Three seniors will return from last year's squad, including Jeanene Rugan, who qualified for the NCAA Cross Country Championships last season.

"I think if everybody runs up to their potential, we have a good chance to win it," Rugan said.

Rugan spent most of last season as the team's No. 2 runner, behind Paulette Staats, who graduated.

Drake said Rugan is the team's top runner for this season. Leslie Wells also returns for her senior season.

"Leslie has been training 50-60 miles a week this summer," Drake said. "I'm really looking for her to make a bigger contribution this year."

Wells started to show progress last season when she captured first place in the 1,000 meters at the Big Eight Indoor Track and Field Championships at Oklahoma City.

Irma Betancourt rounds out the senior class for the Wildcats. Betancourt suffered a back injury midway through the season last year and missed the last part of the cross country season and all of the indoor track season.

Compartment Syndrome occurs when the muscle sheath around the calf muscle does not expand, allowing the muscle to grow during training.

"She started running again over the summer and is recovering well," Drake said. "I didn't expect her to return. She could be a blessing in disguise."

Despite the nucleus of returning runners, the team will still have to rely on a part of the six freshmen signed for the upcoming season.

Swartz, a native of Andover, owned the fastest time in the 3,200 meters last spring in Kansas.

"I liken Charity to Jeanene," Drake said. "The longer she runs, the better. She's tough and doesn't give up."

Drake said Warden will not attend K-State this semester due to academic difficulties.

"Losing Cari really hurts us," Drake said. "If we had her, we could've won the conference easily."

Drake taking fall season to rebuild team

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The men's cross country team is going back to the future.

"We are taking a step back to build for the future," Drake said.

O'Neill garnered all-America honors in both track and field and cross country during his career as a Wildcat.

Clive-Smith, a native of South Africa qualified for NCAA Cross Country Championships last season and consistently challenged O'Neill for the top spot on the team.

With the loss of O'Neill and Clive-Smith, junior-college transfer Geoff Delhanty and senior Billy Wuggazer are forced into leadership roles for the upcoming season.

"I'm looking forward to being a leader on the team," Wuggazer said.

Wuggazer said he has stepped up training in the off-season by running extra miles and training on hills.

"The last couple of years I didn't really start training hard until August," Wuggazer said. "This year I never slowed down."

Delhanty comes to K-State from El Camino Junior College in Torrence, Calif.

Delhanty could step in and assume a leadership role right away, Drake said.

"I think he's going to lead us," Drake said. "He is a talented runner and very outgoing. He's a very strong addition to the team."

New runners are also prevalent among the supporting cast.

"I wouldn't be surprised if he takes over," Drake said. "He raced all summer, so he might be a little tired, but he is very talented."

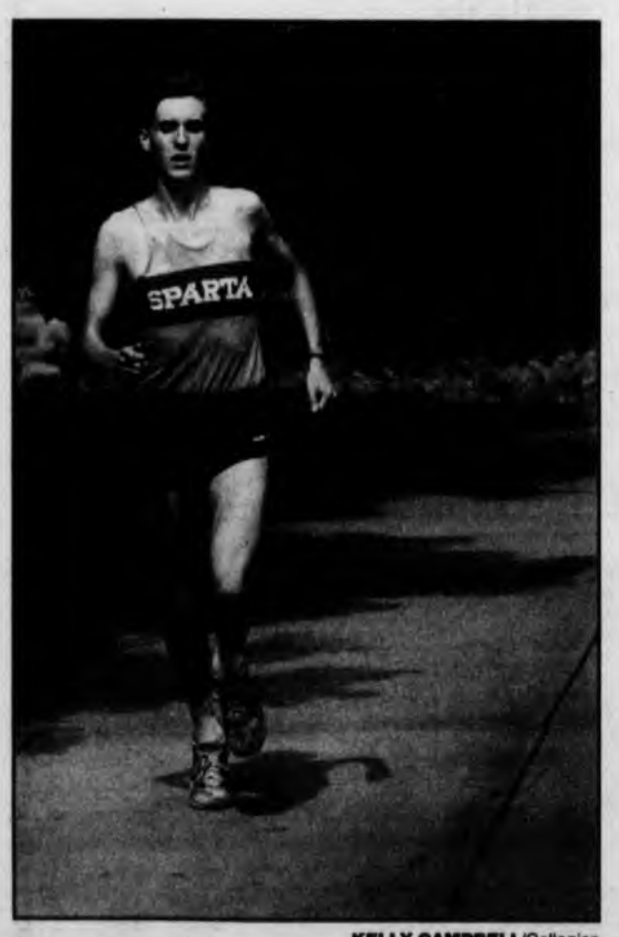
Aside from competing in the long distances in cross country, Byergso will compete in the 800 and 1500 meter events during the track season.

John Etzel, Scott Galas, Jim Curtly and Ryan Johnson will likely compete for the remaining spots on the team, Drake said.



"I think a good goal for us as a team would be to finish in the top half of the conference," Wuggazer said.

K-State was not allowed to compete as a team at last year's Big Eight Championships.

However, if they had, they would have finished seventh.

"I know we will score less points at this year's conference meet," Drake said. "Last year was a disaster."

The men will hit the course for the first time September 17 at the Woody Greeno-Nebraska Invitational at Lincoln, Nebraska.

KELLY CAMPBELL/Collegian

Mikkel Byergso trains for the cross country season. The season opens Sept. 17 at Lincoln, Neb.

K-State's cross country coach finds the runner he needs in DENMARK

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

With only one runner returning to the men's cross country team, Coach Terry Drake needed help.

Drake found the help he needed, but it wasn't without some expensive long-distance phone calls.

Mikkel Byergso, freshman from Nivaa, Denmark, has found his way to Manhattan where he hopes to continue an already successful running career.

However, to attend K-State, Byergso had to separate from his twin brother, Jeppe, who received a cross country and track scholarship at Arkansas State.

"Last spring, we thought we would like to go to the same school together, but after awhile we were together all the time and we got sick of each other," Byergso said.

The brothers have trained together since they were children, but Byergso said there really isn't any competition between the two of them.

"He hasn't beat me in a race since we were young, but if someone had to beat me, I'm glad it's him and not someone else," Byergso said. "We like to keep it in the family."

Byergso competed in several countries in Europe last summer for a track club centered in Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark.

He said he joined the club after previously running for the club in his hometown of Nivaa because the chance to compete in better meets.

"There are no school teams in Denmark," Byergso said. "You have to run in a club.

"The club in Nivaa was too small and didn't offer much."

Opportunity is the biggest reason Byergso wanted to come to the United States to compete.

He said American track meets offer better competition.

"The competition here is so much better than in Denmark," Byergso said. "Some of the times that I thought were impressive in Denmark aren't anything special here."

After speaking with several other coaches, Byergso said he knew that he wanted to compete for Drake.

"I came here because of the coach," Byergso said. "After I told other coaches that I decided to go to Kansas State, they started to say bad things about the school. It seemed kind of rude."

The transition to the new culture has been smooth, Byergso said.

He is fluent in Danish, German, English and can understand Swedish and Norwegian.

"Americans are more friendly than the Danish," Byergso said. "I've walked by people I don't even know and they say 'hi' to me. That would never happen in Denmark."

The transition to the American style of education worries Byergso a little, he said.

"The education system in Denmark is completely different," Byergso said. "I have no problems speaking in English, but writing English is a little different.

"I will just have to get used to being in a different kind of classroom," he said

As far as academics are concerned, Byergso said he would be interested in earning a degree in some kind of engineering because of his strong interest in mathematics and physics.

Bietau optimistic about upcoming season

Kuregian returns; Cats look to rebuild after injuries

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

After losing most of his team to injury and illness last spring, K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau finally has a healthy squad to start the new fall season.

"We're healthier than we were last year," Bietau said. "The players that we lost to mono are back and healthy.

"Karina Kuregian is doing very well after having back surgery over the summer."

Kuregian's situation was a concern for Bietau, as the junior from Yerevan, Armenia, had a disc in her back replaced.

"Karina is one of the best players in the country, and the nature of her injury was one that could be career-ending," Bietau said. "Fortunately, she seems to be doing really well."

Kuregian took the Big Eight Conference tennis world by storm last season, as she and teammate Masha Meidell made K-State history as the only Wildcats to make it to the finals of the ITA Rolex Regional Championships last year.

Individually, Kuregian also advanced to the final rounds of the Rolex Championships.

Bietau has added two new members to the squad, bringing the team total up to seven.

"We've signed a girl from Salina and one from England, but I'm really anxious to see how the entire team progressed over the summer when practice begins in September," Bietau said.

"That's really the time when we kind of find out where everybody is and how hard they worked over the summer."

Bietau will see just how prepared his players are when the first meet of the fall season rolls around on Sept. 24, in Manhattan.

"There are five individual tournaments that we play in the fall, and they're quite a bit different than the ones we play in the spring," Bietau said.

"This difference is that there are no team results kept from the tournaments that take place throughout the fall, but they're still very important.

Kuregian

"These results still count for selections into the NCAA's at the end of the year, and two of the tournaments, National Clay Courts and the Riviera, are two of the biggest tournaments of the year, so it's important for us to perform well," he said.

While strong performances during the fall would ultimately help the team, Bietau said he's more concerned with individual improvement.

"They're important for everyone else on the team just from a development standpoint," he said.

"Three of the tournaments will have the entire team competing in them, with the first one here, one at Indiana, and of course the Rolex tournament."

Although the team faced tremendous hardship with just four healthy members last spring, Bietau said the entire experience has brought the team a greater sense of unity going into the new year.

"Really, I sense a little better level of commitment from my players than we've had in the last two or three years as a group," he said.

"We've always had players who were committed to improvement, but I have a sense that as a group, this commitment has never been as strong as it is right now."

Division II school. They also struggled at first.

"We went 15-18 that next year," Moore said.

"We still struggled a little bit, but we beat the No. 1 team in the country in North Dakota State."

The next year, the Wildcats went 27-9, and finished fifth in the country.

The following year, they went 34-4 and lost to Portland State in the national championship.

Moore said the championship game against Portland State was one of the best ever.

"Many people have called it the best championship final of all time in any division," Moore said.

"It was a great match to watch. I truly wished I would have been a spectator.

"It was the most amazing spectacle for women's volleyball that I've ever seen," he said.

Northern Michigan then recorded a 38-1 record and won the national championship last year under Moore's leadership.

So why is Moore here at K-State?

K-State has been winless in conference play since 1991 and finished with a 16-match losing streak last season.

"Logic says, you're Division II, so you should try to find a Division I job," Moore said.

"This offer came up at the last minute, and I think the elements are in place to have an outstanding program."

The idea of coaching a Division I school was not the only thing that attracted Moore to K-State.

"I love the community, and that was one of the things that I wanted," he said.

"I wanted to be where the people are neat and nice to be around. I don't think I'd want to go back to a major metropolitan area."

"We run what is called the swing offense," Moore said. "It was invented by Bill Neville, who is now the head coach at the University of Washington."

Neville said last year there were only three teams that truly ran the swing: the University of Washington, the University of Colorado and Moore's team.

Moore said the term swing comes from putting what is traditionally called the outside hitter in the middle of the court, and she can go to the right or the left.

The player's swinging motion from right to left is where the term swing offense is generated.

"We run it better in some respects than the other two schools because they either limit their players to hitting on the right or the left side by the antenna," Moore said.

"We don't do that. My swing hitters can hit anywhere on the net. It's very fast, and once you get it, it's easy to understand."

New money will bring more entertainment

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

The Union Program Council is making big plans for the fall semester.

Starting things off is Wildcat Welcome, which features lectures, workshops, orientations, movies and other entertainment through Aug. 27.

As for the rest of the semester, the council has a few surprises in store.

"Thanks to new money acquired from student fees, we are considering programs that were for so long out of our reach because we didn't have the funds," Sharon Willits, program advisor said.

Among the programs being brought to K-State are a virtual reality simulator on Oct. 7, and "Laser Quest," a laser tag game to be played during homecoming.

"We are considering programs that were for so long out of our reach because we didn't have the funds."
SHARON WILLITS
Union Program Council Adviser

The Arts Committee is bringing in an exhibit for the Union Art Gallery titled "Companeras: Women, Art, and Social Change in Latin America."

Chrissy Hathaway, Arts Committee chairwoman, said the committee is particularly excited about this event.

"This is the largest event the UPC has tried to pull off on its own," she said. "We never would have been able to do this without the student fees money."

Willits said a big portion of the money brought in by student fees was divided between the Special Events Committee and the Eclectic Entertainment Committee.

"This will enable them to bring in bigger name bands that are more recognizable to a wider variety of students," she said.

Willits said the Eclectic Entertainment Committee is planning on continuing it's "Eclectic Review" music series.

One of the bands scheduled to perform is The Drovers, a Chicago based band that appeared in the movie "Blink."

They're scheduled to perform on Sept. 29.

Also on the list is The Autono, a Colorado band scheduled to perform on Oct. 20.

Also scheduled for the Eclectic Review are five comedians, including Daniel Rosen, who has appeared on The Arsenio Hall Show.

Willits said UPC is planning a concert in late October or early November with more recognized groups.

"We'll be looking at bands that are up and coming, just on the verge of getting big," she said.

Melissa Wells, Eclectic Entertainment Committee Chairwoman, declined to name any of the bands that may be involved in the concert.

"I don't want to get anyone's hopes up and then have the bands not be there," she said.

The committee is working with campus radio station KSDB-FM 91.9 to try and bring in some recognizable names.

"We're trying to find a way that we can bring the best," Annie Gilliam, assistant program adviser, said.

"If we get a good working relationship with a promoter, there's no telling who we could bring."

The UPC also has a long list of films slated for the fall semester.

This includes film classics such as "Annie Hall" and "Apocalypse Now" along with more recent films such as "Maverick" and "Schindler's List".

▶ REVIEW

Weezer: straight from garage

Recently erupting out of the Los Angeles underground, Weezer's debut self-titled album blends a retro-punk sound with a lot of comedy.

Often Weezer will take a studio-polished acoustic intro and then turn the amplifiers and distortion up to thrash the song up, as on the album opener, "My Name is Jonas."

On "No One Else," vocalist/guitarist Rivers Cuomo starts a semi-romantic story, only to lose it and tell her it's over.

"Surf Wax America" comes across as a slam on the beach culture of hedonism:

"You take your car to work, I'll take my board/and when you're out of of gas, I'm still afloat."

Weezer's lyrics often seem silly and frivolous, but a deeper tone may be stretched into it by the funny-little-black-cigarette-smoking-crowd.

I think they're just having fun.

Weezer comes out on top, bringing the combination of loud guitar and lyrical madness.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Cassie needs you. No, really!

I really need to hear from you.

Surely it can't be that no one out there has any problems.

I saw the trouble people are having with all the construction on campus, the filled-up classes and the general confusion resulting over the O.J. Simpson case.

Maybe it's just that everyone is too busy trying to solve the rest of the world's problems.

It is time to be selfish.

Write me with your simple roommate/significant other/pet/lawyer problems.

I have been doing this a while and am really quite good at offering advice to the sick and twisted, as well as normal folks just like you and me.

▶ PENSION FUND

KPERS won't be tried before early 1996

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas state pension fund's longest running lawsuit to recover investment losses probably won't come to trial before 1996, a federal judge says.

U.S. District Judge D. Brook Bartlett on Monday asked attorneys for the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System and executives of the defunct Home Savings Association of Kansas City if they had any reason why they could not be ready to begin trial during the first half of 1996.

Bartlett wants the attorneys' answers by next week.

It will take that much time for attorneys to prepare and for Bartlett to find the eight- to 10-week block of time necessary for the case. The judge told attorneys that heavy court workloads make it essential for them to meet pretrial deadlines.

"It's not going to be easy to find a comparable amount of time later. The sheer number of weeks involved demands our best efforts now," Bartlett said.

KPERS originally sued the late Kansas City financier Frank Morgan and other Home Savings owners and officers in June 1991 to recover $65 million the thrift borrowed from the pension fund in 1986.

The money was lost when federal regulators seized the thrift in March 1991. That event also touched off an investigation of several risky loans KPERS made during the mid-1980s that incurred losses currently estimated to be $150 million or more.

The Home Savings suit is the first and largest of 10 that KPERS has filed so far to recover money the pension fund alleges was lost because of fraud and mismanagement involving former investment managers and officials of the companies that got the money.

Defendants in all 10 suits deny the allegations.

The pension fund has recovered only about $2 million to date, from an out-of-court settlement with a Topeka bank handling the funds while the loans were made.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

▶ KANSAS LAW

Sexual predator law needs work

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas' 3-month-old sexual predator law needs modifications to make it more workable and to avoid possible constitutional problems, an assistant attorney general told a legislative study committee on Tuesday.

"Based on a Washington state supreme court opinion, we feel we need to make some changes to avoid constitutional challenges," Camille Nohe said before the interim Judiciary Committee.

The law, which took effect on May 19 after being passed by the 1994 Kansas Legislature, permits the state to keep locked up those who have committed sexually violent crimes, if psychiatrists regard them as likely to commit more such acts.

Five inmates in the state prison system have been identified so far as being candidates for retention — four in Sedgwick County and one in Shawnee County.

Under the law, they are given probable cause hearings. If a judge agrees they fall under intent of the law, they are sent to Larned State Hospital for psychiatric evaluation. If psychiatrists say they are a threat to commit more such acts, they must be given a jury trial within 45 days to determine if they should be retained in prison.

Two state committees are being set up to screen inmates with histories of violent sex offenses to recommend which ones be given probable cause hearings. One is made up of Department of Corrections, Social and Rehabilitation Services and Parole Board representatives. The other is made up of prosecutors.

State officials expect the Kansas law to be challenged on constitutional grounds, and Nohe has been studying the Washington law and the ruling by its supreme court in anticipation of a challenge .

Based on the Washington decision, Nohe asked the interim committee to recommend eight changes in the Kansas law.

One change would increase from 45 days to 75 days the length of time between when prison officials notify prosecutors that inmates who might be designated as sex predators are to be released and they have to file petitions for probable cause hearings. This provides more time to prepare the petitions.

Other proposed changes would require probable cause hearings to be held within three days of filing of the petition; require consideration of less restrictive alternatives to continued confinement, and clarify what is meant by an "appropriate facility" for detainment.

Earlier Tuesday, Kansas' two top judges urged the committee to address serious space, maintenance and caseload needs of the state's two appellate courts.

"We're hurting," Supreme Court Chief Justice Richard Holmes said.

Holmes and Court of Appeals Chief Judge Mary Briscoe outlined a myriad of caseload, logistical, maintenance and morale problems facing the court, caused by legislative budgetary neglect and changes in laws that have greatly added to the number of cases being handled by the two courts.

"I see no end to it," Holmes said of the increased demands being placed on the court with enactment of tougher sentencing laws, a state death penalty law, sexual predator act, federal crime bill and violence against women act.

"It's going to be expensive, time consuming and it's really going to impact the courts," Holmes said.

Briscoe said it is time for the Legislature to end the practice that every litigant in state courts has an automatic right to appeal his or her case to the Court of Appeals.

She noted the number of appeals to the Court of Appeals has increased from 760 in its first year of operation to 1,500 in 1993 and an estimated 2,000 in 1994.

▶ O.J. SIMPSON CASE

Blood found at murder matches Simpson's

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — In the strongest evidence to date, prosecutors revealed Monday that O.J. Simpson's blood has the same genetic makeup as blood drops leading from the slashed bodies of his ex-wife and her friend.

But a major battle likely will be waged over the statistical odds that the crime-scene blood drops came from Simpson.

The prosecution released its findings in court papers, saying it would be useless for the judge to allow the defense to conduct its own sophisticated DNA tests because the results won't clear Simpson.

"The defendant will not be able to show that the evidence has apparent exculpatory value because the DNA tests conducted so far implicate the defendant," prosecutors wrote.

The DNA evidence is expected to be the crux of the prosecution's case since there are no known eyewitnesses to the June 12 slashing deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, and Ronald Goldman, 25. Simpson, 47, is set to go to trial Sept. 19 on murder charges.

Meanwhile, prosecutors must persuade Superior Court Judge Lance Ito to admit the DNA tests despite defense claims the evidence is tainted. And they also need to show what the odds are that the blood is Simpson's and not someone else's.

The prosecution papers filed Monday suggested blood matches, but did not include a breakdown of the statistical odds of such matches.

Prosecutors have alleged Simpson left blood at the murder scene when he cut his finger during a struggle. Defense attorneys have provided a variety of explanations for the cut.

In other developments, Deputy District Attorney Marcia Clark complained during Monday's pretrial hearing that the public release of a defense letter to the judge last week was a public relations ploy.

Ito cut off Clark's complaints, saying he was disturbed at the way the letter was handled but wanted to address the issue with attorneys privately. The letter was sent to the judge, the prosecution and the media.

"I am concerned about it," he said. "I learned about the content of the letter that you're referring to in the shower on the radio."

In the letter, defense attorney Robert Shapiro wrote that blood samples may have been so "compromised by mislabeling, cutting, switching and other discrepancies" that the results of DNA tests will be inadmissible in court.

In a 1992 report, a committee of the National Research Council wrote: "To say two patterns match, without providing any scientifically valid estimate (or, at least, an upper bound) of the frequency with which such matches might occur by chance, is meaningless."

Woman assaulted east of campus

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

A K-State student was sexually assaulted in her own apartment, east of campus, Monday morning.

Lt. Rodney Jager of the Riley County Police Department said the male suspect entered through the unlocked front door of the apartment at 5:40 a.m. The woman told the police she left the door unlocked because her roommate had forgotten her key.

Jager said the suspect threatened the victim's life before assaulting her.

Detective Theresa Mason, also of the Riley County Police Department, said no arrest has been made and there is no description of the suspect available at this time.

KMKF-101.5 reported that a small amount of cash was stolen from the victim, but police denied that was true.

No record of the assault was found on the police log book for Aug. 22.

Caution important in preventing rapes

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Knowing where to go and what to do to prevent and report crime can stop a criminal.

"Rape, like other crimes, requires someone to have the ability, desire and opportunity to commit the crime," Richard Herrman, University detective, said. "But you can take away their opportunity."

You have to be cautious even in familiar surroundings like campus or your own neighborhood, Herrman said.

"Don't leave yourself vulnerable," Herrman said. "Travel with friends."

Herrman said many rapes go unreported.

"I know they probably occur on campus more than we would like to admit," he said.

He said he thought date rape was becoming more reported, especially on college campuses in the last few years.

"Just because a victim knows the perpetrator, that does not lessen the charge of rape, the degree of the situation or the crime," Herrman said.

It is good to meet a date you don't know very well in public. You need to be assertive with a person, and know when to walk away from a situation, Herrman said.

"Let the person know where you stand," Herrman said.

Avoid excess drinking and large parties where men outnumber women, he said.

If you are a victim of a rape, it is important to report it as soon after the attack as possible.

Rapes on campus should be reported to the K-State Police. Off-campus crimes should be reported to the Riley County Police Department.

The victim's personal health and welfare is the police's first priority, Herrman said, but the second is finding the perpetrator.

"It may be a person's first impulse to shower and brush their hair," Herrman said, "but that may destroy important evidence."

A description of the attacker, a vehicle description and details of the incident can be important in helping the police find and convict the rapist.

KEEPING YOURSELF SAFE FROM CRIME

- No matter where you live, make sure you have a friend or roommate who knows your routines. Tell someone if you are going to be late or are going away.
- Keep your doors and windows locked.
- Never open the door to a stranger when you are alone.
- If you have a sliding glass door, place a bar of wood or metal in the track so that it can't be forced open.

INTO THE FIRE

About 600 Fort Riley soldiers leave this week to fight wildfires in Idaho

Fort Riley soldiers who have been trained to fight two-legged foes are after a more elusive enemy — fire.

About 600 1st Infantry Division soldiers are leaving today and through the end of the week to help fight the wildfires in Idaho.

The fires in Idaho are a part of 30 major fires in a five-state area, including, Washington, Montana, California, Oklahoma and Idaho. A total of about 494,000 acres have burned.

Members of the 70th Engineer Battalion, 1st Engineer Battalion and 4th Battalion, 1st Aviation regiment will fly into Boise. The aviation unit is sending eight Blackhawk helicopters, along with their flight and maintenance crews.

Soldiers were instructed in a 16-hour crash course Tuesday. About 35 members of the National Interagency Fire Center covered the basics of fire suppression, safety and use of fire shelters.

"They showed a video and demonstrated how to use the fire shelter," Captain John Kiser said. "The shelter pops up, you duck underneath it, hold it down and the fire blows over. It's like a little tiny aluminum pup tent."

All soldiers were given first hand experience with the shelters. They received helmets, fire tools and other equipment to take to Idaho as well.

Once soldiers arrive in Boise, the National Interagency Fire Center will provide them with further training and job instructions.

The troops will be involved in fire-support duties around the Idaho City area.

"Because of the lack of depth in training, we'll keep them out of the more dangerous areas. They'll basically be doing a lot of backup and mop-up," said Bob Valen, fire information officer at the Idaho City complex. "They'll pull 12-plus hour shifts. They'll come back, feed, wash and go back out until the fires are controlled."

About 57,160 acres are affected in the area; 47,460 acres are listed as having active fires, Valen said. Of the five fires involved, four were the result of lightning strikes and one is an alleged arson.

"We have just over 1100 personnel that have been out here since late July. They're pretty well taxed," Valen said. "It's difficult to find good fresh folks. Hence, the military becomes very important to us."

The troops' mission is expected to last about 30 days.

Firefighting is only one of the army's humanitarian missions, Mark Meseke, Fort Riley media relations officer, said. The base has provided help in refugee camps in Cuba and Somalia as well as hurricane relief.

"We're always on standby," Meseke said.

WILDFIRES IN THE WEST

Soldiers from Fort Riley are leaving today to help fight fires burning in Idaho. The 600 members of the 1st Infantry Division will first fly to Boise, where they will receive job instructions, then travel to Idaho City, where 47,460 acres are listed as having active fires.

School is back in session and lessons are being taught on campus and off.

Ignoring parking restriction signs can be costly, as some people who illegally parked at the Ramada Inn found out Wednesday.

"Parking. Ramada Inn Guests Only. Violators will be removed at owners expense."

About 10 of these signs are posted throughout the Ramada Inn parking lot.

Joseph Maggio, director of sales at Ramada Inn, said Ramada Inn department heads and managers patrolled the parking area and warned people who illegally parked in the area for four days beginning Aug. 18 before they started towing Wednesday.

"The last thing we want to do is tow people away, but everything else up to this point hasn't worked, so it's our only alternative," Maggio said.

"We have towed a total of five cars illegally parked in our lot today (Wednesday) and it easily could have been three times that amount," Maggio said.

"There are times that we need every single parking place," Maggio said. "Our guests should be able to have front row parking."

All illegally-parked cars at Ramada Inn were towed by and taken to Manhattan Wrecker Service, 115 Colorado.

Manhattan Wrecker Service said it would cost $50 for people to get their car out of impound.

"It's an expensive lesson," Maggio said. "They will have to find other means of parking other than our parking lot."

Maggio said he was not certain all the violators were K-State students.

▶ MANHATTAN AIRPLANE CRASH CAUSES NO INJURIES, MINOR DAMAGES

A general aviation aircraft was making practice landings at the Manhattan Airport Wednesday morning when something went wrong.

"At approximately 9:45 a.m., the plane landed with its landing gear retracted," Ken Black, airport manager, said.

Black said the accident was minor. There were no injuries and the plane was only slightly damaged.

"The runway was only closed for about half an hour," Black said. "After that, everything was back up and running."

Black said he could not comment on who was flying the plane or why the landing gear was retracted.

Black said the accident is under investigation and that more information will be available once the results of that investigation are made public.

▶ NEW DIRECTOR OF CAMPUS POLICE READY FOR CHALLENGES OF K-STATE

After a long and thorough search, K-State has appointed a new director of K-State Police to succeed John McAuliffe.

Ronnie Grice, currently the director of public safety at the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff, will begin work at K-State Sept. 19 and said he is looking forward to the job.

Grice said he accepted the position because he needed a change to a more challenging job.

"I was looking for a career move and a new opportunity, and I've always wanted to work at a Division-1 school. K-State just fit the plan perfectly," he said.

One of the biggest challenges of the job will be the size of K-State as compared to the University of Arkansas, Grice said.

"I'm coming from a school where the entire student body is smaller than the faculty at K-State," he said.

Despite the problems of working with a bigger student population, Grice said he is hoping to implement some new programs at K-State.

"I want to bring some of the programs that I began," Grice said.

Among his accomplishments in Arkansas is Grice's establishment of a crime-prevention program that nearly eliminated crime at the school, he said.

Before he starts any new programs, though, Grice said he needs to familiarize himself with the campus.

"The first thing I need to do is try and take everything in," Grice said.

Grice's credentials were the most impressive of the applicants, John Lambert, director of public safety, said.

"He's had university experience and 14 years of law enforcement experience," Lambert said. "He was just the best candidate for the job and what K-State needs."

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

Ten years of work has paid off for wheat breeder Rollie Sears, professor of agronomy, with the development of a new, more disease-resistant strain of wheat called Jagger wheat. About 1800 bushels have been released to 181 Kansas farmers for planting this fall.

After ten years and $1 million, K-State's Agricultural Experiment Station has produced a new strain of hard red winter wheat known as

JAGGER

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

The release of a new variety of wheat, called Jagger wheat, is the most recent example of the success of K-State's Agricultural Experiment Station.

Producing superior breeds of wheat for Kansas farmers is the station's goal, said David Frey, assistant administrator of the Kansas Wheat Commission.

Wheat breeds such as Arlin and Karl 92 have become household names for agriculturists around the world, Frey said, and Jagger is next on the list.

"If it does reach its goal of replacing Karl 92, it will be familiar to people in agriculture, literally, around the world," Rollie Sears, wheat breeder, said.

The new breed has strong traits that will increase its popularity, Sears said.

"Jagger is most unique because it has better disease resistance and improved baking quality over Karl and Karl 92," Sears said.

Taking 10 years and $1 million to produce, Jagger began as an F-1 cross in a greenhouse, Sears said.

"Jagger is not the only cross we made," Sears said. "We make about a thousand crosses a year. In the beginning, Jagger was only one of 300,000."

After two years in the greenhouse, Sears said, a selection process occurs to send crosses to test plots acroos the state.

Some test plots are located at Ashland Bottoms, Parsons and Hays, he said.

Frey said from test-plot observance it was obvious by the third year of working with Jagger that it would be an outstanding wheat breed.

"We knew we had a hot one," Frey said. "It sprouted earlier, looked better graining up, had more heads and it looked nice."

Not only does it look good, but the qaulity of Jagger is outstanding, Robert Bequette, cereal chemist, said.

"It certainly is something to be proud of," he said. "It has good test weight, kernel size, flour yields, good milling, protein and acceptable baking quality."

Some aspects of Jagger include good rising and elastic dough, Bequette said, and these apply to bread production, an important part of the wheat industry.

The 75-80 person K-State research team that produces new breeds of wheat consist of pathologists, entomologists, quality controllers, plant physiologists and extension specialists, Bequette said.

In recent years, K-State's team has produced many good wheat breeds. However, with each achievement there are also expectations, Sears said.

With the release of a new wheat breed, Sears said improvements over top breeds must be evident for a breed to be officially released.

"It is almost like K-State's football program," Sears said. "When we release a good wheat, everybody's glad to have it because it means improvement, but like the football program, it also means the goals and expectations are turned up."

Services for rape victims

K-State offers several services to help students who have been the victim of rape.

On campus, the Women's Resource Center serves as an advocate for rape victims, and University Counseling Services offers counseling for victims.

If any students are attacked by another student on campus, they can file a complaint with the Dean of Student Life's Office, which will start disciplinary proceedings against the attacker.

Researchers find invisible pests

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — For many farmers, it's hard enough to fend off the insects that they can see without having to worry about invisible foes.

Now, researchers at the agriculture department have developed techniques to help growers detect and combat destructive microscopic pests, known as mycoplasmalike organisms, or MLOs.

Robert Davis, an Agricultural Research Service plant pathologist, told Agricultural Research magazine that the genetic technologies under development at his lab will serve a variety of purposes, the most important of which is to create a storehouse of information on the organisms.

They were discovered by Japanese researchers in 1967 and are thought to be a worldwide phenomenon. The organisms have been proven to cause sometimes-fatal diseases in a wide range of agricultural products, manifesting themselves in symptoms such as leaf curl, yellowing and wilting.

The organisms are transmitted by insects that feed on the plants or between plants during propagation.

The techniques developed in Davis' lab have allowed researchers to classify the pests, giving them a system based on genetic evidence for determining if the organisms are present in plants and insects.

Another benefit of the techniques is that the amount of time needed to detect the pests could be cut down from weeks, months and even years to days.

"We're hoping these can be used on plant germplasm to speed up the clearance process at plant quarantine operations," Davis said.

He also expects that the detection method, which scrutinizes DNA sequences to determine the presence of the pests, will help farmers identify infected insects. This knowledge would help them decide when and where to spray their fields.

"We hope commercial companies interested in these approaches will eventually bring the technology to a level that will be used by plant disease diagnosticians and Extension Service people working with growers," Davis said.

The diagnostic techniques now are being used by another team of researchers to identify leafhoppers that carry the organisms in Ohio. This information will be used in a computer model to help control outbreaks of aster yellows, a common disease among carrot, celery and lettuce crops.

Fans to get a chance at Coach Snyder's autograph

SACHA HANES
Collegian

Fans of K-State football will have a chance to watch the Wildcats practice tonight as a part of Fan Appreciation Day.

"It is a way to thank the fans for their support and let them meet the players," Erick Harper, director of advertising and sales for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said.

In the past, the only time fans have been able to watch the Cats in action is during the season or at the Spring Game, Harper said.

"Coach Snyder has never opened practice before. We want to give the fans an opportunity to see the team beforehand," Harper said.

The gates on the east side of KSU Stadium will open at 6 p.m. for fans to watch the last 30 minutes of practice.

After the practice, Snyder and the team captains will address the crowd.

Posters will be distributed, and players will be available for autographs on the field.

The K-State Marching Band and cheerleaders will be present, and free hot dogs will be given away.

Harper said he expects about 2,000-3,000 fans to attend the event.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

RCPD has duty to report all crimes

A situation exists in Manhattan in which a female student was sexually assaulted in her own apartment.

A suspect has not been apprehended, and for two days the public knew nothing about it.

The attack occurred early Monday morning, and it did not appear on the Riley County Police Department's police log.

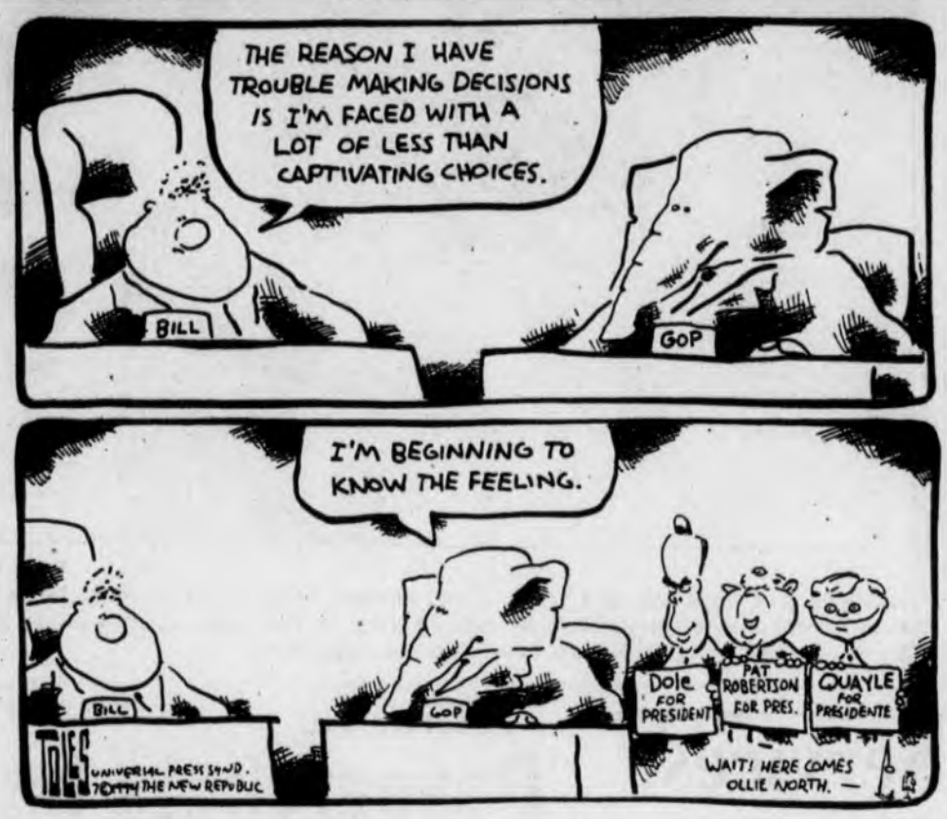
The police have a legal obligation to report all incidents to which officers respond.

The logs are to be made accessible to the public. The fact that it did not appear on the police log is disturbing.

The absence of the sexual assault's report in public records has ramifications that involve the public safety and solving this crime.

■ Every day, every hour that the attacker is not apprehended, the trail gets colder. There might be witnesses who don't realize they might have seen something relevant to the case. As time goes on, memories fade.

■ If nobody knows that a crime has occurred and that they should come forward with information, nobody will.



■ The RCPD does not have an option of whether to put a certain crime on the logs. The officials do not have the right to pick and choose. If they left this out, what else are they holding back?

■ As soon as the police have a description of the suspect — we don't know if they do or not — it should be released immediately so that everyone can be on the lookout.

■ Both the K-State Police and the RCPD should report every crime they respond to.The community has the right to be aware of all crimes.

Sexual assaults and other attacks in a relatively quiet college town are scary enough.

TOLES

Manhattan's a great place for the aware

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Welcome (back) to K-State! You're in for a great time here in Manhattan if you keep your eyes and ears open for the opportunities in this community.

WEIRD WEATHER

Manhattan sits in a valley in the Flint Hills where the Kansas and Big Blue rivers converge, just south of the largest body of water in the state, Tuttle Creek Reservoir. As a result, Manhattan is more humid than most Kansas towns, making the summers more miserable and the winter winds bone-chilling. On the good side, the valley prevents the high winds found in other parts of the state. And what little snow falls here in the winter doesn't blow too badly.

DIVERSITY

Manhattan is a very diverse community. While a certain other university town is full of multiculturally-aware folks, Manhattan walks its walk without having to talk any talk.

You will find many peoples of every age, income, race and religion here.

Even with the problems the town has, people in Manhattan somehow co-exist peacefully and productively.

This says a lot about the character of the people of Manhattan and K-State.

CRIME

Like many other communities in the United States, Manhattan is facing a rise in crime, especially with gangs and of many races and classes.

You needn't walk around in constant fear, but there have been some assaults on campus recently.

While there is no sure way to prevent crime from happening to you, the best advice is to use your head.

■ Don't walk alone outside if you can avoid it, especially at night.

■ No matter what your gender, be careful whom you let in your room, car or apartment.

■ Keep your doors locked at all times.

K-State Police can advise you on other steps you can take to be smarter and safer.

It doesn't matter whether you're in Kansas or New York, Manhattan can be a dangerous place — especially if you don't think.

THINGS TO DO

There is a lot to do here if you look for it, and not all activities involve drinking. Visiting the Konza Prairie, Tuttle Creek spillway, Pillsbury Crossing and even driving in the country are simple ways to enjoy this beautiful area of Kansas.

In Manhattan, there are lots of movies, theaters, various types of music and other forms of art and entertainment dirt cheap.

K-State has a free on-ramp to the so-called information superhighway, lots of opportunities for intramural sports, a great pool and a soon-to-be-better recreation center.

And of course, there are the ongoing endeavors of the K-State Wildcats, but despite the hype our male athletes get they aren't the only talented athletes on campus.

For instance, did you know that K-State is home to an all-America lady's tennis player?

Check out all K-State sports, not just those with the most promotion.

TENANTS' RIGHTS

Finally, if you live off campus, go to the library and read the Kansas Landlord and Tenant Act.

Life is very difficult when an unethical landlord doesn't fulfill the lease duties, and it's no picnic when you're sued for something you did or didn't do.

There are some landlords in town with a history of taking advantage of students naive about how leases really work.

Think twice before renting from landlords from outside your county because you cannot take them to small claims court to get back money they may owe you.

Read everything before you sign a lease and again read the Kansas Landlord and Tenant Act.

You're on the air with Dr. Brad

If you listen to live radio talk shows, especially late at night in your car on some lonely stretch of highway, then you have experienced exceptional entertainment is an exceptional experience in ego inflation.

The most entertaining live shows are, of course, the ones featuring a medical doctor of some sort, usually a psychiatrist, who takes calls from people who prefer to discuss their most intimate problems with a doctor they have never met while 100 million other people listen.

BRAD SEABOURN

They usually go something like this.

Host: Hi! This is Dr. Brad and you are listening to "Revolting Behavioral Revelations," a show where you have the chance to reveal your most intimate and disgusting behavioral problems to a licensed medical practitioner and quite possibly your next-door neighbor. The result is that YOU receive therapy on the spot, free of charge, and in so doing provide hysterical comic relief to others with totally different afflictions. Today's session is an open line, so while we wait for our first caller, let me say that yesterday's session on octogenarian incontinence was — (phone ringing) and here is our first caller! Go ahead, madam, you're on the air.

Caller: What? Are we on the air yet?

Dr. Brad: Yes, go ahead.

Caller: What? Young man, you sound like you are in a barrel.

Dr. Brad: Turn your radio off.

Caller: What?

Dr. Brad: TURN ... YOUR ... RADIO ... OFF!

Caller: There, it's off. Can you hear me now?

Dr. Brad: I have been able to hear you all along. You're the one...

Caller: Good. I was beginning to think I had a bad connection. What I am calling about is my husband, Norman. He was out mowing the yard last week and accidentally ran right over the cat's tail. Our cat's name is Surprise because he would always leave little "surprises" for Norman, sometimes in his shoe, sometimes right by the bed when he gets up in the morning ... and, well, now every time anyone starts the coffee grinder, or the blender, Surprise just goes crazy flying around the house bouncing off the lamp shades and leaving surprises everywhere, which throws Norman into such a rage that he chases Surprise around the house trying to whack him with a seven iron.

The last time it happened, Surprise jumped off the fireplace mantle onto Norman's head. I yelled at Norman to leave the cat alone. Poor thing doesn't even have a tail. But he kept right after him. I even screamed ... hitting a cat with a seven iron isn't the proper thing to do, which prompted him to momentarily leave the room and come back with a three wood.

My question is what to do about Norman because, as you can imagine, this is really beginning to interfere with our sex life.

Dr. Brad: Well, truthfully I think your husband has completely lost all his golf balls, ha ha!

No, seriously, he suffers from severe neuroscatalogical trauma and should seek immediate psychiatric counseling.

In the mean time, if you have any knitting to do like a complete line of winter wear for a local professional football team, you might want to get started on it. Your husband's recovery is going to take a long time.

Thanks for calling (phone ringing) and here's our next caller.

You're on the air.

Caller: I just wanted to pass along some advice to that last caller, you know, the one with the goofy husband and the frightened cat with the loose bowels. Well, I just wanted to say that a little magnesia and flour in its milk will plug that critter right up.

Thanks.

Dr. Brad: And there you have it — another medical cure live and on the air.

Thank you for calling.

Well let me get back to the session yesterday on octogenarian incontinence and pass along some useful information about my neighbor's father ...

(Phone ringing)

... whoops, sorry our next caller is on the line. Go ahead please.

Caller: Yes, is Martha there?

Dr. Brad: No, this is Dr. Brad. I think you have a wrong numbe r...

Caller: Well you tell her when she gets in that I have had it. That bloody cat is the last straw and I am leaving for good. I never wanted a cat anyway, but no, she had to have it. I tried to run it over with the lawn mower last week and ever since then the blasted thing has been running around the house hissing and defecating everywhere it goes. You just tell her ...

(Hissing in the background)

... there he goes again! I'm going to get you this time, you feline devil! I've got my driver AND my pitching wedge!

(Phone drops).

Dr. Brad: Hello? Hello, Norman, is that you? I guess he's gone. Well, back to my neighbor's father.

The last time his father had this incontinence problem was when this cat ...

(Phone rings)

Hello, you're on the air.

Caller: I've been listening to your show this morning, and it reminded me of an incident a few days ago when this nut explodes through the front door of my house chasing this crazy-looking cat — no tail, hairless patches here and there, foaming at the mouth. Made a mess of the whole house. I was so startled I wet my pants, and I ain't done that since my wife backed out the garage with the door down.

Dr. Brad: How old are you sir?

Caller: Oh, about 84.

Dr. Brad: Is your son a retired Federal Postage Stamp Adhesive Inspector named Hubert?

Caller: Why, yes he is.

Dr. Brad: What a coincidence, your son is my neighbor! You should have been listening yesterday, we devoted the entire show to people with your problem.

Caller: What, crazy cats?

Dr. Brad: No, octogenarian incontinence. Crazy cats are the subject of tomorrow's show.

Director gives warm welcome, even to grumpy students

Dear Editor,

August fee payment in Ahearn has been equated to enduring Chinese water torture during the rainy season in the Amazon. In spite of the working conditions, a majority of the K-State staff maintained a positive, gracious attitude. I want to mention one person in particular, Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance.

Several times during those three days, I asked Larry to assist a sweaty, tired, angry, scared non-traditional student who had been told there was "no money!" He listened gently to their story and then proceeded to expedite their process. (Yes, money!).

He provided service to less than hospitable students and did it with grace-filled integrity.

Lighting stadium to fight cancer

ANNETTE RIEDL
Collegian

Hundreds of candles will glow all night at Memorial Stadium Saturday in honor of cancer victims.

The Riley County Unit of the American Cancer Society has organized a 12-hour Relay for Life to raise funds to aid the fight against cancer, Chairwoman Mary Stamey said.

Beginning at 6 p.m., teams will walk or run in a relay fashion around the track at Memorial Stadium until 6 a.m. Sunday, Stamey said.

Several Manhattan and campus teams have received pledges for their 12-hour run, Stamey said.

Teams from several departments, University libraries and the Women's Caucus, will participate, Carol Oukrup, head of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications said. The Alpha Delta Pi sorority, Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, Lamda Chi Alpha fraternity, and the Sigma Nu fraternity have also teamed up for the relay, Stamey said.

Relay organizers hope to raise $15,000 from the event, Cindy Wichman, publicity chairman, said.

Stamey said K-State receives about $400,000 in research grant money from the American Cancer Society. The community also receives financial support in service and rehabilitation projects and education.

The Relay for Life began in 1985 when Dr. Gordon Klatt, a surgeon and an American Cancer Society volunteer from Tacoma, Wash., ran and walked a local track, Wichman said. In 24 hours, he walked 81 miles, raising $27,000 for the ACS.

RELAY FACTS

To register a team of at least 10 walkers or runners, call the Relay Hotline at 587-4080. All pledges must be turned in at 6 p.m. Aug. 27.

From his experience, Dr. Klatt put together a relay event that raises more than $2 million each year to fight cancer, Wichman said.

The Riley County Unit has participated in the fund raiser since the state began sponsoring it three years ago, Stamey said.

Promise Keepers conference a 'pep rally for God'

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

A handful of students from K-State joined 52,000 men in throwing styrofoam airplanes and flying discs at each other in Folsom Coliseum at Boulder, Colo. on July 29-30.

"It's a meeting where men get together and have a pep rally for God," Andy Madison, graduate in biology, said.

Madison carpooled with three other men from Manhattan with the anticipation of being instructed. Instead, he said the conference was motivational.

Several of the topics discussed included sexual purity, family relations and men's roles in society.

Brent Stirtz, junior in secondary education, went to the conference with a group from Abiene. Although Stirtz did not know anyone he went with very well, he said he still felt a sense of unity.

"It was like we needed to be there," Stirtz said. "We all had the same purpose of pursuing a holy life."

In college life, Madison said, students come across a lot of different ideas and people.

"The speakers said that you must be able and willing to love everyone you come in contact with," Madison said.

Stirtz said one important topic that sticks out in his mind was a speech by Gary Smalley.

"He challenged us to take action," Stirtz said. "When someone does something else that bothers you, stop and thank them for showing you how selfish you are."

Madison said one of the topics that he felt applied to his life was about how he acts.

"In college, people should be able to look at how you deal with other students, take a test, or act at work and know that you are a Christian," Madison said.

Coleman left gap to be filled

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

With the loss of Andre Coleman to graduation, one might think that in the receiving corps there might be a missing link.

That's not the case.

Although Coleman will be tough to replace, the Cats have a plethora of young talent to fill the void.

"I don't think the team is going to change at all this year," Mitch Running, junior wide receiver, said. "We still have three or four wide receivers that can step in and catch the ball consistently."

Running

Leading the pack is sophomore wide receiver, Kevin Lockett. Last year, Lockett pulled down 50 receptions for 770 yards on his way to shattering the Big Eight Conference's freshman receiving record.

In addition to his receptions, he also snatched numerous awards including first-team freshman all-America honors (Football News), second-team all-Big Eight (AP) and first-team academic all-Big Eight.

"Hopefully I can make some more spectacular catches this year," Lockett said. "Basically I want to do what I did last year and do whatever it takes to improve as a receiver.

"Whatever it takes to help us win."

Despite the great season he had last year, Lockett isn't too worried about being double covered.

"I think with the type of offense we run you can't really concentrate on one receiver," Lockett said. "Since Andre is gone, I'll have a lot more catches this year, maybe some shorter passes."

Mitch Running is also returning after a good season last year. Running, the consummate possession receiver, grabbed 41 receptions for 466 yards, with 30 of the catches resulting in first downs. Running attributes his success to his work ethic.

"It's mostly hustle," Running said. "Playing hard, concentrating, taking a blow when you have to, just whatever it takes."

After an impressive showing in spring drills, Ron Brown led the pack. Brown also turned in a team best 4.37 in the 40-yard dash at winter conditioning.

Schwieger was K-State's first wide receiver off the bench last year and finished with four catches for 71 yards. He also recorded an outstanding spring game for the No. 1 offense as he managed seven receptions for 83 yards, including a 12-yard touchdown.

Dean is a transfer from Butler County Community College, where he led the nation with 1,036 receiving yards as a sophomore and was named the Jayhawk Conference player of the year. Dean led the conference in scoring with 20 touchdowns, receiving yards, kickoff returns and all-purpose yardage.

Coach Bill Snyder said Brian Rees, who played with the first team at the spring game last year, did not return for practice this year. Snyder did not give any reasons.

"I'm probably a better blocker than a receiver," Lojka said. "I'm fairly big, but I have worked on my receiving and I hope I'm able to do both well. That's my goal for the year."

When K-State goes to the two-tight end set, redshirt freshman Jarrett Grosdidier and sophomore Bobby Latiolais are candidates to fill the position.

"I think all of the tight ends we have are pretty good," Lojka said. "I think whoever they put on the field will do a good job."

WILDCAT DEPTH CHART

Lockett setting higher goals

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

One embarrassing incident last year tells K-State receiver Kevin Lockett's story appropriately.

"My redshirt year, when we played here and we huddled up before we ran out on the field, I fell," Lockett said, laughing about the game.

"People just kept trampling around on me. Eventually I got up and kept going. But no one knew me then."

Imagine how awkward Lockett would feel if he made the same blunder today.

Lockett was also the top freshman receiver in the nation a year ago, netting 770 yards with 50 receptions and four touchdowns during K-State's 9-2-1 season.

"Personally, it was very rewarding for me last year," said Lockett, who was a first-team academic all Big Eight selection with a 3.2 grade point average. "I came into the season not knowing what was going to happen.

"I knew I was going to play, but I didn't know how much I would contribute. After looking back at what I did, it meant a lot for me because it showed how much I meant to the team."

In the Cats' 16-16 tie against Colorado, he reeled in a 44-yard reception on fourth down and 15, setting up the game-tying field goal for Tate Wright with only seconds remaining.

The second-team all-Big Eight selection had a league-leading three 100-yard receiving games, including a 143-yard performance against Nebraska.

Lockett said one area of improvement for the receiving unit is depth.

This season, Lockett has set his individual and team goals higher.

"I'd like to be the first 1,000-yard receiver in Kansas State history," he said. "I'd love to be first-team all-Big Eight, and all-American if possible.

"Last year, our goal was to make it to a bowl game. Now that we have been, we're looking for higher things. Our main goal is to become the Big Eight champs and make it to the Orange Bowl."

Lockett said the all-America status may come as early as this year.

"We've got a lot of great returning starters and with Chad (May) back, it makes it easier for myself," he said. "I think it's within reach. I think that if we play well then a lot of these things that I want can happen."

Mendez, Neujahr waived

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Former K-State football standouts Jaime Mendez and Quentin Neujahr were waived from National Football League teams Tuesday.

The Eagles waived Mendez, who earned first-team all-America honors after last season.

Mendez owns K-State records for the most interceptions in a game and in a career.

Additionally, Mendez led K-State in unassisted tackles with 69.

Neujahr, who was waived by the Los Angeles Raiders, was a first-team all-Big Eight performer last season.

Neujahr

Both can be picked up by another NFL team and signed as free agents.

Thomas Randolph and Andre Coleman, who were drafted by the New York Giants and the San Diego Chargers in the second and third rounds, still remain on the teams' rosters.

Kenny McEntyre still remains on the Indianapolis Colts' roster after being signed as a free agent in April.

Big-time sports figures offered advice

I'm no Ann Landers or Dear Abby.

But every once in awhile, I do dream that someday I could be a famous advice columnist — an advice columnist to the sports world.

Personally, I think I should have gotten into this field a long time ago, at least before some of the events that took place in the wide world of sports this summer.

Maybe there's still time, though, for my good, wholesome, objective advice to save some famous sports figures before it's too late. If any of you are reading this, listen up.

First off, to K-State's own Chad May. Chad, I think it's safe to say that Wildcat fans everywhere were impressed by last year's performance. Here you are, an unknown quarterback from California who bursts onto the Big Eight scene, leading K-State to its best season ever and first bowl game victory in history. Someone could have made a movie about it — after all the Copper Bowl hype, I'm surprised no one did.

But Chad, that was then. Much is riding on your shoulders. Some football analysts have ranked you as high as the third-best quarterback in the nation, while many K-Staters are even talking Orange Bowl.

My point is, Chad, don't get too caught up in all the talk that you forget to do your job. You were very lucky this summer that one too many 12-oz. curls didn't blow your whole year before it even began. You've got a million-dollar arm, May, but if you're not careful, you could have a 10-cent season.

To Barry Switzer, new head coach of the Dallas Cowboys. Barry, I've read your book, "Bootlegger's Boy," so I really feel as if I already know you. I'm doing this because I care, so pay attention, Barry.

Although the media blamed you for much of the trouble that went on at Oklahoma while you were there, no one can deny that you are one heck of a football coach. Leading a team to three national championships is no small task, and it was feeding the OU football monster that cost you your job.

It's ironic that you're in Texas now, and all those Texas fans who hated you during the Red River War have to eat their Longhorn pride as you take the helm of Jerry Jones' Cowboys.

Here's the deal, Barry. You've got too much spirit to let anyone like Jones control you like he did Jimmy Johnson. Jerry Jones needs to learn a lesson, and you're just the man to do it. Here's how.

NICOLE O'NEILL

After you lead Dallas to a third straight Super Bowl title this year, just step down. Take the money and run. You're in a no-win situation whether you win or lose.

If you win, they'll say any coach could have won with players like Troy Aikman and Emmitt Smith. And if you lose, they'll say you couldn't coach in the NFL. When the dust settles, go back to Oklahoma and take over when the Sooners fire Gary Gibbs.

To O.J. Simpson. Juice, We thought we knew ya. Truth is, I still have this gut feeling that you were set up, but it's getting harder and harder to defend you.

I and most of the country wants to believe you're innocent. We want to believe that this is just one of your Naked Gun movies, but it's not.

Since we probably won't know the truth for a long time, here's my advice. Ignore all the O.J. jokes going around. Don't make your story into a made-for-TV movie. And, if you did commit the crime, admit it and put this sad chapter of your life to rest.

To our new basketball coach, Tom Asbury. Well, Tom, it looks like you're doing everything right so far. You've wowed the press, threatened KU, gotten some recruits and hired an excellent staff. Now comes the tough part — winning ballgames.

Just keep in mind that it took Bill Snyder five years to take K-State to a bowl game. We're not expecting you to take us to the Final Four this season.

In the past few years, the basketball program has been losing more than just games — it's been losing its Purple Pride. Hey, if you can just get the fans excited again, even when we take on teams like UMKC, we'll be ready when Roy's Boys come to town.

Kansas AIDS researcher to speak on gender issues in science community

STEFFANY J. CARREL
Collegian

One of the first AIDS researchers in Kansas will conduct a seminar today on her work as a scientist.

Dr. Donna Sweet, chair of internal medicine at St. Francis Regional Medical Center in Wichita, will talk about being "A Female Scientist in Kansas" at 6 p.m. today in Ackert 324.

K-State's Howard Hughes Medical Institute Science Initiative Program is sponsoring the seminar, and everyone is invited to attend.

Sheryl Kelly, administrative assistant and intern nurse at St. Francis, works closely with Sweet and said she will talk about being a woman professional and about women professionals in the field of medical research.

"She wants to share the things she's come up against as one of the first female scientists in Kansas," Kelly said.

Sweet had been teaching when she decided to go into medicine, Kelly said.

"This was back in the days when they asked, 'Why do you want to stop teaching? Do you really think you'll be any happier in medicine than in teaching?'" Kelly said.

"It has been challenging for her. She has definitely fought an uphill battle," she said.

Sweet has been dealing with the HIV virus and AIDS since 1982, when she first started following it academically, doing research in her field.

"The very first AIDS patient in Kansas came to Dr. Sweet," Kelly said.

Reita Currie, registered nurse and health educator at Lafene Health Center, said she has heard Sweet speak several times over the past few years and is familiar with her work.

"She is a very hard-working, caring, compassionate human being," Currie said. "I come in contact with many patients with AIDS who have her as their physician — people who drive the three hours to Wichita to see her — and they are very satisfied with her care."

In addition to treating more than 400 patients with HIV and AIDS in Wichita, Sweet finds time to travel the state to give seminars and talk about her care and the strides in her research, Currie said.

"In spite of her full-time schedule, she is still willing to talk to groups. No matter what or where, she will talk about this issue," she said. "She is incredibly dedicated."

Sweet is not afraid of the controversy that is often associated with AIDS, Currie said.

"She stands up for what she believes in and is absolutely committed to this disease and finding a cure," Currie said. "She believes that we are all fighting the same battle."

Along with treating patients with HIV and AIDS, Sweet has her own medical practice and is a professor of medicine.

"One of her great loves is teaching," Kelly said. "And so she really likes working with the younger medical students in residence.

"One reason she keeps her practice is to provide a vast experience to her residents. From dealing with young healthy people to older people to patients with multiple sclerosis — she wants to show them the broad spectrum of life they will experience as physicians," Kelly said.

Born and raised in Kansas, Sweet has no intention of leaving for the east or west coast, where one might expect to see such a renowned doctor, Kelly said.

"Her patients are here, her family is here, her roots are here — she's home," she said.

Freshmen numbers up, overall down

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Preliminary figures show freshmen enrollment at K-State is up 2 percent from last year, but overall enrollment is down.

Enrollment for fall 1994 is 18,622, but University Registrar Don Foster said he estimated that after twenty days, enrollment will climb to 20,400.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, said the increase in enrollment was expected, so there has been some planning done, such as increasing the number of sections for classes and adding more seats.

Bosco said K-State has done very well adjusting because of the patience of students and cooperation of faculty and staff. He said there has been a problem getting the state legislature to set aside enough money for the school.

There are many reasons the number of freshmen and transfer students is up, Bosco said.

"K-State remains the No. 1 choice of Kansas high-school seniors because of its quality faculty and its outstanding students," he said.

"There's also the addition on the library and the new art museum, and I'm sure that the Copper Bowl hasn't hurt, either," Bosco said.

Bill Pallett, co-director of the Office of Educational Advancement, said there are also more high-school seniors in the state.

Pallett said there were 25,889 high-school seniors in 1992, and he expects there'll be 33,000 by the year 2000. The number of seniors tends to stay at around 33,000, he said.

A record number of students are enrolled in the College of Technology at K-State-Salina, Brown said. There are also more students enrolled in the agriculture, education, and architecture and design colleges.

Twenty days after registration, enrollment figures will be given to the Kansas Board of Regents to decide how much state money the University receives, Foster said.

Task force has 2 options for Northview residents

SEE OVER-CROWDING Page 12

MEETING

The boundry readjustment meeting will be at 7 tonight at the Robinson Education Center, 2031 Poyntz Ave.

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Fierce backlash from parents in the Northview area over a proposed boundary realignment, prompted the Superintendent's office to form a community task force looking into other alternatives for realignment.

"There were 50-75 people coming to those first meetings," said Dave Braddock, Dix Addition homeowner and Northview area community task force representative.

Early on, the Associate Superintendent Dave Mickey, maintained that the only homes affected would be those in the Dix addition, Braddock said.

Gradually, more people from the Strong and Gross additions got involved when Dix residents explained that their kids would also be bused to Bluemont School, Braddock said.

He said the superintentendent's office did not talk about all the areas that would be affected.

"They figured that the smaller the area you said, the fewer people you would upset," Braddock said of the Superintendent's Office.

The first option consists of removing the children affected by the grandfather clause, (children who have moved across town, but whose parents maintain an address in another school boundary) and putting them in their respective districts. The option also includes the removal of any transfer students who currently attend Northview School. This would bring the population at Northview to within eight of the Superintendent's office goal of 480.

The community task force also questions the busing of 155 kids out of Northview and 39 children in from other schools. The school district can not be reimbursed for the cost of busing them in.

The second option would include the omission of the grandfathered and transfer children, plus 52 children in the Mission Avenue area who are 2-1/2 miles from Bluemont School. That is the required distance to receive reimbursement for busing.

Braddock is also concerned that his children might not accurately be assessed in another school.

"At Northview they have been trying a system of cooperative learning where they put fourth, fifth and sixth graders in the same class," Braddock said. "So in some subjects children are at the sixth grade level while at others they might be at the fourth grade level."

Dave Mickey, associate superintendent, said that Braddock's concern was probably valid, but that other students have made transitions.

"He's probably right, but we have students move across town all the time and they don't seem to have a problem," Mickey said. "I can't speak to his particular kid."

Braddock said that busing students to another school outside their immediate community goes against one of the school board's own credos.

"They have this thing called outcomes-based education goals, and part of that deals with community based schools," Braddock said. "How can you have a community based school, when you tear out part of the community?"

Charlie Henry, a 10-year-old student who currently attends Northview, doesn't like the idea of being bused to the Bluemont school.

"I don't really like it," Henry said. "I don't know why they are doing it. I'm used to my friends at Northview."

Pending changes, GOP has votes to kill crime bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Republican senators claimed sufficient strength Tuesday to thwart a $30 billion crime bill if Democrats do not accept changes to the measure.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole brushed aside Clinton's call to continue the bipartisan spirit that was established in the House and accused the president of an 11th hour bid for GOP support.

Clinton had exhorted every senator, without regard to party, to work for passage of the bill that had cleared the House 235-195 Sunday, with 46 Republican votes, after 10 grueling days of behind-the-scenes negotiations.

But Republican opponents stood by their promise to subject the measure to a budgetary point of order — that financing provisions technically violate the Congressional Budget Act. The threat to throw a procedural roadblock in the way of passage raised a specter of renewed political gridlock mirroring the battle in the House.

Supporters of the bill had to amass 60 votes, under the Senate rules, to beat back the GOP attempt to derail it. But Dole released a letter with 40 signatures of Republicans pledging to back the point-of-order challenge. Adding his vote would bring that to 41, denying proponents the necessary 60 votes in the 100-member chamber.

Dole and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell met Tuesday afternoon Dole said the crime bill should be amendable and offered 13 amendments, including one that would strip out the ban on assault-style firearms. The National Rifle Association has lobbied hard against the measure.

Mitchell wanted a vote on the bill as it is now written, telling Republicans they could bring up their amendments as a separate bill later in the year, the participants said.

Dole called the proposal laughable.

"We would have absolutely zero leverage. The House would never take it up," Dole said.

Mitchell said he believes Republicans are trying to kill the assault weapons. On this issue, the Republicans are under the control of the NRA, he said, exempting those who voted for gun control.

Dole told reporters he had warned the White House a week ago not to ignore the GOP senators in planning strategy to get the bill passed.

"We were ignored," he said. "We were never contacted by anyone at the White House."

Meanwhile, Clinton and other senior administration officials were making phone calls, seeking sufficient support to surmount the point-of-order challenge by GOP opponents.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said she could not say how many votes the White House had lined up. But she said "we're hopeful" of having the 60 necessary to beat back GOP opponents.

Republicans led by Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas argued that the measure's language establishing a trust fund to finance $30 billion in anti-crime programs violates the budget law.

A letter released by Dole, urging negotiations with Democrats on changes in the measure, was signed by 40 of the Senate's 44 Republicans. His vote would bring that total to 41.

"Unless most of our concerns are resolved, we will support you and vote" to sustain the point of order, the letter said.

But several senators who did sign the letter do not plan to support the point of order even though the letter committed them to do so, said one of those senators, who spoke only on grounds of anonymity. The senator said they signed only to encourage negotiations.

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said he got the idea for the letter from Clinton.

"He called me at 11 o'clock last night," Warner said. "He said, 'Is there anyway short of outright confrontation on the point of order that we can talk about it?' "

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said Republicans want to cut back on the fat and get the tough-on-crime provisions into the bill. He called the pending crime bill a big-spending bill that deleted some tough anti-crime provisions passed by the Senate, including mandatory federal penalties for state crimes of violence involving guns and sales of drugs to minors or use of minors to sell drugs.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Writer can't accept break-up

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing to you because I want your "outside" opinion. I really need help. My boyfriend and best friend of two years has just broke it off with me and I can't seem to accept it.

I am in such great pain over the situation because I thought everything was going great. He's claiming that he isn't so sure that I am "the one" and wants to date other people. There were no signs leading up to this — we even took a vacation in July where he met my extended family.

I just don't understand how two people can share everything and one day after two years claim they aren't sure this is it. I gave him some space so I could collect my thoughts and try and see his point of view. I just want so much to be with him and I know he still loves me,so how can he be attracted to other girls?

I am trying to accept all this but my heart keeps saying I love him, he loves me and he will come back. What can I do?

Signed,
Losing Weight and Sleep

Dear Losing ,

Having your significant other tell you they need some time to "date around" is never easy.

It sounds to me your boyfriend is confused about what he wants right now. Surely after two years of being together he still has strong feelings for you.

Just because he wants some time to figure things out doesn't necessarily mean he's interested in some other woman. Maybe the idea of you being "the one" as you say, spooked him.

As hard as it may be, if he asked for time alone,give it to him. It may seem that he's moving on with his life, but keep in mind you're moving on with yours too.

Good luck!

Zydeco plays 'Five Card Stud'

Buckwheat Zydeco is really a man by the name of Stanley "Buckwheat" Dural Jr.

Zydeco is a style of music made popular by the French speaking Creoles in Southwestern Louisiana, characterized by its thick accordion sound.

Introductions aside, "Five Card Stud," Zydeco's first album in three years comes out as his most inventive to date.

Instead of the music easily heard permeating from the nightspots of New Orleans, Zydeco brings elements of rock, country, R&B and gospel to "Five Card Stud." Guest musicians on the album include Los Lobos frontman David Hidalgo, country star Willie Nelson and gospel singer Mavis Staples.

The album was produced by Los Lobos' Steve Berlin, His and Hidalgo's presence on the album give a distinct Latin flavor to many of the songs.

The album comes through with a fun sound, spicy as a big plate of blackened redfish.

New money will bring more entertainment

"One does not want to slide into the season, sneaking the thing open. One tries to find something that will attract people's attention," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said about the 1994-95 McCain performance series.

Booking the Principal Dancers of New York City Ballet, performing on Sept. 27, is one way to open a season with a bang.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

The season continues its performance power with a classic Mozart opera, "Don Giovanni," next and followed by Andrew Lloyd Webber's hit musical, "Evita."

What could possibly follow those three powerhouse events?

Well, actually, a very diverse and fairly balanced season that is sure to delight audiences.

"I've tried to find folk or ethnic programs over the years that would open people's eyes to some of the wealth of things besides the sort of traditional fare of a ballet and an opera and an orchestra," Martin said.

Navajo-Ute R. Carlos Nakai, who plays a cedar flute, and William Eaton, who has created his own instruments, will be playing music inspired by nature.

Martin said the Ballet National du Senegal is a once in a lifetime event.

The ballet's theme, which is largely displayed on the new McCain Season posters, explores West African music through song, dance and music.

For the lover of traditional fare, there are still numerous events offered.

This fall, five actors from the Royal National Theatre, the Royal Shakespeare Company and the BBC's Shakespeare series will spend one week at K-State as artists in residence.

They will offer two performances of "MacBeth."

In January, a touring production of "Guys and Dolls" will be presented at McCain. This production is largely influenced by the current show running on Broadway to great success.

Unbeknownst to most Manhattanites is the fact that Damon Runyon, a former local, wrote the story that inspired Frank Loesser to create what most critics argue as one of the best American musicals ever written.

For people looking for a sure-fire audience-pleaser, the New Vic Theatre of London will present Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" in a vibrant, fresh new production style.

The play focuses on which of the travelers can tell the most outrageous tale to the audience. At the conclusion of the show, the audience will vote for the most outrageous.

There are parts of the performance when audience members are asked to come on-stage, Martin said.

Jazz devotees can take solace in the Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra's concert. The group was founded with the responsibility of promoting jazz in America.

If the season seems top-heavy, it is. When booking events, Martin doesn't have control of what time those events are available to play McCain.

When you live in Manhattan, you take what you can get when you can get it.

The only disturbing aspect of the season would be the proximity of musical concert events.

I can't say that students would enjoy Trio Fontenay's performance one week and the Ying Quartet playing the next.

When it comes to the more classical concerts booked at McCain, the house is usually filled with local subscribers and a few student stragglers.

Even though half the house might be sold, there is still an audience for that event, Martin said.

McCain's ticket prices have not drastically risen in the past three years, which is always good news for students.

Martin suggests that students should not feel overwhelmed by the price of season tickets. If you don't think you would like to attend every event of the season, you can purchase your tickets through the Select-A-Series.

You receive 10 percent off the regular student price and you only have to pick a minimum of seven events.

If you still don't want the commitment, buy season tickets with a friend or a group of friends, Martin recommends.

That way, you can decide which events you wish to attend.

McCAIN TICKETS

Tickets for the McCain Auditorium season can be purchased from noon to 5 p.m. McCain box office lobby. Call 532-6428 for more information.

Overcrowding, new school causes for boundary change

MIKE HIND
Collegian

A proposed boundary realignment for schools in Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 has parents at one local grade school worried that their children may be taken out of their neighborhood school and bused to another one.

"You buy your house for this to put them into a good school," Cheri Nason, Northview parent, said.

"My kids have under a mile to walk," Nason said. "Now due to overcrowding, they are going to bus them across the two most dangerous intersections in town, Tuttle Creek and Casement, and Allen and Tuttle Creek."

Dave Mickey, associate superintendent for USD 383, said there are three reasons for the boundary realignment.

"We're overcrowded, opening a new school, and we're downsizing all of the existing schools. That's why we are changing the boundaries," Mickey said.

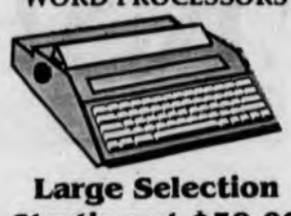
In addition to overcrowding problems in Northview, Amanda Arnold and Marlatt schools were also experiencing overcrowding problems, Mickey said.

Under the proposal, all students that go to Northview and who are living south of Allen Road and east of Tuttle Creek Road will be bused to Bluemont School.

Northview school would then get students from some areas that are in the Bluemont district and Woodrow Wilson students that live in the state-lake area.

"It looks like a lot of territory, but there are only about 25 or 26 kids in this whole area," Mickey said.

The new school, named after Frank Bergman, will be located near the Candlewood area. The school will take the area north of Kimball Avenue. The school's boundary will then remain on the west side of Seth Childs Road and will include the area known as Top of the World and Eagle Ridge out to U.S. Highway 24, Mickey said.



The former Bluemont School area, north of the lake running south on Tuttle Creek Boulevard to Marlatt Avenue, would also be part of the new school zone.

The new school would also include Hunter's Island and the area south of Fort Riley Boulevard, which was in the Theodore Roosevelt School boundary.

Nason feels doubly slighted by both nature and the school administration.

"We went through a flood last summer. Now this summer we have to worry about putting kids in a new school."

The proposal is set for the '95-'96 school year.

Woman wants to warn others of rape

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

The name of the woman in this story has been withheld to protect her identity. She makes a reference to another rape that occurred the next night. The Collegian was unable to find this reported in the the Riley County Police Department's public log.

A student who was raped Monday wants other women to know that rape can happen in Manhattan, and they need to be careful.

"The police have been very good to me, but they have not been good about getting the word out," the woman said.

She said she felt the Riley County Police Department didn't want anyone to know that the rape happened.

The woman said she was expecting her roommate to come home Sunday night, so she left the lights on in her apartment and the door unlocked.

"We almost always leave the door unlocked," she said.

Monday morning, the woman said she woke up around 5:30 a.m. to find a man's hand over her face.

"The first thing he said to me was, 'I'm going to kill you. If you scream or look at me, I'm going to kill you,'" she said.

The woman said he was very worried that she might look at him. He kept repeating that if she looked at him, he would kill her, she said.

"He said, 'If you don't like me, I'm going to kill you,'" the student said.

After he raped her, the student said he got up and she looked the other way because he warned her again not to look at him.

There was a blanket over her head, she said, but she couldn't remember how it got there or when the blanket was placed over her head.

"He was standing by my bed saying something to me, but I don't know what he said," she said.

As he walked out of her room, she said he was still talking to her. Boxes stacked in the hallway were left undisturbed, she said.

"He had to walk out of there coolly and calmly," the woman said.

After he left, she said she called 911 from the phone by her bed, and she stayed on her bed until someone came.

"He didn't hit me," she said.

"If anything, he slapped me when he put his hand over my face."

The woman said she felt that the rape should have been printed in the papers on Tuesday.

"It happened to someone else the very next night," she said.

She said she thought the second rape might not have happened if her rape had been published in the newspapers.

She wants women to know rape does happen in Manhattan and that they should take precautions.

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said she would like to underscore the importance of making a timely report to the authorities in the event of rape.

"There is assistance available through the Women's Resource Center and the Crisis Center in making the report," she said.

The first thing a victim should do is get to a hospital without disturbing any physical evidence, Davis said.

Victims should not shower, change clothes or brush their teeth before they go to the hospital. Any physical evidence can be used to identify an attacker should be preserved.

"Until there are serious consequences for rape, there will be rape," Davis said.

"The only way to enforce these consequences is to report the rape."

The Women's Resource Center is also available to the friends and family members of rape victims.

The Center offers help in dealing with their own feelings and to assist them in providing optimal support to the person who has been raped.

The woman said the RCPD sealed the report Monday morning. No green sheet was available from RCPD on the incident.

She said she called the Collegian because she objected to her trauma referred to as a sexual assault in the Thursday issue.

"I really feel it should say raped and not assaulted," the woman said.

"It makes it sound like he slapped me a couple of times, robbed me and left."

WHAT TO DO IF YOU ARE RAPED

- Get to a hospital immediately.
- Preserve physical evidence – do not bathe, change clothes or brush teeth.
- Get a medical checkup.
- Call the police if you want to file a report.

Student says English test discriminatory

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

When Azalea Whitley received a letter admitting her as a transfer student to K-State, she thought everything was fine.

But when she read the next letter from Director of Admissions Richard Elkins saying she was required to take an English proficiency test, she couldn't believe it.

Whitley

Whitley, a freshman in apparel and textile design, was born in Mexico but said she emigrated to the United States in 1983 and became a naturalized citizen in 1992.

After receiving most of her schooling in Liberal and spending a year at Fort Hays State University, Whitley said she couldn't believe K-State admissions would doubt her English ability.

"I speak better English than Spanish. I think in English," Whitley said, who enrolled as Azalea Michel before her marriage this summer.

"I picked up English really quick because it was important to me," she said. "The only time I speak Spanish is when I speak to my mom and my two brothers."

Fans get early look at Cats

SACHA HANES
Collegian

About 3,500 K-State football fans filled the student section for Fan Appreciation Day at KSU Stadium Thursday.

Organizers for the event wanted to get people pumped for the season, and that's what they did, Erick Harper, director of advertising and sales for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said.

"This is great, fabulous. I am really happy with the student and alumni turnout," Harper said.

"We wanted to come out and see how we look. We are really excited for the first game," Eric Pack, senior in radio and television, said.

"No one was into the game a few years ago. Now, it is incredible. It is bigger now than it ever has been," Frank Hill, K-State alumni, said.

Bill Snyder, coach of the Wildcats, and the team captains addressed the crowd after 40 minutes of practice.

"I can't really tell how we are going to do from this short practice, but it is fun to come out and see this crowd," Sonja Berry, Manhattan resident, said.

After Snyder and the team captains spoke, fans took to the field to meet the players and get autographs.

Chad May, K-State quarterback, seemed to be the crowd favorite as about 50 fans gathered around him.

Players said they were impressed with the turnout.

"I never dreamed to stand here and see this many people for a practice," Laird Veatch, a linebacker and a team captain, said.

"We've got all of you out there, and you make it all worthwhile," Mike Ekeler, linebacker and team captain, said.

Harper said they would like to do this every year, but they will see how it goes year to year.

"We are going to do the same for basketball — give everyone a chance to meet the new coach and players," Harper said.

Groups failed to use allocated funds last year

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Student Governing Association has more money left than expected from last year's budget, but at least one student senator is concerned about this windfall.

Brandon Clark, SGA Allocations Committee chairman, reported on this extra money at the Student Senate meeting last night. He said $29,075 was returned to the allocations fund by groups who failed to use it.

"A break-down in communication has occurred between student organizations and SGA," he said.

Clark said there are several reasons why student organizations do not spend the allocated money. Groups may not understand procedures, or groups may ask for money before making definite plans.

"Since the groups are not spending money, it means that the school is losing programs that benefit students," Clark said. "There is no point in allocating money unless it is spent."

Clark plans to correct this program by sponsoring four allocation

Have an extra $25? Ride your bike on sidewalks

Bicyclists beware.

Beginning Monday, $25 citations will be issued to bicyclists riding on sidewalks across campus. Bicyclists stopped today will receive warnings, K-State Police said.

Restrictions for bicycling across campus are nothing new. However, with the addition of the campus bike patrol, enforcement is possible, officer Bob Fenton, campus bike patrolman, said.

Fenton said he began handing out warnings Monday to cyclists not riding on proper bike paths.

"It hasn't been enforced previously because the department didn't have the manpower," Fenton said.

"Now that the bike patrol is in place and construction has narrowed sidewalks, we're just enforcing it more," he said.

The restrictions are necessary to decrease the chances of bicycle and pedestrian accidents on campus, he said.

Tickets for riding on the sidewalks have increased by $15 from last year as a part of a

Soldiers depart to fight fires

More than 500 Fort Riley soldiers — mainly from the engineer battalion — were deployed to Idaho City, Idaho, Thursday afternoon.

The troops were sent to help fight the wildfires that are causing devastation throughout the state. They will be replacing the soldiers from Fort Hood and will be in Idaho no longer than 30 days, Lt. Col. Thomas Bostick said.

.The troops have been thoroughly prepared for the job, Bostick said.

"They've had intensive training here, and they will also have 16 hours of training once they reach Idaho City," Bostick said.

Even though they will be in training when they first arrive in Idaho, the troops will be helping to extinguish the fires, Tom Tobin, Fort Riley military logistics coordinator, said.

"While they will be on ground training, they will be mopping up until they are ready to go into hotter areas," Tobin said.

The training stressed safety, he said.

"There is not a tree or a house in the world — or Idaho for that matter — that is worth a person's life," Tobin said.

"We certainly don't want to go out there and be too macho or too Rambo-like. We want to fight safely," Bostick said.

The fires are dangerous, but the morale of the troops is high, Col. Henry Leonard said.

"I haven't yet had a soldier complain about going, but I've had lots of complaints from those who are having to stay behind," Henry said.

Even though the soldiers know that fire-fighting is going to be hard work, they are hoping it will break the monotony of the day-to-day drills they endure at Fort Riley, Pfc. Gary Bugh said.

"I know it's going to be hard. I'm prepared for that, but at least we're getting ready to do something," Bugh said.

The fear level was not high, because they were prepared and trusted their commanding officers, specialist Paul Senn said.

"Of course, everyone is a little scared, but will be all right," Senn said.

"Everyone is going to have fear, but we'll get that taken care of once we get there and start fighting the fires. Everyone is mostly just excited," Lt. Mary Scott said.

Multiple Launch System tested

"Fire!"

Whomp!

On Thursday, 24 rockets from the Multiple Launch Rocket System were launched during a live-fire exercise at Fort Riley.

The rockets were launched by Battery B of the 6th Field Artillery, commanded by Capt. Gerold Hajek, which is the only battery in the division to have the MLRS.

The MLRS is a mobile automatic system that can fire up to 12 surface-to-surface rockets.

Its crew of three can fire all 12 rockets in less than a minute and hit any target within 32 kilometers.

"One rocket is equal to the firepower of 10 howitzers," said Lt. Col. Lee Flake, executive officer for the Division of Artillery.

The MLRS is usually assigned to eliminating enemy artillery batteries.

Because of rigid safety requirements, the firing of the rockets was slow. Extensive safety checks had to be made both before and during the firing. One of the main concerns of both Lt. Col. Flake and Capt. Hajek was to verify safety first. The entire area was closed off and was swept to ensure no one was in the area.

In addition, the fire department set small, controlled fires to clear off patches of ground where the MLRS would fire, since it could easily set fires in the dry brush.

The division fires the MLRS every six months, and is allowed to fire up to 54 rockets a year.

Members of Battery B Sixth Field Artillery fire rockets from a Multiple Launch Rocket System Thursday afternoon at Fort Riley. The MLRS is operated by a three-man crew and capable of firing 24 rockets at targets 18 miles away within ten minutes using radar and computer targeting systems to lock onto its targets.

$25 tickets fair for sidewalk bicyclers

Pedestrians may walk with greater ease on Monday. K-State Police will issue $25 tickets to bicyclers who ride on the sidewalk.

K-State Police will issue $25 tickets to anyone riding a bicycle on campus sidewalks.

During the first week of school, police told bicyclers to stop and dismount. But nothing more was done.

This measure will do more than get bicyclers off the sidewalks — it will keep them off. Students will remember the sting of a $25 fee.

Bicyclers on sidewalks are dangerous.

When most people are walking, they are not prepared to dive into lawns or scale construction walls to get out of the way of crazed bike riders. Besides, they should not have to be ready.

Walking is a great time for daydreaming or self-examination. Twenty-five bucks is a fair price for bike riders who deprive pedestrians of this time.

The bike-riding law is not a new one. Police were unable to enforce it. Snagging violators on foot or in patrol cars was difficult. But now campus police are patrolling on bicycles.

If you ride a bike to school, this doesn't mean you can't ride it anymore. There are still the streets and bike paths that surround the campus.

This citation is not meant to detour students from riding. Bicycling is good exercise and doesn't create pollutants like a car does. The measure just protects those on foot.

Gangs force schools to use dress codes

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

With gangs in all classes, races and regions of America, communities find themselves challenged with how to stop the violence.

The problem, formerly a problem for the U.S.'s largest cities, now pits middle America against what amounts to prohibition-era bedlam.

Manhattan, Topeka, Wichita, Dodge City, Garden City, Liberal, and other Kansas municipalities have found themselves unequipped to deal with gang violence.

Some towns, such as the first three, are more paralyzed than anything else.

It's as if these cities are swatting at a python with a rolled up newspaper — a python that is literally taking our babies out of our arms and killing them.

There are many steps to take to dismantle the violent gangs that dominate cities, but one often ignored measure is beginning to gain credibility.

For awhile now, some schools in California have been experimenting with mandatory school uniforms with great success. Schools once teeming with gore have been turned around, as have once-awry students.

On Aug. 23, California Gov. Pete Wilson signed into law legislation that clears the way for all of California's public school districts to mandate uniform dress codes.

The law does not require every school to have one but instead allows districts to adopt them if needed. Idealists probably view this law as a free-speech matter when it is more appropriately a life-and-death matter.

In the case of Tinker v. Des Moines, the U.S. Supreme Court stated that while schools are not free speech zones, schools must have a compelling interest to dictate students' speech.

Schools in Des Moines, Iowa, attempted to prevent clothing that, while not disruptive, protested the Vietnam War.

Gangster speech in the form of clothes can pose a clear and present danger to the safety and peace of the majority of innocent people in the school as well as a gang's adversaries.

The clothes, earrings and shoes one wears to school can get a person assaulted, even killed.

By instituting uniform dress codes, schools can end the morning fashion shows and get back to teaching.

Gangwear is used for the same purpose as military fatigues. It establishes comeraderie among those on the same side of a war and identifies enemies.

Other dress stereotypes in schools hardly fulfill these purposes, but they do cause other problems, although less deadly ones, along income, class and racial lines.

Contrary to opinion, gangs are alive and well here. Manhattan's lack of bad parts of town is deceiving because there is no one specific area in town where gang crimes are concentrated. They occur everywhere.

Violence outside Manhattan's schools has bled into them. There have been assaults against staff members, and even students of junior high age have been hospitalized and arrested.

Do any students carry guns? Will Manhattan have to find out the hard way before taking effective actions?

Administrators in town have already taken steps to prevent violence in schools by banning gang signs, sagging pants and long coats that can conceal weapons, but these actions are not enough.

Not enough unless Manhattan wants the gangs, crime and reputation of an Omaha, Neb. With a few more ounces of prevention like uniforms, gang violence in schools can be nipped in the bud.

While there's no way to control what gang members do outside of school, a daily de-escalation of gang warfare may serve to reduce violence among those who wish to learn and every student will be able to see how alike we are when we shed the veneers that divide us.

It is absolutely crucial that Kansas does something drastic to stop the gang violence that is bringing public education to a screeching halt.

Mandatory school uniforms for those districts that would find it useful certainly would do less harm to free speech than it would help Kansas' kids to live and learn.

Better be prepared for drop/add experience

The next time I go to drop/add, I'm going to bring smuggled copies of important-looking Bluemont papers. I'm going to bring my own stamp pad, and I'm going to shamelessly forge every signature they ask for.

CHRISTY LITTLE

Last semester I had a bad enrollment experience. It all happened the day of the eclipse.

I don't know how many of you remember that day. It was the second-to-last day of finals, and as a result, many like me didn't even know the eclipse was happening, even though trees were casting cresent shadows everywhere, and little crowds of people were staring up at the sky.

But even eclipses aren't very important when you've got drop/add business to do.

I approached the desk with my drop/add slip. The woman at the desk pointed out that I lacked an adviser's signature and the appropriate paperwork to take an honors class. I explained that my adviser had been MIA since spring break, and this class was part of a block I already was enrolled for. Then, I pulled out nine papers proving I was in the honors program.

She refused me anyway.

I had expected this. I have never managed to do drop/add in one quick and easy visit, and I know no one who ever has. I wondered if they really had many students trying to add honors classes they would get no credit for.

I marched over to Bluemont and began pleading my case.

My plight took a new turn when a receptionist at the pre-professional office pointed out that I would lose my scholarship if I did not get myself enrolled in 12 hours before leaving Manhattan, which I was going to do tomorrow.

She told me to try upstairs at the professional office. I wandered around hoping to accidently bump into my adviser. I wondered how I would find time to study for my Shakespeare final. Neither of those things happened.

I hit every floor in Bluemont. I finally convinced a receptionist in the professional education office to sign my paperwork.

"They don't know what they're doing over there," the receptionist said.

I returned to Willard.

"You need a purple paper and a stamp," my friend said.

"I was told I didn't need a stamp," I asserted. "The receptionist told me so." If the receptionist said so, it was as good as a presidential pardon.

"They don't know what they're doing over there," the Willard lady said (had I heard this before?). "You can get a stamp by going to the pre-professional office and seeing what you're lacking on your transcript."

"Why didn't you tell me that my first visit?" I snarled.

I spent two more hours on campus rotating among Bluemont, Anderson and Willard halls. I did not ever study for my Shakespeare final.

As for the momentous, once-in-a-lifetime eclipse, I accidently looked straight at it and had a monster headache for the rest of the day.

I returned to Willard.

"Just enroll me in three sections of gym," I pleaded. "I'll fix it next fall."

Denied.

Later equipped with signatures, stamps and purple, zebra-striped and pea-green papers, the Willard lady nonchalantly enrolled me in the regular section of my education class. The one I didn't need, remember?

I'm certain that both the college of education and the enrollment center have very efficient ways of enrolling students. It's just that they aren't in any agreement as to how that should be done.

The most K-State students can do is be prepared with as much paperwork as Willard can possibly ask for.

Ask your adviser what kinds of things the enrollment center will want to see.

Don't wait until the last minute to do your enrolling, either. Everyone is in such a rush to finish up that you may leave with only half of your instructions, like I did. That's why I had to make so many trips around a 90-degree section of campus.

The enrollment center should meet with every college and agree on what entitles a student to enroll in any given course. Each college has so many enrollment restrictions and flagrant demands for stamps, signatures and other enrollment paraphernalia for each of their classes that the enrollment center understandably becomes confused. The college of education, along with the other schools, could simplify the hodge-podge of paperwork so that we can all get through this business in one easy trip .

Perhaps that whole mess can be credited to the eclipse. I guess I'll find out when I go in to switch to the honors section.

Administrators meet with students

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Students had an opportunity Thursday to take their questions about campus issues directly to University administrators.

K-State administrators explained their jobs and answered questions at the "Meet Your Administrator" forum sponsored by the Union Program Council at noon in the K-State Union Courtyard.

About 40 people were present to meet Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life; James Coffman, University provost; Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of the Office of Student Activities and Services; Larry Moeder, director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance; and Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

Pat Carney, UPC issues and ideas committee chairman, asked the first round of questions and then invited participation from the floor.

Students showed concern for sidewalk traffic problems caused by the construction at Farrell Library.

One student asked if the fence around the construction site could be moved to create a wider passageway between Farrell and Lafene Health Center.

Traffic was stopped between Farrell and Lafene at 1:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Krause said. Some students have started to detour around the back side of Seaton Hall to avoid the crowded sidewalk, he said.

"Once we are past the demolition phase, that may change," he said. "I think as we gain more experience with it, we'll look at some other options."

In the meantime, Krause said students should find alternative routes around the construction whenever possible.

"I hope no one gets squashed or crushed against the fence," Coffman said.

Krause also addressed concerns about K-State's annexation to the city of Manhattan.

As far as Manhattan's authority over campus policies, there really isn't much of a change, he said.

When the University was brought in, city officials agreed that none of the municipal statutes would apply to campus unless the statute was already in effect on campus, Krause said.

The big change that campus will see is the payment of municipal sales tax, he said.

Campus purchases were already subject to state and county sales taxes, but annexation added the Manhattan municipal sales tax to all purchases.

As a result of annexation, all residents of the residence halls now qualify as citizens of Manhattan.

Students can now become registered voters in Riley County, giving students access to a political process that would give them a voice in what happens in Manhattan, Krause said.

"It melds the future of the city and campus together in a way it has never been before," Krause said.

Students as a group don't vote, he said. By not voting, they give up what political clout they have because legislators listen to the people who vote, he said.

Voter registration is available in the Student Services and Activities Office on the ground floor of the Union, Nolfi said.

Nolfi said she would like to see student government become more representative of the student population.

She said she sometimes plays the devil's advocate to make student senators think their ideas through more carefully.

"My role is to help them ensure they are getting the accurate information no matter what side they are on," she said.

"I think that, for the beginning of the year with students as busy as they are, turnout was exceptional," Carney said.

He said he hopes to have more events like this one throughout the year.

Public library auction set for Sunday

MOLLY WEIGEL
Collegian

It's not Christie's or Sotheby's, but a high bid at Manhattan Public Library's auction could put a Bruegel or a Wyeth on your wall.

The library is having a sale and silent auction to eliminate its record and art print collections.

The event begins at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Manhattan Public Library at the corner of Juliette and Poyntz avenues, Rosie Pettle, assistant director of the library, said.

Rather than throwing the collections away, the library is offering students and community members the opportunity to purchase them, she said.

Records will be sold for $1 each. The record collection is being eliminated due to the increased usage of compact discs, Pettle said.

"The records will be for sale on a first-come, first-serve basis until Saturday, Sept. 3."

Nearly 300 art prints will be sold in the silent auction. The prints range from old classics to modern art, Pettle said.

"We have a pretty good representation of every kind of art," she said. "There are a few Picasso works and a lot of impressionists."

Interested bidders should to go to the library, locate the print they are interested in and fill out a card at the reference desk with their name, address, phone number and bid amount, Pettle said.

On Sept. 19, the highest bidders will be notified, Pettle said, and at that time, they can pick up their prints by showing a picture ID or a library card.

The money raised from the sale and auction will be added to the audio/visual budget, she said.

CHIEFS TO PLAY BILLS

The Kansas City Chiefs will play the Buffalo Bills tonight at Rich Stadium in Buffalo. Kickoff is set for 7 p.m.

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

Jason Johnson, center, performs his blocking duties during an afternoon practice drill. Johnson holds the starting center position for the upcoming season after converting from tight end last season.

Cats answering offensive line questions

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

There are big questions lurking in the minds of Wildcat fans everywhere.

Who will replace Quentin Neujahr, Bryan Campbell and Eric Wolford on the offensive line?

Greenwood seems to be the most experienced at guard, as he started three games last year.

Oltmanns finds himself at full-time guard this season after handling the switch from the tackle position last season against Nebraska.

Johnson, who started his career at tight end, is now the Cats' No. 1 center. None of these players has seen a huge amount of playing time.

However, offensive tackle Barrett Brooks doesn't necessarily agree with that.

"A lot of people have been saying that we don't have experience, but the only position that really doesn't have any experience is the center position," Brooks said.

Brooks said he feels Johnson will have no problem playing in his first Big Eight Conference season.

Brooks

"Johnson can compensate for his inexperience with talent. He runs a 4.7 40 and weighs 265," Brooks said. "I think that more than compensates for inexperience."

Johnson weighed in at 225 last fall while working behind Quentin Neujahr at center.

Thanks to off-season workouts, Johnson has ballooned to 265.

Since adding the weight, Johnson said he is confident he can handle the center position.

"I learned a lot by playing under Quentin Neujahr, who was there to help me along and give me advice," Johnson said. "That really has made a difference."

"I feel very comfortable playing center," he said. "More comfortable than I did at tight end."

Running back J.J. Smith said his best friends on the line are ready.

"I feel very confident running behind them," Smith said.

That type of confidence and the presence of the potential first-round NFL draft pick Brooks, and the ever-improving veteran Jim Hmielewski, may produce a dominating line for the Cats.

Brooks is ranked as the fourth-best senior offensive lineman in the country by the NFL Draft Report and returns as a three-year starter.

With 16 career starts under his belt, Hmielewski brings similar experienced credentials to the line.

"I have absolutely no doubt our offensive line will handle things," head football coach Bill Snyder said. "Johnson has the potential to be one of the best centers the Big Eight has to offer, and the rest of the line is coming along great."

Despite his confidence in the starting line-up, Snyder said there is some thinness there.

One thing fans may notice is that Johnson isn't the only player to add girth in the off-season.

Hmielewski gained 15 pounds, from 295 to 310, in the off season. Oltmanns went from 285 to 300, as did Greenwood.

"We have four 300 pounders on the line and one guy that weighs 265 and is a real good athlete," Brooks said.

"I'm looking forward to getting down and dirty," he said.

Gaskins up for linebacker award

COLLEGIAN STAFF

K-State junior linebacker Percell Gaskins is one of 48 players who comprise the pre-season watch list for the 1994 Butkus Award, given annually to the nation's top collegiate linebacker.

Gaskins is also one of five Big Eight Conference linebackers to be mentioned, joining Ed Stewart and Troy Dumas of Nebraska, Ted Johnson of Colorado and Darryl Major of Missouri.

The award will be presented on Dec. 9 in Orlando by the Downtown Athletic Club of Orlando. The preliminary list will be trimmed to 10 semifinalists on Oct. 20, and the three finalists will be announced on Nov. 17.

Strike moves to day 15

ASSOCIATED PRESS

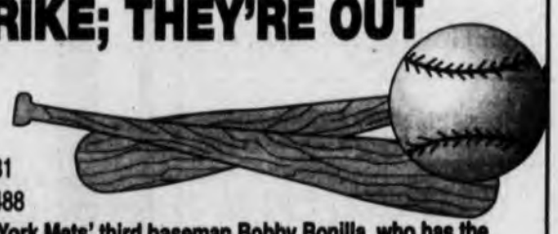
NEW YORK — Negotiations between striking players and baseball owners broke off today and no new talks were scheduled, dimming prospects that mediators can help end the two-week-old walkout quickly.

"People didn't walk out saying, 'We'll never talk to you again,'" Union head Donald Fehr said. "But clearly there was nothing else to say."

Richard Ravitch, lead negotiator for the owners, said when talks resume, they may involve smaller delegations from each side.

"At this point, perhaps there are other ways of getting this negotiation moving and we are going to try those," Ravitch said.

John Calhoun Wells, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, said the talks had been recessed, "subject to call," but Ravitch said Wells would remain in New York. Fehr said talks wouldn't resume for some significant time at least.



"We will stay in contact with both sides to discuss the most productive and useful format for these negotiations," Wells said.

The sides met together for less than 90 minutes, but people kept breaking off into small conversations at a time. Fehr said owners made no movement off their salary-cap proposal, and said he thought they were staying with it because they plan to impose it after the season. Federal law says a side can impose only its final offer previous to impasse.

"Nothing the players say or do is going to make a difference, except to say, 'Oh, please, give us a salary cap,'" Fehr said. "The owners feel a salary cap dwarfs all other considerations. Underline dwarf and add an explanation point."

With owners at the bargaining table for the first time, each side spent about two hours Wednesday explaining their positions.

Decisions affected by new NFL rules

In an attempt to make the National Football League more exciting, the league has installed some new rules.

The one that has received the most attention is the adoption of the two-point conversion.

When most people think about the implications that this addition will have, they have a very limited view.

They imagine a team scoring a touchdown at the end of a game and having the option to tie the score or go for the win.

The two-point conversion will have a much greater influence on the game than this one isolated situation.

Envision a team behind 21-10 in the fourth quarter.

Last year, the team would have had to score two touchdowns to win the game.

This year, the team could score a touchdown and a two-point conversion. Suddenly, they need only to score a field goal to send it into overtime. Personally, I like the rule. It will keep teams in games much longer and, as a result, make the contests much more exciting.

ESTON
ENZI

Another new rule involves where the ball is placed after a missed field goal. In previous years, the team would take over at the line of scrimmage.

This year the team is awarded the ball at the spot where the kicker attempted the field goal from, which is basically a seven-yard difference. These seven yards may not seem like much, but the rule will affect a coach's strategy.

Instead of trying a 50-yard field goal and giving the other team the ball at the 40 yard line, rather than the 33, a coach may be tempted to go for a first down on fourth down and five yards.

I also think this rule is good for the NFL because in the past few years there have been an abundance of field goals.

Hopefully, this rule will cut down on that number and, in turn, make the games much more interesting.

The final rule carrying some large implications with it is the kick-off being moved from the 35 yard line to the 30 yard line.

The kick-off is probably the most exciting play in football. Nothing's more exhilarating to fans than seeing a bunch of huge guys running full blast from 50 yards apart and smashing into each other.

Although this new rule may reduce the number of touchbacks, and therefore increase the number of kick-off returns, injuries will also increase.

Because of this, I don't like this rule. I would much rather see less kick-off returns and the players being able to stay in and play, than seeing more kick-off returns and the players being carried off on stretchers.

As far as predictions for the season go, I'll have to stick with the Dallas Cowboys to three-peat. As long as Troy Aikman, Emmitt Smith and Michael Irvin are playing, the Cowboys are going to win games. I don't care who the coach is.

I think they will do it, especially if they can sign Deion Sanders. He would fill a void in their secondary and thus allow them to go all the way.

And God said, 'Thou shalt eat at Applebee's'

Manhattan was blessed by a holy visit two weeks ago. No, it wasn't the boring old Pope, and not even our beloved Fred Phelps.

She was seen at the Manhattan Town Center and even Wal-Mart. But she made two visits to Applebee's Grill and Bar, once accompanied by her new husband, Roe Messner.

Jesse Jordan, Applebee's manager, said there was a "controversy about whether or not it really was her" among the other servers. But Klein asked her holiness if she was indeed Tammy Faye, and she even gave Klein her autograph.

Jana Grimm, Manhattan resident, served Bakker on her second visit.

"Her diamond was bigger than soap opera diamonds!" Grimm said. "Everybody was walking by just to look at her diamond."

Klein knew Bakker was no impostor when after she delivered their food, "they all held hands and Tammy Faye led a prayer."

Texas town offers a combo platter o' nudidy

LONGVIEW, Texas — The proliferation of sex-oriented businesses in this Bible Belt town has protesters photographing patrons and local bars advertising "fully-clothed" waiters.

In addition to regular topless bars, Longview has all-nude, bring-your-own-booze joints and the East Texas Chicken Ranch, a nude steakhouse named after the inspiration for the Broadway hit "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

But residents of this oil-rich town surrounded by pine trees don't want that link to fame, or anything else the nude spots might bring.

"We don't need this. Longview is becoming a big joke. Do we want to be known as the best nudity place in Texas?" Evelyn Scott, a member of Citizens Against Pornography in Texas, or CAP-IT, said.

This summer, the group began regularly photographing and videotaping customers going in and out of the nude spots and writing down license numbers.

Protesters also record when the customers go in, who they are with and their vehicle descriptions, Bruce Edge, a CAP-IT spokesman, said. They haven't yet done anything with the information, but are considering taking out newspaper ads.

PHILADELPHIA — Peculiar isn't the word. Off-the-wall doesn't cut it. When it comes to the smorgasbord of celluloid stashed in Todd Kimmell's basement, the only description is just plain bizarre.

In Kimmell's hands, a 16 mm Kodak movie projector from the 1960s becomes a spaceship, time machine and history book all in one.

The 36-year-old former junkman collects, splices and exhibits what he calls "found films" — 500 reels filled with cinematic gems of eras past that have ended up in somebody's wastebasket or garage sale.

From the damp vault of his cellar come such forgotten treasures as an anti-marijuana film featuring Sonny Bono, German gymnasts waving hoops in tandem, and the terrifyingly titled "Feature Disco 9000."

"A lot of this stuff wasn't funny to begin with," Kimmell said, who shows films at home using his 1950s refrigerator as a backdrop. "But this is a different era, and our perspectives have changed."

If only he could get ahold of the lost Nixon tapes. I can see tricky Dick saying "break into the Watergate," over lost outakes from "Red Dawn" or "All the President's Men."

WEEKEND

DATING WITH ONLY A FEW DOLLAR$

Your significant other has been chomping at the bit to go out and he or she isn't rolling in the dough, either.

Guess that rules out the cruise in the limo to Kansas City and the dinner at an Italian restaurant on the Plaza (replete with candlelight and violins, of course).

Tuition, books and rent take a huge bite out of that idealistic setting. More than likely, any Italian meal will be Pizza Shuttle on paper plates in the living room. And that cruise? A trip around Aggieville in the '76 Pinto.

So what does the average K-State student do? A random, completely unscientific poll, in the K-State Union, Wednesday, indicated that the $1.50 movie houses were No. 1 on the list.

"A cheap date? Hit the dollar movie and that'll be about it," Travis Livingston, junior in business, said.

Renting movies was another popular suggestion. Rhonda Schieck, sophomore in psychology, said 99-cent rentals on Tuesdays and Wednesdays at Dillons were one of the best deals.

If movies are one of the No. 1 forms of cheap entertainment, finding an inexpensive dining alternative is the next objective. Students could run for the border or grab a burger, but they aren't necessarily ideal for dates.

For college students who have their own apartments, preparing home-cooked meals for their dates can help cut back on expenses.

Packing a picnic basket with sandwiches, fruit and vegetables is also an option. Tuttle Creek State Park, Milford Lake, City Park and Sunset Zoo are several destinations.

"Go to the park or Tuttle Creek or Milford and take a picnic lunch or something, somewhere quiet," Adrienne Beauchamp, junior in psychology, said.

When winter weather rolls in, that doesn't mean picnicking is eliminated. Jay Rozell, sophomore in elementary education, had a twist on the traditional picnic idea.

"I made a meal, spread a blanket out downstairs in the basement out in front of the fireplace and ate there. That was kind of fun," Rozell said.

Free food and entertainment are also found at marriage ceremonies. While it's impossible to plan dates around marriages, if a friend is getting hitched, weddings are a good place to take a date, Melanie Hooper, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

"Everything's paid for and they're a lot of fun," Hooper said.

Along that same line of thinking, Arlen Olberding, senior in physics, suggested dining at a relative's house.

"Take her over to your sister's or parent's house for dinner under the guise of meeting the relatives, but actually because it's a good meal for cheap," Olberding said.

Olberding, who is a member of Union Program Council, said UPC is sponsoring a chance to go rappelling on Oct. 29 and 30 at Tuttle Creek. The fee will be less than $10 per person, he said.

UPC also has about 15 spots open for a trip to Worlds of Fun on Sept. 10. Students pay $15, which includes the ticket into the amusement park and transportation in two vans. If interested in either, sign up in the UPC office on the third floor of the Union between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

✂ Take a drive in the Flint Hills or to area communities such as Wamego and Alma.

✂ To avoid the crowds, rent a movie and pop some corn.

✂ Take a camera to the mall, try on expensive clothes, get a couple shots of the two of you in the mall's finest and see how long it takes before you're thrown out.

✂ Take a walk to a park and hike on the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area or the Linear Trail which runs along the river levee from the Wal-Mart/Dillon's shopping area to Westside Market.

✂ Paddle around Tuttle Creek or Pottawatomie State Lake #2 in a canoe. The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex rents canoes for $8 for 24 hours.

✂ Walk through Sunset Cemetery, celebrate life and if in the serious stages of the relationship, choose names for your future children.

✂ Spend an all-nighter at Tuttle Creek or Milford Lake, camping and preparing dinner over open flames.

✂ Test your vocal cords with karoake at one of Manhattan's nightclubs.

✂ Attend a poetry reading in the Union's art gallery on the first Monday of every month.

✂ Listen to area bands.

AIDS education lacking

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

A prominent Kansas physician said lack of education and denial about the AIDS virus continues to plague Kansas.

"AIDS is here, and it's an equal-opportunity, sexually-transmitted disease," Dr. Donna Sweet, chairwoman of the internal medicine department at St. Francis Regional Medical Center, said.

According to a University of Kansas study of Kansas college health clinics, one in 400 college students in Kansas has HIV.

Sweet said the fear of AIDS only perpetuates ignorance about the disease.

In some communities, people still worry that mosquitoes carry the AIDS virus, she said.

"You have to learn to deal with sexuality and sexual issues," Sweet said.

She said the stigma and fear that goes on in small towns when a person has HIV is tremendous.

A clinic in Emporia has agreed to treat AIDS patients as long as they enter through a back door and do not use the waiting room, Sweet said.

It is this kind of discrimination that only perpetuates the fear of AIDS, she said.

"Local community physicians are unwilling to believe it is here," Sweet said.

She said that Kansas college health clinics are very progressive and they are taking care of testing and counseling.

Sweet said she would like to see the state government put more money into AIDS care and early prevention.

Sara Blecke, senior in graphic design and an AIDS peer educator, said she was surprised there was still so much discrimination against people with AIDS.

Dana Slaughter, junior in secondary education and biology, said she agreed.

"The medical profession still has a stigma about AIDS," Slaughter said.

"You wouldn't think they would, but they do."

workshops in September. An officer of each organization and the adviser are required to attend a workshop to be eligible for funds.

Two requests for funds were heard at last night's meeting. Dianne Urban, students' attorney, requested $1,530 for a new edition of Kansas Digest in the Legal Services Office.

Student Senate also considered a bill that would give $900 toward the SGA retreat next month. Both allocations will be decided at next week's meeting.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said the retreat will be Sept. 10-11 at Camp Wood in Elmdale, Kan. He is asking corporate sponsors to fund part of this retreat.

The group acted on several bills that deal with Student Senate. It approved both the presidential cabinet appoint-ments and the standing rules which govern senate meetings.

Senate voted down a proposal that would require cabinet members to get permission from the chief of staff before speaking at a meeting.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, said he voted in favor of the bill because it would make Senate more efficient and clear up inconsistencies in the constitution. Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator, voted against the proposal.

"In my opinion, this would just close down our body to outside ideas," Henry said.

No decision on school boundary change

MIKE HIND
Collegian

About 25 concerned parents and district boundary committee members got their first formal look at the superintendent's proposal for new boundaries for Unified School District 383 Thursday at Robinson Education Center.

Associate Superintendent Dave Mickey had the floor most of the night as he explained the details of the boundary change and the history of boundary changes.

Committee members spent most of the time listening and scanning a pamphlet of facts and figures dealing with the boundary change.

"In 1984, we had our last major boundary change," Mickey said. "Since 1984, student enrollment has gone up 1,000 students."

Mickey also said the next few weeks wouldn't be easy for him or the committee.

"It's not going to be an easy task," Mickey said. "No matter what we do, it won't please everyone."

Mickey said the reason why the boundary alignment was being debated at such an early date is that the boundaries won't go into effect until the 1995-'96 school year.

"I hope to take a proposal to the board in October," Mickey said.

"We have to get the elementary boundaries set before they figure out who goes to the two new middle schools that are going to be built," Mickey said. "We are doing this a year ahead of time to give the families time to adjust."

Mickey said that by no means was he dead set on the proposal.

"We can modify this proposal or decide on one that is completely different," Mickey said.

Joyce Knight, Marlatt School representative, said she hadn't formed an opinion on the associate superintendent's proposal, but did find one thing she didn't like.

"Some of the boundaries aren't contiguous," Knight said.

Knight said she was pleasantly surprised by the attendance at the committee's first meeting.

"I really thought there would be fewer people here," Knight said. "I'm pleased with the turnout."

The next meeting of the district boundary committee is set for 7 p.m. Thursday at the Robinson Education Center. The public is welcome to attend.

University: test not based on race

However, on her enrollment form, Whitley said she did not mark English as her primary language.

Spanish was the first language she learned, and she said she considered it her primary language.

"I didn't want to deny my heritage," she said.

Whitley said she didn't call the University about the July 21 letter because she thought it was a mistake and she was busy with her wedding.

The letter did seem to be a mistake at first because Whitley said she went through fee payment on Aug. 18 with no problems.

When she went to drop a class, however, she said she discovered she had a delinquency.

Whitley was directed to the English Language Program office in Fairchild 215, where she explained the situation to program director Enid Cocke, she said.

"She asked me what I spoke at home, and I said equal Spanish and English," Whitley said.

"I told her I'm an American citizen, and I didn't understand why I had to take this test," she said.

After speaking to Cocke for about five minutes, Whitley said Cocke waived the two-hour test and instead gave her a 30-minute essay.

"Even after talking to me, instead of apologizing, she said, 'In order to do my job I have to make you take the 30-minute essay test,'" Whitley said.

"She took me into another room. I was shaking, and I started crying because I felt I was being discriminated against. I didn't see why this test proved anything. There are people in high school who are natural-born Americans who can't write an essay," she said.

"When I was finished, she glanced over my essay, then she signed it. She didn't say 'I'm sorry' or anything."

Whitley said she believed she was being discriminated against because she identified herself as Hispanic on the enrollment form and because English was not her first language.

"It says all over the place that the University does not discriminate," she said. "But that's exactly what I felt it was — discrimination."

Elkins said the admissions office only required students to take the English Proficiency Test based on whether they marked English as their primary language.

The office did not check her transcript or her ACT scores or base the requirement on her race, Elkins said.

The University only wants to identify those students who might benefit from extra language courses, he said.

"This is to try to help an individual who may need help with the language," Elkins said. "Communication is so important at the University."

Cocke said the purpose of the English Language Program is to teach English to people who want to enter the University, but whose English is not up to admissions standards.

"As a service to the admissions office and the graduate school, we screen the English of non-native speakers of English to see if they would benefit from any support courses," Cocke said.

The two-hour screening consists of multiple choice tests in listening and comprehension, grammar, reading and vocabulary and the essay, she said.

None of the tests evaluate spoken English ability, Cocke said, because it can be deceptive.

"Let's face it. In university classes you don't have to talk a lot," she said. "You listen to lectures, read textbooks and take notes. You don't do a lot of talking."

Cocke said there was a gray area where evaluating naturalized citizens was concerned.

International students take English as a foreign language test, she said, and if their scores are above the accepted level, they don't need to take the English proficiency test.

"The gray area is the people who have been in Kansas for a few years," she said. "I've seen a whole spectrum of language ability among students with high school diplomas."

Cocke said verbal ability is stressed more with non-native instructors and graduate teaching assistants.

They are given tests in language labs to determine whether a classroom full of students would be able to understand them, she said.

"Our program offers a summer session to help them not just to take that test, but to teach in American classrooms," she said.

Cocke said the test was not intended as discrimination or harassment.

"We're simply carrying out our responsibility to make sure students have enough English to succeed," she said.

"The perspective from this office is not what kind passport you have, but what your English proficiency is."

Bicycle violations to include running stop signs, riding without headlights general increase for all vehicle and biking fines on campus, Fenton said.

"We're trying to let them know we're serious, and usually the only way to get the students' attention is through their pockets," he said.

Bicyclists will also be issued a $56 citation if they run a stop sign, Fenton said.

Riding a bicycle without a headlight between sunset and sunrise is a violation as well, he said.

These citations will be handled through Manhattan's city court, he said.

Once a student accumulates five tickets, wheellocking or impoundment could follow with the next ticket, Fenton said.

While writing tickets is a part of the bike patrol's job, Fenton said campus safety is the main concern.

"We're not out there just to write tickets," he said. "If we didn't have to write tickets, it wouldn't hurt our feelings."

Students who ride bikes to campus to combat the convoluted parking situation said they are beginning to feel they're in a no-win situation.

Justin Boisseau, junior in finance and American ethnic studies, who was stopped by the bike patrol, said he was unhappy with the impending situation.

"I ride my bike every day to class, and I think this sucks," Boisseau said.

"The access is so limited on the main campus going north to south, with all the construction," he said. "The bike lanes are closed on Mid Campus Drive, and you can't get through unless you're on the sidewalks or on Manhattan Avenue.

"It's ridiculous, especially if they have two years worth of construction. They need to set up some more bike lanes."

The construction isn't affecting bicyclists alone. Students on foot and in vehicles have had to adjust, too, Fenton said.

"If the bicyclists are inconvenienced, so are the walkers, and so are the drivers," he said. "No group is being singled out by it."

KSU's best in 'Laundry,' Lone Star

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

If you think you've seen some good theater in your years at K-State, y'all ain't seen nothin' yet.

K-State Theatre's production of "Laundry and Bourbon" and "Lone Star" blended a southern-style soap opera, a rip-roaring comedy and a tearjerker into an impressive night of theater.

The colorful characters and side-splitting one-liners that drew the crowds in the summer once again took the audience by storm.

Although only a tiny pocketful of people attended the 8 p.m. performance at Nichols Theatre, they all seemed to be enjoying themselves.

During the humor, they cackled and burst out in laughter and during the sentimental parts of the plays, a hush fell over the crowd.

The six characters, all veterans of the stage, remained in character from the time they were handing out programs, to the time during the intermission when they were moving the scenery to their time on-stage.

The natural moves and gestures, Southern accents and country music, transformed the theater at Nichols Hall into a Texas town.

The first play, "Laundry and Bourbon," gave a slice-of-life look at three women. Hattie Dealing was played by graduate student Laura Camien; Elizabeth Caulder was played by graduate student Ayne Steinkuehler; and Amy Lee Fullernoy was performed by Karen Doerr, junior in music and theater.

Dressed in a patchwork dress and bright blue heels and sporting a beehive hairstyle, every inch of Camien was changed into Hattie, an eccentric Southern busybody.

She felt completely comfortable with the stage and with her character and her former acting experience and professionalism made for a delightful and unforgettable character.

Steinkuehler played her intense and simple best friend, Elizabeth, who dressed in jean shorts, walked around in her bare feet and often stared off into the distance with a vacant expression.

Dealing with a husband, Roy, who fought in Vietnam, and her unexpected pregnancy, Elizabeth carried the world on her shoulders and she often tried to find comfort in the past and peace in her memories.

The chemistry between Camien and Steinkuehler on-stage was impressive and was even more noticeable when Doerr came into the picture as Amy Lee, a self-righteous Baptist with a flair for annoying people and stepping on other people's toes to boost her self-image.

Amy Lee and Hattie were like fire and ice and were passionate in their fierce hatred for each other.

The second play, "Lone Star," featured Roy Caulder, Elizabeth's tough cowboy husband; Ray Caulder, Roy's goofball brother; and Cletis Fullernoy, Amy Lee's husband.

Scott McLean, who graduated from K-State and is headed for New York to study theater, lets his talent shine through in his portrayal of Roy, a man whose life has fallen apart since Vietnam.

He means well, but Ray never has a clue where he is or what he's doing there and always looks up to his brother to teach him all about the important things in life like sex education, beer and cars.

Skyler Thomas, who is new to the stage, takes over the character of Cletis, after one of the performers from the summer cast graduated from K-State.

For one of his first times in a production, Thomas played a believable impersonation of a geek who is scared of everything, is a devoted fan of Ray's and is loaded with money.

"Lone Star" and "Laundry and Bourbon" are two remarkable one-acts that deserve a big audience.

NEWS DIGEST

▶MONEY MAGAZINE RANKS BEST COLLEGES

NEW YORK — Forget Harvard, Yale and Columbia. The best education for the buck can be found at New College of the University of South Florida, according to a personal finance magazine.

The Sarasota, Fla., school ranked No. 1 for the second year running by not raising tuition for 1994-95 while keeping its academic standards high, Money magazine said.

The magazine's fifth annual survey of America's 100 best college buys appears in a special edition due out Sept. 6. It ranks schools by 16 factors related to cost and academic quality.

Two colleges made the top-10 list for the first time: Spelman College in Georgia, a historically black college for women, came in ninth. St. Mary's College of Maryland was 10th.

Filling out the top 10 were: Trenton State College in New Jersey, the State University of New York's Binghamton campus, Northeast Missouri State University, Hanover College in Indiana, Rutgers University's New Brunswick, N.J., campus and California Institute of Technology.

Factors determining the ranking included entrance exam results, graduation rates, faculty resources and deployment, budgets for instruction and student services, and default ratios on graduates' student loans. The magazine compared those figures with each college's tuition and fees.

K-State to see return of live music scene

Contrary to what you may have seen here on the diversions page, the DB92 Welcome Back Concert will be on Sunday, starting at noon. If you show up at 6 p.m., you will be treated to God's Favorite Band's encore, and the tearing down of the stage.

I recommend coming at noon.

KSDB-91.9 FM is sponsoring the rock 'n' roll festival that will feature five bands, various community booths and music giveaways.

DB92 music director Eric Melin and his staff have worked very hard to bring this event to Manhattan, so when you see him at the event, give him a hard slap on the back.

ANDREW TOMB

Performing at the concert will include God's Favorite Band, Kill Creek, Puke Weasel, Vitreous Humor and Arthur Dodge.

A Minneapolis-based trio making its fourth visit to Manhattan, God's Favorite Band just released its third album, "Down to the the Filter," on Twin/Tone Records, the label that originally signed Soul Asylum, the Replacements and the Jayhawks.

My favorite GFB anecdote comes from the time they played at the now-infamous Dead Milkmen no-show concert. GFB went on before an angry, pissed-off mob of flesh and still gave the crowd more than its money's worth.

Kill Creek released "Stretch" three weeks ago on Mammoth Records, and a full-length compact disc is coming in October. This Lawrence band has received good press so far, and when their video hits MTV, they will be on their way.

I remember Vitreous Humor from the Opus band competition three years ago. Most of them were in high school then, but they still kicked serious butt.

vitreous humor

They've since moved to Lawrence and just signed with independent label Crank! Records and will record their debut album this fall.

Puke Weasel, the five-man metal band from Manhattan, has three self-released demos that continue to crush skulls of fans of thrash-speed-metal.

Puke Weasel

While I will admit that speed-metal is not my cup of blood, Puke Weasel has received impressive reviews from the press, so I guess they're legit.

Kansas City's Arthur Dodge has attracted the attention of Ardent Records. Dodge's acoustic songwriting talents have become a staple at Auntie Mae's Parlor.

Arthur Dodge

The day promises to kick off the semester's live music offerings with a loud bang, so make sure you check it out.

WELCOME BACK CONCERT

KSDB-FM 91.9 will present the Welcome Back Concert Sunday in City Park from noon to 6 p.m. The concert will feature God's Favorite Band, Kill Creek, Vitreous Humor, Puke Weasel and Arthur Dodge. The concert is free.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Reader puzzled over sudden breakup

Dear Cassie,

Last May, I started dating the most incredible woman I've ever known. It wasn't love at first sight, however. What we did have was a chemistry between us. Everything we did or said just came naturally. I fell in love with her hard, and even though it took some time, she said she loved me too.

Well, they say that all good things come to an end, and it did. Right before classes started, she broke up with me. I came home to find anything and everything she ever gave me gone. Pictures, clothes, keys, etc., and her standing in the living room ready to say good-bye.

What I don't understand is why. The only thing she told me is that I had screwed up and it was over. Then she left me stating that she didn't want to talk to me or see me for a long time. I don't know what to think, was it me, her friends, or just not meant to be? Because I love her so much, I am willing to leave her alone. I don't call her or try to see her anymore, just because it would make her happy. However, don't I deserve some kind of reason? All the communication we once had was gone in one day. I hate to just let it go because I love her so much, or should I?

Signed,
Not Sure

Dear Not Sure,

This is a truly sad ordeal, indeed. However, since you didn't give me much to go on, I am left to draw my own conclusions — you must have screwed up.

How could your girlfriend go from loving you one day to packing up all her items and saying you "screwed up," if you didn't? She obviously discovered something she wasn't supposed to.

It's very big of you to leave her alone because you "love her so much," after she already gave you the boot.

Hats off to your new ex-girlfriend for calling you on whatever mistake you're keeping from me.

If you've spent nights on end racking your brain, trying to figure out what you ever could have done to offend her, and still come up empty-handed, confront her.

Demand to know what you could have possibly done to lose her love.

And next time you get involved in a relationship, don't leave your memory behind.

Kill Creek
"Stretch"

Kill Creek is more than just a creek and road east of Lawrence; its the name of one of the best hardcore outfits to come out of the fabled Lawrence scene.

Kill Creek singer and guitarist Scott Born yells louder than anyone around him, and Ron Hayes (guitar), Pat Grassy (bass) and Charles Sharpe (drums) follow suit.

The Creek's new EP, "Stretch," marks the beginning of their relationship with Mammoth records, and another nationwide voice for the turned-up midwestern sound.

Melodic guitar riffs, often followed by harder offerings, permeate this five-song release.

It serves as a prime introduction to an act we will certainly see more of.

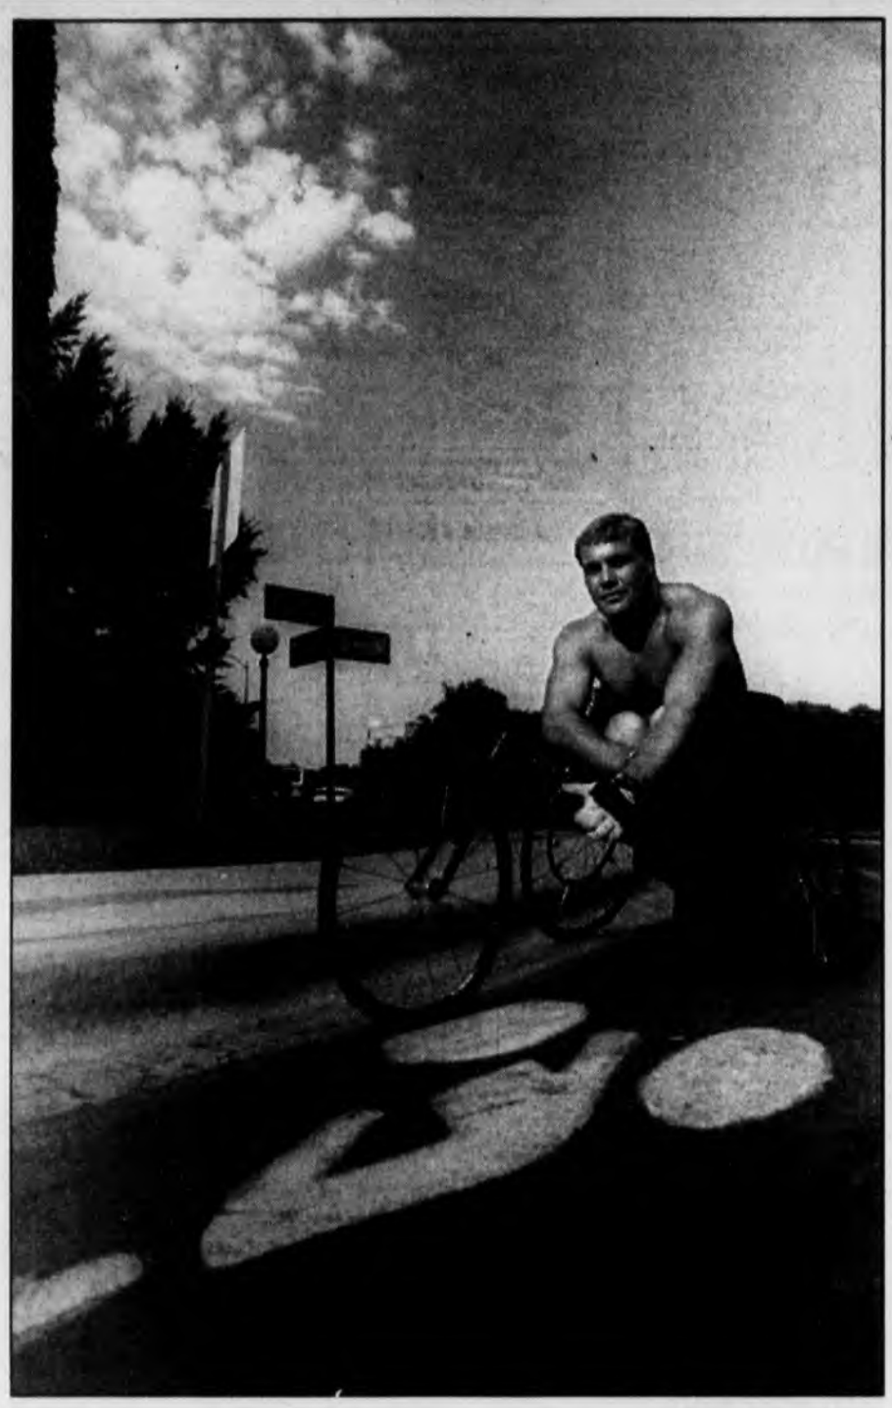
"Down to the Filter"



God's Favorite Band has been slugging it out on the Midwestern tour circuit for a while now and are beginning to gain momentum.

These guys have the overdriven sound and straight-ahead approach that have propelled other Midwesterners into the spotlight. "Down to the Filter" smokes.

Student body president Jeff Peterson began training when he got his racing chair in March. He trains every day and would like to be competitive, he said.

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Fast.

Very Fast.

"He puts 110 percent into everything he does," Mike Zamrzla, chief of staff, said.

Aside from training for races in March, Peterson is also busy planning the agenda for the students he serves.

Addressing issues such as the cost of education, parking, teacher evaluations and campus safety are just a few items he has on his checklist for the year.

"I think we have a lot of students that do it all the way in the classroom, student leadership and at work. That is one of the great things about K-State is we've got lots of different people that care and are winners," Peterson said. "And those people are so important."

Peterson's personal definition of caring for people means trying to make a difference for them every day. Material things, awards and honors, he said, don't count as much as people.

His freshman year of high school, after track practice, Peterson was driving down a dusty dirt road. The paralyzing, life-changing events that happened within the next few weeks made him realize how important people are.

Nobody knows how fast Peterson was going when his car flipped over the washboards in the road. Luckily, his sister and her boyfriend drove by the sight shortly after the accident occurred.

The entire family was at the scene in less than an hour and a half. And it didn't take long for the entire town of Burdick, Kansas, to pitch in and raise support for a boy who was known for his success in pig farming.

"There is nothing like the feeling I get when I think about those people and all they gave for me," Peterson said.

Besides the labor and money donated to help build a wheelchair-accessible house, the people of Burdick also opened their hearts.

"They sent letters, cards and came and saw me I'll never forget that," Peterson said. "That is one of the things that makes it easy for me to be positive."

Scott Ahlvers, junior in animal science, said one thing that makes Peterson special is his perpetual smile.

"He has a smile that can just light up a room," Ahlvers said.

As Peterson's fraternity brother at Farmhouse, Ahlvers said the first thing Peterson did was take him out and buy ice cream. Since then, they've spent many hours together training, playing basketball and talking.

"He is somebody I can always go to and talk with," Ahlvers said.

A characteristic of Peterson, Ahlvers said, is he is very personable. He is kind and really cares about people. He wants to listen to everybody and is down to earth.

"He really cares about what the students think, what they want and what is good for them," Ahlvers said.

The actions Peterson takes to show people he cares have changed since his freshman year of high school.

"I don't know why or how, and I can't explain it, but if you had asked me in high school to speak to a group of five people in my ag class, I would have been terrified," Peterson said.

By the time his sophomore year at K-State came around, Peterson was speaking to 25 people in Ag Council meetings without any qualms.

"Something changed in me," Peterson said. "I decided to run for senate and liked it."

Now, as student body president, Peterson said he wants to help out the students who work so hard and pay so much to get an education.

"Students can expect to see a lot of things happen this year. Not necessarily big projects being completed, but some long-term ones, like the cost of education having the process started," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said.

Finkeldei said aside from many short term projects being completed this year, students will also see long-term projects that will have a greater effect on the future begun.

A good leadership quality Peterson has, Finkeldei said, is he knows how to get things done by delegating.

"Jeff is very good at keeping everyone involved and motivated," Finkeldei said.

Peterson said everyone has their own qualities that makes them good at helping people.

Politics, Peterson said, may not be a life-long dream, but helping people certainly is.

"I think if I can continue to help other people every day and make the world a better place to live; I'll be very, very happy."

Judges attempt to change adoption laws

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — While the Baby Jessica and Baby Richard cases moved through the courts and the tabloids, a group of judges and lawyers crafted a model law they hope will prevent similarly agonizing adoption cases.

"The act is radical. It places the welfare of children at its center," Joan Heifetz Hollinger, the act's drafter and a law professor at the University of California-Berkeley, said.

Provisions of the Uniform Adoption Act, approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws on Aug. 4, include:

- Biological fathers would have 30 days to make a parental claim after the proposed adoption of their child.
- Birth mothers would have eight days to change their minds after giving up a child.
- Adoptions could not be denied on the basis of the race or ethnicity of the adoptive parents or children.

The act goes to the American Bar Association for review, then will be sent to each state with a recommendation that it be considered for enactment.

In the Baby Jessica case, the child was taken from adoptive parents who had raised her for two years and returned to her birth mother and father. The birth mother named the wrong man as father, so the child's biological father had not given up his parental rights.

In the Baby Richard case, the now 3-1/2-year-old Chicago child's biological father is attempting to gain custody. The child's mother put him up for adoption and told the father he had died.

"If we do everything which is reasonably possible to notify and obtain the consent of that biological parent, that's all we can ask of the system. The child's interest in secure and permanent placement becomes at a certain point the most important issue," said Rhoda Billings, a law professor at Wake Forest University and a member of the group that drafted the act.

"If the birth mother or a lawyer or an agency is the one who lied to you, sue them for fraud and deceit. Someone may have a legal right to be a parent, but that does not mean that the remedy for violating that right should be human flesh — the baby," Hollinger said.

Not all biological fathers agree.

Jon Ryan, president of the National Organization for Birth Fathers and Adoption Reform in Punta Gorda, Fla., said the act does not protect the rights of mothers and fathers and children.

"Adoption should be based on the assumption that there is a way to keep the family together and that the child should be raised either with the mother or the father," Ryan said.

"Those of us within adoption reform see adoption as the absolute last choice."

▶ COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

Enrollment on rise

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

The College of Agriculture has shown the greatest enrollment increase of any K-State college.

The more than 65 student increase can be attributed to the Agriculture Ambassadors and Agriculture Recruiting and Educating Prospective Students.

Jennifer Dunn, president of the Ag Ambassadors and junior in food science, announced the news at the Ag Ambassadors and Ag REPS first meeting.

"Agriculture has had a 30 percent increase over the last five years. The College of Agriculture is an easy item to sell because it sells itself," Dunn said. "I think a lot of it has to do with our programs."

Ag Experience Day provides a chance for high school juniors and seniors interested in agriculture to shadow a college student who is enrolled in the College of Agriculture.

On Sunday, the Ag Ambassadors and Ag REPS give campus tours and entertain at social activities, which are usually in the K-State Union.

"Every student that comes in has a host," Adviser Larry Erpelding, associate director of academic programs said. "The high school student stays the night with their host. Then they go to class with them on Monday, and they get to see what a real college professor is like."

This also allows the student the experience of living in a residence hall, fraternity house or scholarship house.

"It helps relieve some of the anxiety when they are really at college," Erpelding said.

Ag Experience Day will be Oct. 23-24.

The Ag Ambassadors and Ag REPS also strive to get freshmen involved in some of the 27 agriculture organizations and honoraries available.

Organization sign ups and a speaker will be incorporated with a watermelon feed at 6:15 Aug. 30 on the lawn in front of Waters Hall.

Ag Ambassadors, Ag REPS, faculty and administrators will also represent K-State at the Kansas State Fair Sept. 9-18 with a 25-foot display.

"We answer questions and give information about the College of Agriculture in the Pride of Kansas building, and K-State has their own booth in another building," Erpelding said. "It's a little bit more visibility for the University."

TRACEY STINSON
Collegian

The Manhattan City Commissioners met in joint session with the Riley County Commissioners at 4 p.m. Wednesday in City Hall.

The commissioners met to discuss the increased sales tax initiatives that will be put on the November ballot.

The city is proposing a half-cent sales tax increase to raise revenues for economic and industrial expansion. The county is wanting to increase the county sales tax by a half cent to fund the expansion to the Riley County jail. If both proposals are passed, the Manhattan sales tax will increase 1 percent to 7.4 percent.

These two initiatives will be brought before the voters in the November election. If passed, the sales-tax increase could go into effect by Jan. 1, Jim Williams, Riley County commissioner said.

The commissioners debated on how to present the jail expansion to the voters on the November ballot. The expansion could be funded in two different ways.

The first would be to raise the sales tax by a half percent. The second would be to increase property taxes for twenty years by 5 mills.

Wilton Thomas, Riley County commissioner, said that increasing the sales tax would distribute the cost of the jail more efficiently than raising property taxes.

"I've gotten a strong signal from the public that they are looking with disdain at an increase in property taxes and the public wants to go the sales tax route," Thomas said.

Roger Maughmer, city commissioner, said that the funds for the jail expansion should come from fixed revenue, not variable revenue such as the sales tax.

The commissioners have not yet decided if it would be better to expand the current facility or build a law enforcement complex to house both the jail and police departments at a new site.

Deb Frey, Manhattan resident and member of the jail expansion task force, said that there has not been enough time allowed for the task force to investigate properly the best decision for the county.

The task force, which began work in June, has not yet formed cost analysis of building a new complex, Frey said. So the commissioners only have research and estimates on expanding the current jail.

According to the Department of Justice's Small Jail Design Guide, a jail should not be located "near a school, housing area, a church, or a recreation area, where inmates might bother others or neighbors would strenuously object."

The Riley County facility does not meet the federal recommendation. Frey said that she favors building an entire new complex located away from residential areas. One possible location that the task force has looked at is behind Wal-Mart.

The commissions have to come up with a proposal by the first week of September to ensure that it makes the November ballot. The county could be taken to court if plans for expansion are not under way by the beginning of the year.

"I have heard more hints of possible litigation over that facility in the last six months than I've heard in the last six years. It is imperative to get it on the November ballot," Thomas said. Thomas also said that he did not want to see the decision for the Riley County facility to be taken to court. The decision will then be decided by a court in a different county.

RELAY for LIFE

Teams raise more than $20,000 for cancer research

SERA L. TANK

Relay teams raised more than $20,000 toward cancer research during the third-annual Relay for Life Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

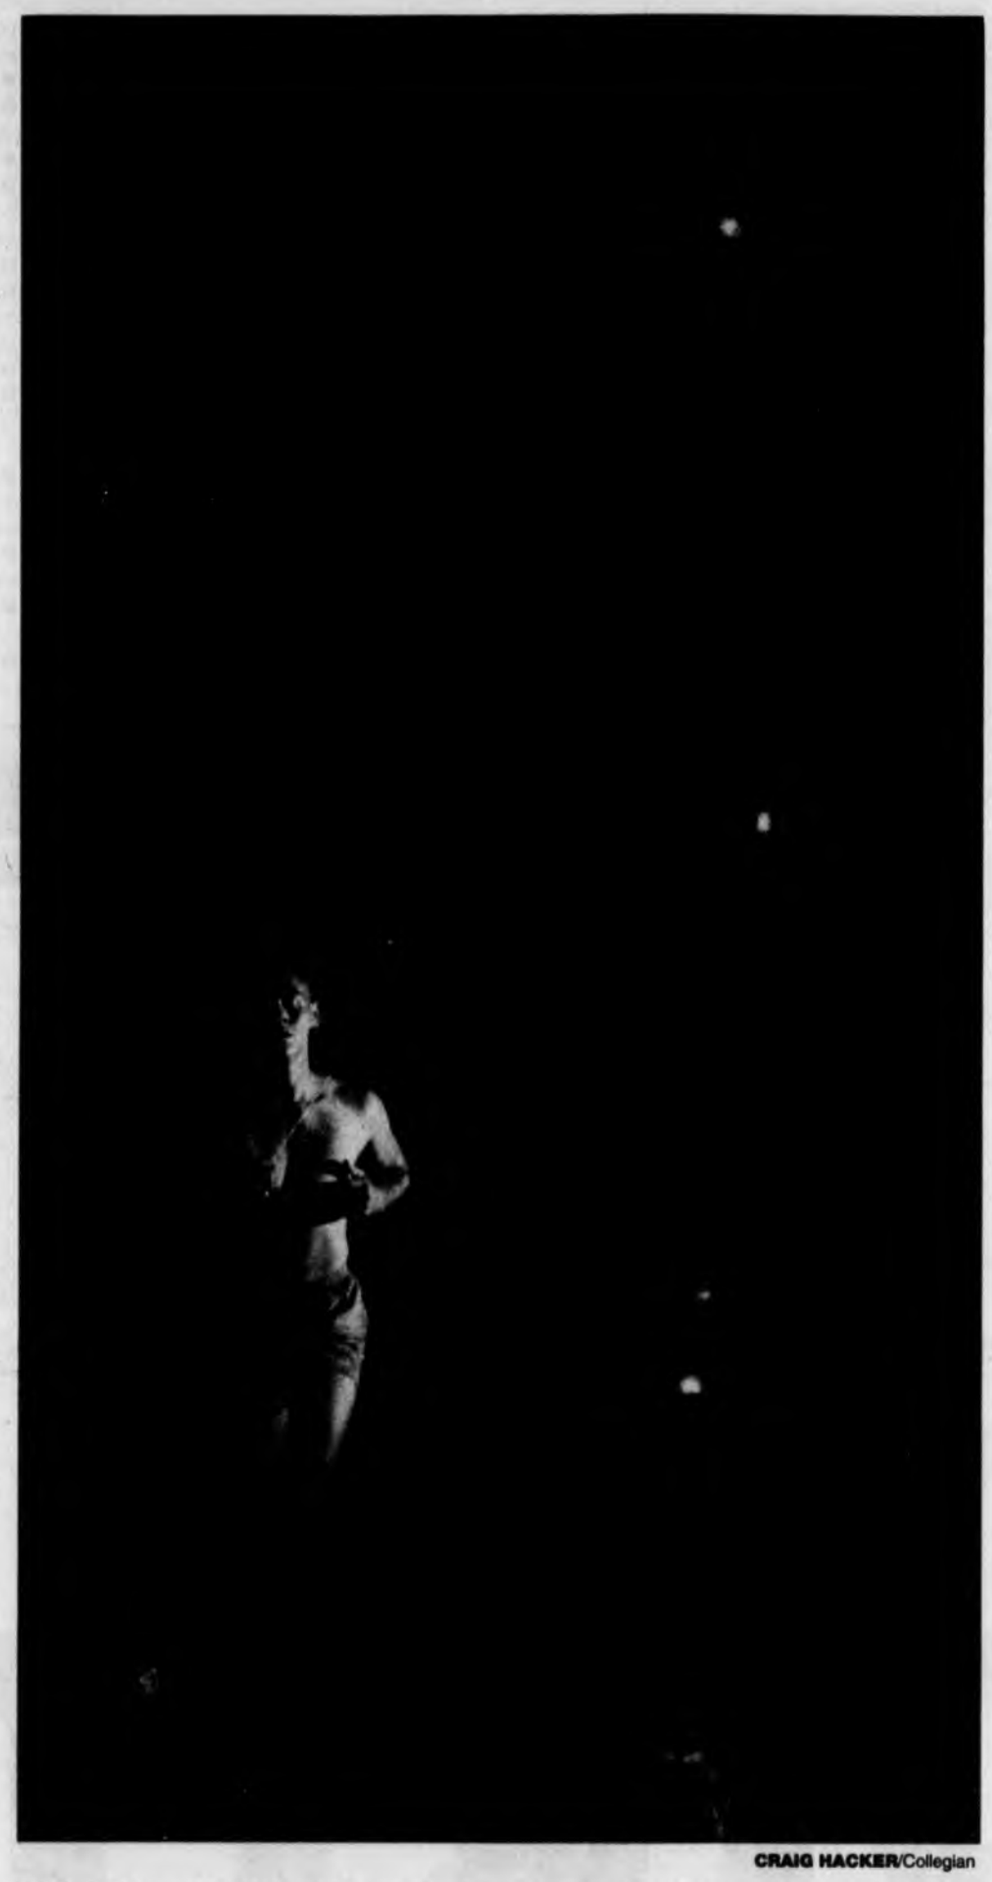
The Riley County Unit of the American Cancer Society's goal of $15,000 had been reached by 9:30 p.m., Cindy Wichman, publicity chairwoman at Memorial Hospital, said.

The money raised will be sent to the American Cancer Society, Mary Stamey, chairwoman for the relay, said.

"The money will come back to Kansas and come back locally far more than we give," Stamey said. "About $400,000 will go to our Center for Basic Cancer Research at K-State," Stamey said.

Individual members of relay teams took turns walking or running around the track at Memorial Stadium until 10 p.m. At that time, there was a short break for a memorial service and the lighting of the luminary candles.

"The luminaries are in memory of people who have died of cancer and in honor of those who are fighting cancer or who have survived it," Wichman said.



Members of the relay sold the luminaries for $10 each. Written on each luminary was the name of someone who was a victim, survivor or currently fighting cancer.

During the memorial service, two cancer survivors, Jennie Divall and Cydney Carlin, spoke to the audience.

Faith and positive thinking are very important in dealing with cancer, Divall said.

"I believe in God, and I believe in the positive energy that things like this project

Music scene lacking at KSU

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Chirp ... chirp ... chirp. The sound of crickets. Nature's concert.

If you take a stroll in the evening, you're likely to hear the crickets' lively performance. However, you won't hear, much to the dismay of many K-State students, the sound of a headlining rock 'n' roll band playing in a club or auditorium.

Since the Warehouse and DowBows have closed, there isn't even a bar consistently offering live music on the weekends.

If you are a country music fan, Manhattan has offered many venues in the past few years.

Jim Muller, associate director of Bramlage Coliseum, said country acts have slowly become more popular than traditional rock 'n' roll acts.

Performers like Travis Tritt, Alan Jackson and Garth Brooks appeal to the crowd that in the past has attended such concerts as Def Leppard, Mötley Crüe and Van Halen, Muller said.

There are many reasons behind Manhattan's rock-concert void.

"We target the entertainment that may be successful in this area," Muller said. At this point, it is country music, he said.

Muller attributes the lack of concerts in Manhattan primarily to the lack of shows touring the country in the past few years. He said most concerts target large population bases, like Wichita and Kansas City.

"If you can't sell alcohol, a lot of the things (concerts) don't work," Muller said.

Ken Snook, co-owner of SPL Productions and Snookies Bar, believes that alternative rock is welcome in Manhattan.

The Samples, an alternative rock band that performed at Snookies, was popular with the college crowd, Snook said. Snook's upcoming booking, Kansas, sold out its first show and is on its way selling out the second show at Wareham Opera House.

Snook said he has talked to groups like Pearl Jam and Soul Asylum. He said Bramlage is the ideal location for those concerts.

Even though a Pearl Jam or Soul Asylum concert would be profitable, it is hard to get the money together to sponsor it, Snook said.

Snook said beer sales make all the difference.

A band like Green Day or Collective Soul are some of the more reasonable acts Manhattan could attract, Snook said.

Bramlage Coliseum isn't a very good facility for an alternative rock concert, Muller said.

McCain Auditorium is much better for open dancing and a mosh pit, he said.

"It would be very good for K-State," Martin said.

Comparisons between Manhattan and Lawrence are inevitable. But are they necessarily fair?

"There may be a fundamental difference in the population," Martin said.

"There's a different personality at K-State than at KU."

At KU, The Kansas Student Union Association books many headlining concert acts for the campus.

That is something the K-State Union Program Council hasn't done in past years.

This year, UPC has set aside $10,000 for a moderate-sized October/November concert.

"We're trying, right now, to develop a relationship with a concerts promoter," Ann Claussen, assistant director and program director of the K-State Union, said.

Advertising K-State as a concert-friendly campus to a promoter is something UPC has not done for five to eight years, Claussen said.

"It's difficult to compare ourselves to KU all the time," Claussen said.

"We're not a KU," she said. "We have a very different student body."

Claussen said it has been hard to get bands to come to Manhattan without taking some enormous financial risks.

"We've got some regrouping to do and planning to do before we can break out and get something successful," Claussen said.

The upcoming UPC concert could feature such groups as the Lemonheads or Arrested Development, Claussen said.

UPC increases budget despite failed vote

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Union Program Council added $70,000 to its budget as a result of the approval of the $25 student fee for K-State Union expansion.

The UPC budget will receive $2 from the fee and the rest will be used to pay off the bonds for the expansion project, Liz Ring, arts and sciences senator, said.

The fee increase for the project was approved by the Kansas Board of Regents in June, despite failing to get 60 percent approval in a student referendum in April.

Student Senate passed a resolution to approve the project to the University and the regents because it believed Union expansion was important, Ring said.

"As a Student Senate, we passed a resolution in favor of the Union enhancement, but it was not an override," said Ring, who was in charge of public relations for the project.

Jeff Peterson, student body president, said last year's senate was committed to the project.

"They believed and continue to believe that it is important to the future of K-State," he said.

Ring said she thought it was an economic issue for Senate. The expansion would have to be done eventually, and the students would get more for their money now than in the future, she said.

The administration approved the resolution because they believed it was in the best interests of the students, Ring said.

A majority of the students who voted were in favor of Union expansion, but the referendum missed the necessary 60 percent of the vote by 1 percent.

"In the long run, I think K-State students will be getting a good deal," Ring said.

Students are paying to get programming now, not two years from now or for other students after they are gone, Ring said.

The fee increase for programming has allowed UPC to expand its programming output by five times, Patrick Carney, chairman of the Issues and Ideas committee, said.

UPC has planned 14 big events for the fall semester, which averages out to one big event per week, Carney, senior in political science and history, said.

The UPC budget is approximately $130,000, Brent Coverdale, UPC president, said.

Of that money, $70,000 comes from the student fee, $30,000 comes from the Union and another $30,000

Options should be considered when selecting financial institution

LORI CAGLE

When trying to decide on a bank and checking account, you should consider whether you write checks or use the Automated Teller Machine more.

Manhattan has eight different banks for students at K-State to choose from. All eight have a variety of accounts.

Whether you write checks for everything or just use your ATM, there's an account for you.

The K-State student is usually recommended to take an account that has either no or low minimum balance with a low monthly fee, Kathy Schaefer, Financial Services Representative at Commerce Bank, said.

Students need to decide which account is best for them by looking at different accounts and comparing the options offered.

Most Manhattan banks require a minimum of $100 to open an account, and many have no limit on check writing or ATM transactions unless done at ATMs not owned by that particular bank.

Low monthly fees and free ATM transactions are most appealing to students, Vickie Patterson, Director of Operations at Sunflower Bank, said.

ATM is a cash card that is used all over the United States today and is offered with all Manhattan checking accounts recommended for K-State students.

The ATM card may start seeing some competition from the debit card already offered by a number of banks in Manhattan.

"We'll probably be getting one down the line, it's a trend that is coming on strong," D'Anne Latimore, New Account and Teller Manager at Kansas State Bank, said.

Of the eight banks in Manhattan, Commerce Bank, Sunflower Bank and UMB Bank are the only to offer the debit card.

The debit card or check card, as it's called at Commerce Bank, is a card similar to a credit card, except for that you can only spend what's in your

▶ NOTES PART OF ANTI-SMOKING CAMPAIGN IN KANSAS CITY AREA

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — An anti-smoking group has printed a coupon-sized note for restaurant-goers to give waiters and waitresses.

The quasi-tip says you'd be more likely to patronize the restaurant again if it were to go smoke-free.

Thousands of the notes have been printed up for restaurant-goers to drop off after lunch or dinner in the Kansas City area. ASSIST, the anti-smoking campaign, expects to make the notes available statewide soon.

"We wanted to give restaurants tangible evidence that non-smokers prefer a smoke-free environment," Sheri Stromp of the Greater Kansas City Division of the American Heart Association and the originator of the smoke-free tips said.

"A lot of times, restaurant owners are fearful they will lose business if they go smoke-free. That's not the reality."

ASSIST, or American Stop Smoking Intervention Study, is a $145 million national program begun last year by the National Cancer Institute and the American Cancer Society.

In Missouri, ASSIST is spending about $6.2 million to try to bring the state's smoking rate down from 25.5 percent of the adult population to just 15 percent.

The notes say studies show going smoke-free does not hurt a restaurant's business, and point out that four major fast-food chains have banned smoking.

They also warn of the downside of allowing smoking, such as the case of the waiter who suffered a heart attack from working in a smoke-filled restaurant and, as a result, received an $85,000 settlement.

Booklets of the notes are available at Kansas City-area Wal-Mart pharmacies, local libraries, and The Body Shops at Oak Park Mall and on The Country Club Plaza. Copies of the notes also were printed in The Kansas City Call and The Kansas City Star.

Stromp said she's already had an opportunity to use the notes, recently leaving one after lunch at a restaurant that maintained a smoking section.

"It's non-threatening, but it really gets the message across," she said.

But leaving the notes doesn't absolve you from digging into your pockets after a meal, Stromp said.

"Be sure to leave a monetary tip as well," she said. "Otherwise, the smoke-free tip might not be well-received."

▶ REFUGEES RESCUED AT SEA, TAKEN TO TENT CAMPS AT U.S. NAVAL BASE

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba — More than 2,200 Cubans who traveled by makeshift boats and rafts joined the thousands already camped at a desolate tent city on America's military outpost on the southeastern end of Cuba on Saturday.

Many were unconvinced their quest for a new life has ended behind barbed wire in the same country they left. "We gotta go to Miami!" a young Cuban man shouted from the deck of the frigate Jack Williams, which unloaded 797 Cubans at dawn Saturday.

Some Cubans who had come earlier expressed a sense of betrayal that the United States doesn't want them. Others said they were just grateful to be in U.S. care. The new arrivals filed off Navy ships in glum silence, some wearing nothing but swim trunks.

In six days, the 45-square-mile Guantanamo Bay Naval Base has taken in more than 13,000 Cubans. They were placed in camps separate from more than 14,500 Haitian boat people, whose arrivals have dropped to a trickle.

Meanwhile, the State Department said the United States and Cuba will resume mid-level talks on migration with the hope of stemming the flow of refugees toward Florida.

▶ HIGH HUMIDITY COULD BE BENEFICIAL TO FIREFIGHTING EFFORTS IN OREGON

SAMS VALLEY, Ore. — Winds pushed a stubborn wildfire back into itself Saturday, giving firefighters their first hope of taming the blaze that has destroyed five homes and burned 7,250 acres.

People forced from their homes watched as dozens of helicopters and bombers tried to knock back the Hull Mountain fire in southwestern Oregon, about 15 miles west of Medford.

"If it wasn't so awful, it would be awesome," Tracey Hornbeck said, who sat with her husband, Jon, on the side of the dirt road leading to their home.

She said she was sure her home would be destroyed when the fire blew up Friday night in Ramsey Canyon, but she learned Saturday morning her home had been spared — at least for now.

"We've been on an emotional roller coaster for four days now," her neighbor, Sheryl McCall said. "We're all going around with our houses in our back seats."

Officials estimated the fire was 60 percent contained, and they predicted full containment as early as Monday night. The fire remained unpredictable enough for officials to bar residents from returning to inspect the damage to burned-out homes.

"If we could hold it today and the humidity comes up tonight, it could be a turning point for us," Oregon Department of Forestry spokesman Doug Decker said.

Across the West, 24 large fires still burning had covered 391,200 acres in Oregon, Washington, California, Idaho and Montana, according to the National Interagency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho.

Bike patrol no joyride for officers

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

Oncoming traffic zoomed past the man on the bike.

He threw his arm outward to signal a left turn. A few people did double-takes at him; one guy on a bike slowed down and kept wary watch on him from the corner of his eye.

When there was a gap in the rushing cars, he made his move from the little road island and into the parking lot of Goodnow Hall. A young man stood near a trash can, waiting for him.

The man slowed down, dismounted and walked his bike onto the sidewalk. He stopped next to the young man and planted the kickstand.

"Are you Mr. Brown?" he asked.

"Yes, officer," the young man replied.

They approached the object that had brought them both here: a brown and black Chevy Blazer with a long scratch running down the side, the artwork of a midnight prankster.

Officer Bob Fenton removed his safety helmet and muttered something about the decline of moral values as he filled out the incident report. There were three other cars in the lot that bore the same destructive signature.

A young man on a bicycle zipped past him, riding on the sidewalk.

"Off the bike!" yelled Fenton. The man glanced back and kept riding.

"OFF THE BIKE!" came a second yell. "You can't ride your bike on the sidewalks," he said. The man dismounted and walked his bike to the street.

An older man approached Fenton. He rode a rusty old bike with sun-bleached, peeling red paint. "Is that a new law?" he said.

"It was always a law; we're just able to enforce it better now," Fenton replied.

Ka-thump! came a sound from across the parking lot. Officer Fenton rolled his eyes and headed toward the noise. Someone had just bumped into a parked car.

Being a campus cop is not the air-conditioned joyride that many stereotypes suggest. Just ask Fenton and fellow bike patrolman Dave Springer, who pedal bikes around campus for a 10-hour shift each day.

But this new form of patrolling is changing the way that laws are enforced on the K-State campus.

"I think it's a good idea; the cars can't go everywhere," Monty Brown, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

"And so many bicyclists around here are just morons," he added.

Bicyclists will have an extra incentive to follow regulations after today when $25 tickets are issued to bikers who insist on using the sidewalks, Fenton said.

"This is something new; it will be a learning process for all," he said.

The sun was setting. Students would soon be walking to night classes.

"Hopefully, the students will see us and feel comfortable that we're here," Fenton said.

Officer Fenton spoke into his transceiver. "Ten-four, I'm finished with the CDP, and I'm heading back to 19."

"Ten-four," came the squelched reply of the dispatcher.

He walked his bike to the street and mounted up. His helmet strapped on, he pedaled off to the intersection, signaled a right turn and waited for an opening in the traffic.

Higher education increases women's involvement in agriculture

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

Women have always played a key role in agriculture. From the fields to the barnyards, they helped insure the success of many family farms.

Now women are making a mark for themselves professionally, in a field that has traditionally been looked at as dominated by men.

Janice Swanson, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, said agriculture has always been considered a man's world, but that is slowly changing.

"I will assure you, based on some of my advisees who have graduated and gone on to jobs, that women are certainly going to be a major contributor to agriculture," she said. "They already have been. It's just more and more they're coming into it."

One way more women are coming into the field is by going to school. This is reflected by the number of women in the student body. Swanson said 30 percent of the students in animal sciences and industry are women. It is even higher for veterinary medicine.

"We're reaching a point in time where more and more women are earning college degrees, and more and more women are going on to hopefully earn higher degrees," she said.

Linda Martin, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, said once a woman graduates from college, the door is wide open as far as jobs are concerned.

"I have never seen nor heard about people not being able to get a job because of their sex," she said.

Women, Martin said, can do everything from working with pharmaceutical industry feed to feed lot management.

Martin, who has been at K-State for seven years, first got interested in agriculture while growing up in rural Maryland. She raised sheep as a 4-H project and from then on she wanted to pursue a career in agriculture.

While going to school, she was one of the few women in the class.

"There were fewer women then, but it never hindered me," she said. "That's a credit to the people associated with animal agriculture."

Even though more women than ever are making their way into agriculture, Swanson said, it is an assimilation process.

For a new person entering the job market it takes time to become skilled enough to have a noticeable effect on that field, she said.

One woman who has made a difference in agriculture is Jan Lyons. The K-State graduate, who lives just outside Manhattan, became the first female president of the Kansas Livestock Association last December.

In the past, women were traditionally put in positions such as caring for young animals, but Swanson said that has changed. People like Lyons have made sure of that.

"Women are playing a different role today," she said. "They are being looked to for leadership."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Welcome Back concert gets an audience

The Welcome Back Concert was a success.

Quality music was played, and an appreciative audience showed up Sunday.

That's good. In the past, when the Union Program Council coordinated the Welcome Back Concert, the attendance was lacking.

When UPC passed on trying another concert, KSDB FM 91.9, the campus radio station, picked it up.

This was the last hope for a welcome-back concert. If it didn't work, no other campus groups would be interested in organizing another.

The success stemmed from several things.

DB92 booked local and area talent.

The audience was exposed to the bands that would be playing in the bars during the year — a nice preview.

The station put the concert in the City Park. People could either walk or drive right up to the stage.

The venue also had lots of seats. Bleachers were in the back, and benches were up front.

But you didn't have to watch to enjoy it. Many listened as they tossed the Frisbee around or played with the dog. Others sat on their porch and listened.

The best part of the concert was it was free. That's a great way to welcome students back.

One criticism of the event was it was not multicultural. It's true. One band was heavy metal, and the others were alternative.

But the problem with trying to develop a multicultural event is you can't get a good showing from any group.

Diversity is a good thing. But it can kill a concert.

MARLETT'S WORLD

Coverage seen as racist

What do readers want?

The Collegian staff constantly asks this question.

We can make guesses and assumptions, but when it comes to actualities, we just don't know.

Metropolitan papers do intensive reader surveys and question focus groups over a period of several months to determine what readers want.

Since we don't have the resources to do that, we do the next-best thing — listen to the faculty, staff and readers who give us input.

Last week we created a lot of controversy with stories.

One had to do with race, and the other had to do with rape. By listening to our readers, we learned two things.

It seems no matter what we do, we can never get past the race issue.

On Aug. 23, we printed a story about assaults on campus.

In that story, we mentioned several cases, but in only one case did we describe the suspects — three black males in a car.

When this was brought up to me, I came up with a lot of reasons for it: problems with victims not remembering descriptions, descriptions not matching suspects, etc.

All the reasons were mentioned in the story.

But what it comes down to is this.

No matter what our reasons and intentions were, we were viewed as being racist.

Racism is a delicate issue around the newsroom.

We were accused of it last spring when we criticized Shanta Bailey, then chair of the Student Governing Association Elections and Grievance committees.

Not only were members of the student body and administration upset, but our staffers were upset as well.

No one likes to be called a racist, especially when it is not true.

Our staff had diversity and sexism training the week before classes started.

Regardless of what people think, the members of the Collegian staff are not racist.

However, what it comes down to is that sometimes we don't consider how the readers are going to feel, what they are going to think.

We're talking about perceptions, not intentions.

I believe we were right last spring.

Most of the staff believes we were right. Some readers thought we were wrong; some thought we were right.

However, I can see why people were upset, and I can understand their arguments against us.

Does that mean we are going to censor ourselves, not criticize someone who is black or not publish descriptions of suspects in cases because they are black?

Not only no, but hell no.

That's not our job.

Our job is to print the news. If that means pointing out the foibles of others or to let people know about crime in and around campus so that they can protect themselves, then so be it.

That is our job, regardless of skin color, gender, religion or age.

But when we make it a policy to identify suspects by skin color, we need to make sure to do it in all instances.

And when we criticize someone who is not doing a job, we need to make sure to criticize everyone else who is not doing the job they were appointed to do.

The other thing we learned was how important it is to be a source of information for students. The controversy was our coverage of the rape of a K-State student.

I've heard some administrators were a bit upset about it.

Perhaps they think it's bad public relations for the University when we publish that information.

Tough.

We had staff members who listened to people in class say they were going to start locking their doors.

I heard discussions by women who said they were going to be more careful.

I heard people on campus discussing this more than any other story.

I can't tell you how great that makes us feel.

If only one woman is saved from being raped because of that story, then it was worth any number of phone calls I get and meetings I have to attend.

And it's not just women. It's men who are saved from being robbed or mugged. It's keeping each student a little safer.

Our job is not to scare people, it's to make them more aware.

And frankly, we don't care what the administration thinks about our coverage and public relations.

We care about students being safe.

So, what can you, the reader, do to help us with our jobs?

If you think we are insensitive, tell us. But, tell us constructively.

Don't use the blanket label racist, because that immediately gets people defensive.

Instead, try to get a dialogue going so we understand how you feel, what your perception was.

And when it comes to campus safety, what you can do is take the information in our stories and use it.

Lock your doors and windows.

Be aware of your surroundings. Be safe. Don't just read the stories and then throw the paper away.

Take the information to heart.

It's OK to ride on sidewalk, sometimes

Dear Editor,

I just read the article in the Friday, Aug. 26, Collegian on riding bikes on sidewalks across campus. I have to say that I disagree with most of what was said.

Just this summer, I purchased a mountain bike, and I began riding to campus. I will be honest — I do ride on the sidewalks.

However, I only ride on the sidewalks when students are in class or after most of the classes are done for the day.

My point is that there are times when the sidewalks are almost totally clear and riding a bike on them would not cause any problems, especially if common sense is used.

I am not saying that there is not a problem with some bikers riding on sidewalks across campus.

I do know, however, that extreme rules and fines are not the answer. A funny thing usually occurs when more rules and regulations are created.

The rules are only enforced for a short period of time, or the people affected by the rules find new and more creative ways to circumvent the current situation. I am going to go out on a limb here and not just complain about the problem but also offer some solutions.

I think the K-State Police and especially the administration should quit trying to treat just the symptoms of the problem. Think about this for just a minute.

There is a parking problem on campus to begin with; the current construction has made that problem worse. The administration has done studies about the parking problem, but of course have for one reason or the other failed miserably to take any action except raise parking-permit fees and increase parking-ticket fines.

So, the students have taken it upon themselves to find an alternative solution to the parking problem: lots of bikes on campus. The administration's solution: Raise revenue. Warning! This is not the answer!

The administration should try using a new word to solve this problem and not add to its old standby "B" word, bureaucracy. A new word should be used here, a "P" word — how about progress! Yes, this is the solution.

K-State Police and the administration should try to work with the students on this problem, add a few more bike paths and especially more bike racks.

They could allow bike riding on sidewalks except during class changes and times when the sidewalks are really congested. Another solution would be to restrict bike riding on those sidewalks that just do not have enough room for riders.

Now for the other side, bike riders do need to be considerate of students on foot and of traffic rules. If everyone would use common sense and try to work together, this problem would not be a problem at all, but an opportunity to show how mature and responsible college students are.

Laws target bicyclers, not walkers

Dear Editor,

A $25 fine for bike riding on campus sounds fair. Let's keep those "crazed bike riders" off the precious sidewalks.

But might I be so bold as to seek answers from your pool of infinite wisdom?

First, what will be the monetary fine for pedestrians walking on the bike paths?

Please don't be so naive to think that asking pedestrians to stay off will work.

After all, this paper was the one that said, "Students will remember the sting of a $25 fee."

Are all the pedestrians who choose to walk on the bike paths, especially the ones in front of Durland, fair game for the "crazed bike riders" who live to run over daydreamers and self-examiners?

Second, with the construction, can you suggest a reasonable way of biking from, say the Union to Willard or King?

Third, this policy will force more biking on Anderson, Denison, Claflin and Manhattan.

Many car drivers don't seem to realize that bikes have a right to the lane just as cars do, even if the car is slowed down.

You'll remember it was a cop who said this construction will inconvenience everyone: walkers, bikers (and drivers).

So, how are campus cops planning on rude (or are they also "crazed"?) car drivers who intimidate bikers or try and force them off the road?

And finally, how are the "crazed bike rider" cop patrols going to be able to enforce this policy in the middle of campus without riding their bikes on the sidewalks?

They're just as liable to run over a pedestrian as the other psychos on two wheels.

Food for thought.

Sports have no place at K-State

A hot topic right now is hating the Jayhawks. How about hating the Cats instead?

Most students aren't here long enough to learn the real thing. With luck, you'll never have reasons to — which is all you need to know. Never forget, never forgive, as my Scot ancestors used to say.

Lacking personal reasons, you might still begin wondering whether K-State wouldn't be better off without:

Jabbering cavemen in the back of the class who finally get through everyone's heroic efforts to ignore them by dropping a gold chain every day or so. We don't need to know how thick your neck is, football Neanderthal; we already know about your skull.

Don't bother touting some jock law student or engineer. One thinking tool you might find useful — assuming you came here to learn how to think, which may be a stretch for some of the baseball-cap crowd — is The Exception That Proves The Rule.

Don't pimp bogus statistics about how jocks top the average GPA. Why do you suppose the push is on to base college admission and eligibility on their so-called grades instead of the national tests the rest of us have to take?

Don't cry about how hard the team works for us. Yesterday some people ran up high mountains with heavy loads into something a lot hotter than two-a-days.

All they're working for is a paycheck. And to save their lives, plus part of your American heritage, in case you care as much as you do about the damn sports page.

A lot of good people right here on campus spent all summer sweating to keep the place from turning into a jungle, to lay new asphalt (including some where the jocks can park and the rest of us would get the boot), and a thousand other things.

All any campus worker gets is food on the table and maybe an honorable retirement. No full ride to a better life. No shot at a million-plus salary.

We can do without demigods who get court cases thrown out on probable cause — for which cause the law would hang the rest of us by our toenails.

Thrown out by a judge who's a former local Big Eight referee, for what that's worth. Bad call, ref.

Do we really need alumni who'd rather give every dime to Bob Dole's mega-PAC than buy K-State anything but another jewel for the Athletic Department?

And arguments, God help us, about whether we can afford both a dance line and a pom squad — when we can barely pay the faculty, or keep Topeka from tightening the screws on students every year.

K-State might be better off without you, come to think of it, if you passionately believe it makes a fart in a flaw whether the Cats ever again float to the top of some obscure bowl.

The only other time they got that far, remember, they treated the national audience to a post-game (post-loss) fight. Big, big plus for K-State.

It's entertainment. But since you came here to learn, try learning that K-State doesn't have anything to do with you supporting the Wildcats emotionally, or financially, or with whether they live or die.

Tornado kills 4, rips 13-mile path

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BIG FLATS, Wis. — A tornado whipped through this small central Wisconsin town Saturday night, killing two people and crushing the municipal building like a soda can, a National Guardsman said. A second tornado farther west took two more lives, including a 3-year-old girl.

A man and woman were found dead in the wreckage of a home near Big Flats in the central part of the state. A tornado tore a 13-mile-long, half-mile wide swath through Adams County, said Frank Zernia, the county emergency government director.

At least seven people were injured. The township of Monroe Center nearby also was in the tornado's path.

"There is so much damage, so much debris — insulation pulled out of houses, two-by-fours stuck into the ground," said Capt. Scott Meske, a spokesman for the 40 National Guardsmen sent to the area.

The main street was a tangle of debris. The municipal building was crushed like a soda can, and trees were snapped in half, Meske said.

Shirley Andersen, 58, looking at the wreckage of her trailer home Sunday morning, said the last thing she remembered before the twister hit was the lights going out and her husband reaching for a candle.

"And that was it. That fast. It was over," she said.

Anderson, her husband and two granddaughters escaped without serious injury.

In Eau Claire County, about 80 miles east of Minneapolis, a 3-year-old girl was killed when a trailer was knocked over near Foster, and a woman died when a van was blown off Interstate 94, said Mark Briski, spokesman for the Township Fire Department, which serves several communities.

A house-by-house search turned up no other victims, Briski said.

Crews were scheduled to begin assessing damage later in the day, he said.

Problems confronted in new ID validation

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

If you've had problems with the new student ID validating system, you're not alone.

Instead of stamping the back of student IDs to validate them, now the magnetic strip on the back provides easy access to student information.

The IDs work like a credit card, Don Foster, University registrar said. They are run through magnetic readers to verify if students are enrolled and have paid their fees, he said.

There are a few kinks in the new system, however.

The magnetic reader at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex couldn't read her ID to verify her enrollment for this semester, she said.

She was allowed into the Rec Complex, she said, but told she would need to buy a new ID.

"It's kind of a hassle that people didn't anticipate," Bever said. "I wish they had signs to let students know."

Derek Walters, Rec Complex Facility Manager, said the Rec Complex was lenient for the first week of school, but starting Monday, it'll be tightening up.

Walters said the magnetic reader hasn't been reading some of the strips right because they're damaged or need to be re-coded.

"I think it will be a good system. It's a lot more versatile, and we get good information on the students, like classification in school," Walters said.

It was only a matter of when K-State would go to the new validating system, Foster said.

He said the University has been encoding the magnetic strip for the past five years.

Foster said problems were bound to occur.

Just like merchants trying to read a credit card, there will be a certain number of misreads, but K-State is about at the accepted level of misreads, Foster said.

If your student ID has problems, take it to the ID Center in Willard Hall. It will be evaluated and encoded or replaced if necessary. Replacement is free for normal wear and tear or $10 if it has been damaged. If you have questions, call 532-6321.

McENTYRE WAIVED

McEntyre signed with the Colts as a free agent last April.

Hocutt took advantage of opportunity

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State was the only school willing to take a chance on Kirby Hocutt.

And now, the 5-foot-10 linebacker, who seemed to be a gamble for the Wildcats, has turned into a co-captain and team leader.

"I had always dreamed about playing in the Big Eight Conference and a Division I school," said Hocutt, who registered a team-high 135 tackles as a junior. "K-State was the only opportunity that I had."

Not many teams considered Hocutt a Division I prospect — mainly because of his size.

"All the coaches, I remember, would all come in and look at the film, and they would say, 'Well, how tall is he?' And they would say 5-foot-10. Then, they would all leave," Hocutt said.

A year ago, K-State started from scratch at the linebacker position and relied on newcomers to fill the void in the middle.

Hocutt burst onto the scene in his first year as a full-time player in 1993 by starting all 12 games at middle linebacker. He finished with 135 tackles, three interceptions, four sacks, five other tackles for losses and one fumble recovery.

Hocutt

The three years of laboring without much reward finally paid dividends for Hocutt, who had just 23 tackles in his previous two seasons.

The senior from Sherman, Texas, said the first two years were trying times at K-State.

"It was frustrating, but you take it as a challenge," he said. "I was a long way from home — eight hours. The first few years it would get a little tough to stick it out and not quit and go home.

"But I didn't have to prove anything to anybody. I just had to prove to myself that I could stick it out and fulfill a dream that I've had since I was a little kid."

Hocutt led the Cats in tackles in six games last season. In K-State's bowl-clinching game against Missouri, he registered 11 tackles, one sack and one interception.

Playing behind former Cat Brooks Barta, who is second on K-State's all-time tackle list, is something Hocutt said made him a better player.

"I played behind Brooks Barta for three years," he said. "And Brooks wasn't the greatest athlete, either.

"One thing I learned is that you don't play football with your abilities — you play football with your heart. You have to be determined that you are going to get to the football, and that you are not going to let anyone stand in the way of getting there. I think it is what's inside that makes a football player."

"Everybody says that you have to be so strong, but speed and agility, those are my assets," he said. "With my size, I'm not going to overpower anybody.

"It's just a dream to get out there and line up against Cale Gundy, Tommy Frazier and Calvin Jones. You actually tackle those guys and realize that those guys are nothing special. They are football players just like everybody else. You can't put anybody on a level above yourself."

Hocutt considers himself an overachiever, and it's not difficult to understand why when he expresses his views on last season and the year to come.

"Last year was even a disappointment to many of us," said Hocutt, who will graduate with a degree in political science in December. "The Copper Bowl was nice, but it wasn't where we wanted to be."

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

DeShawn Fogle, sophomore linebacker, makes a tackle against Colorado last season. Fogle registered 12 tackles in the game and is one of six linebackers returning from last year's squad.

Entire linebacking unit returns

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The linebackers have long been the leaders of the defense.

This season, after senior linebackers Kirby Hocutt and Laird Veatch have been elected team captains, it looks as if the linebackers are the leaders of the entire team.

"It's a huge honor because your teammates decided it," Veatch said. But any time you are a senior, you automatically have a role as a leader.

"Being captain just makes it more visible," he said.

Veatch has 13 starts under his belt coming into the 1994 season and is a three-year letterwinner.

He leads a group of linebackers who rendered a solid effort last year and gained invaluable experience.

This season, all three starting linebackers of a year ago, as well as the second-team three, return.

"Everybody says we had a good year last year, but the thing is not to let that drop down," Hocutt said. "Some people have a good junior year, and the senior year is a letdown."

Last season, Hocutt led K-State with 135 tackles and earned honorable mention all-Big Eight recognition.

He then added 12 more tackles in the Copper Bowl to push his total to 147 for the year.

Perhaps the player who gained the most experience from his playing time last season was junior Percell Gaskins.

"If I knew then what I know now, I might be an all-American right now," Gaskins said. "I've learned to calm down and let things come to me.

"There are times when you should turn it up and times when you should be patient."

Gaskins broke into the starting line-up last season as a sophomore and was named Big Eight Conference Defensive Newcomer of the Year.

"We have a lot of discipline problems that we need to get straight," Hocutt said. "Things like doing what coaches tell you and a few guys taking things for granted."

WILDCAT DEPTH CHART

LINEBACKERS

LB	Laird Veatch	Dart Forst
LB	Kirby Hocutt	DeShawn Fogle
LB	Percell Gaskins	Mike Ekeler

Ekeler is best known for his special-team work, but stepped in on several occasions last year at linebacker.

Fogle came off the bench in the Colorado game and collected 12 stops, nine of which were solo tackles.

"Last year, we had to go out and prove ourselves, and this year people are going to say, 'Ahh, there they are,'" Hocutt said. "It's going to be just as tough to keep up the reputation."

One area that needs work, Hocutt said, is tackling.

"We missed a lot of tackles last year," he said. "There were a lot of times last year when we had some busts."

Expectations have been raised because of last season's success, but Veatch said this season isn't much different from any other.

"You always set your goals high," Veatch said. "A lot of people this year expect to get better and better."

Huskers kick off season with lopsided victory

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Nebraska, which ended last season with a heartbreaking loss in the Orange Bowl, started this season with an impressive victory in the Kickoff Classic.

Tommie Frazier ran for three touchdowns and passed for one and Lawrence Phillips rushed for 126 yards as the fourth-ranked Cornhuskers routed No. 24 West Virginia 31-0 Sunday in the opening game of college football's 125th season.

Both teams went 11-0 last year before losing their bowl games. Nebraska missed a last-second field goal and fell to Florida State 18-16 in a national title showdown. West Virginia lost to Florida 41-7 in the Sugar Bowl.

The way the Cornhuskers played Sunday, they appear capable of reaching another championship game this season.

West Virginia didn't cross midfield until it recovered a fumble early in the fourth quarter and was shut out for the first time since a 19-0 loss to Penn State in 1986.

Nebraska gained 285 yards and 17 first downs in the first half while holding West Virginia to 4 yards and two first downs. For the game, the Cornhuskers outgained the Mountaineers 468-89, including 368-8 on the ground.

Frazier, a junior who has directed Nebraska's option attack since midway through his freshman season, helped the Cornhuskers take command in the second quarter after going ahead 3-0 on Tom Sieler's 32-yard field goal in the opening period.

Frazier scored on runs of 25 and 27 yards and threw a 12-yard touchdown pass to Reggie Baul to give Nebraska a 24-0 halftime lead. He added a 42-yard TD run in the fourth quarter.

Frazier ran 12 times for 130 yards and was 8-of-16 for 100 yards. Phillips carried 24 times.

Crew team training for upcoming season

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

It's 5 a.m. and the alarm is ringing at K-state's rowing team members' residences.

Time to hit the water and work out.

This may seem much too early to open an eyelid, much less get up and do physical exercise to most students, but to those involved in the rowing crew, it's a routine.

And it's a routine they don't mind some say.

"I don't mind getting up at all," said Jeff Peterson, junior in construction science, "I enjoy it so much, it doesn't matter."

"Once I started, I was hooked," he said.

The club consists of K-State and Manhattan High School students who are scheduled to participate in four meets this fall and five in the spring.

Meets consist of events like the eight-oared shell race, which is rowing in fours with two people on each side, and one person being a strategist.

There are also lightweight divisions where men weighing less than 155 lbs. and women weighing less than 130 lbs. compete and there is even a co-ed race.

"The co-ed race is fun, but anytime you get a bunch of rowers together, it will be competitive," said K-State head rowing coach Al Koch.

There are medals, ribbons and trophies for those that place in the meets, but that isn't the reason the competitiveness is there.

"Rowing can build character, keep you physically fit, and make you competitive," said Koch. "This is a sport that is good for any student.

"Rowing gives you the benefits that any type of swimming can give," he said.

Koch said he hopes that more students will realize how beneficial rowing can be and take an interest.

"We are always recruiting," Koch said.

An informational meeting will take place at 7:30 p.m., Sept. 7, in Denison 113. Anyone interested can attend.

"Those interested don't have to commit right away," Koch said. "They can come to the workouts for a couple of weeks and see if it's for them."

The only requirements to be on the crew is to have a little athletic ability and a wallet that can go without an extra $80 a semester.

Trip costs are added as well, but they are usually split among the rowers. However, fundraising will cover the expense on most occasions.

"You can usually raise enough to pay your way," Dave Lewis, senior in nutrition and exercise science, said, "and the dues of $80 a semester are the lowest in the state."

The types of fundraising that occur range from book sales to raffles.

One interesting fundraiser is an Urgathon.

"An urgathon is a machine that shows you how far you've rowed in a certain amount of time," Koch said.

"We try to get people to sponsor a rower and donate money for the amount of distance he/she rows," he said.

"Rowing can build character, keep you physically fit and make you competitive."

TRINA HOLMES
Collegian

Some former residence-hall residents found damage bills waiting for them at their permanent addresses this summer.

Michelle Baker, sophomore in mass communications, said she was surprised by the amount of money she was billed for various infractions of the check-out procedure.

"I figured my roommate and I would get fined $15 for improper check-out because we were late," Baker said. "I knew that, but I didn't know about the additional $40 they were going to fine us for improper cleaning of the room and touch-up paint for the walls."

Baker said she wrote the Department of Housing and Dining Services a letter and made a phone call, but she never received a reply.

"I think it's unfair because we paid so much to live in our room and then got a $55 bill," Baker said. "I mean, some of that should've been included in our monthly fee."

Baker said many people probably didn't protest their billing because writing checks to the Housing and Dining Services became routine.

"It's almost like they can get away with fining you for everything because people will pay it," Baker said. "You get so used to writing checks to them that it gets to the point of, 'Oh well, it's just another check.'"

However, Courtney Knapple, sophomore in speech, said she didn't consider her fine to be part of the routine.

Knapple said she knew she was going to contest it the moment she learned of its existence.

"When my R. A. (resident assistant) came to my room, she said everything was fine, but I'd be receiving an improper check-out fine because I wasn't at the last floor meeting to pencil in a check-out time," Knapple said.

"I knew I was going to contest it, but my parents were there, so I didn't worry about it at the time," she said.

Knapple took her appeal to Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

"I told him I didn't know that what I did was improper, and he didn't make me pay it," Knapple said.

Hasan said most appeals occur around the first of the year.

"Every year around enrollment we hear from people who've had their records attached because they've ignored our bills," Hasan said.

"We usually see three or four people," he said. "Most acknowledge responsibility for what they've done, send us a check and are done with it."

Housing and Dining Services is the only department that can release the freeze on the records of students with delinquent residence-hall charges, Hasan said.

"When I say attaching records, it means they are frozen. Students lose the ability to enroll, add or drop classes, or get their transcripts," Hasan said. "Several departments can do this for non-payment, and we're one of them."

Hasan said the freeze is helpful in collecting payment from students no longer attending K-State.

Hasan said most of the bills students received were for broken or missing furniture and damaged walls.

Bills are issued for the exact cost of parts and labor, he said, and monies collected from improper check-out fines are pooled into general housing funds used for residence-hall maintenance and upkeep.

"We're not in this to make a profit," Hasan said.

Hasan said the system would be undergoing a review.

"We're not going to give up holding people responsible," Hasan said. "If we absorb the cost of damages, then everyone ends up paying. But then again, we don't want to have nit-picky bills."

checking account.

Students use it instead of writing checks, and it is taken at any place worldwide that accepts VISA.

It is a way to keep track of the purchases you make and not have to deal with the checks at the end of the month, Schaefer said.

"The debit card is free for the first six months, then you pay $1.50 a month with three free ATM transactions per month at any non-Commerce Bank ATM machine," Schaefer said.

This is unlike the regular ATM card that charges $1 for every non-Commerce Bank ATM transaction.

Another thing to consider when deciding on a checking account is what minimum balance you usually keep in your account.

There are five different accounts geared toward the student that require no minimum balance, and the monthly fees range from $0 to $6. The account that has no minimum balance required and no monthly fee is Commerce Bank's ATM checking account.

"It's for the student that doesn't write many checks," Schaefer said. "It's also for the student that does a lot of cash transactions because they have unlimited ATM withdrawals without a fee as long as they are done at a Commerce-owned ATM."

There are five Commerce Bank ATMs in Manhattan. This is the second highest number of ATM machines in Manhattan. Kansas State Bank has nine ATMs in Manhattan, all of which can be used free for Kansas State Bank transactions.

Some of the banks in Manhattan offer special features that might help the student make a decision toward a checking account.

Capitol Federal Savings offers P.S. Payment Service. This is a service where you can make all of your bill payments over the phone.

First Savings Bank offers Firstline 24, a 24-hour banking phone line. This service makes it possible to call in at any time and inquire if a check has cleared or to get a statement over the phone for balancing your checkbook.

Kansas State Bank also offers this service, but it is called Xpress Banking Service.

Metropolitan Federal Bank is the only bank in Manhattan to offer an account solely for college students. There is unlimited check writing and no fee on checks. The requirement for a free account is only $100, and if your balance drops below that, the monthly fee is only $3.

"We're very proud of our student account," Kendra James, teller at Metropolitan Federal said.

They don't offer the debit card yet, but their ATM card, which is free with the account, can be used for purchases at Dillons, just like any ATM card.

Another thing Metropolitan Federal is proud of is that it has branches in many other states and that makes it possible for parents to make deposits into students' accounts from home, James said.

All the banks in Manhattan have branches elsewhere except for Kansas State Bank and Manhattan National Bank.

In making that final decision on which account is for you, there is always a bank representative ready and willing to talk to you about the choices and walk you through each one.

Union still planning expansion comes from the University, Coverdale, senior in political science and philosophy, said.

Coverdale said UPC is planning to book some large concerts on campus this year.

"We said we were going to try to bring in more musical acts," he said. "We are working on getting a bigger name for a concert in October."

Two musical acts are scheduled for September in Union Station, Coverdale said.

David Harris, acoustical guitarist, will play on Sept. 12 and the Drovers will play on Sept. 29, he said. The Drovers appeared on the "Blink" soundtrack.

More than 30 events are planned for September alone, Coverdale said.

The UPC budget was allocated over the summer by the executive council and Ann Claussen, assistant programming director.

Union expansion is still in the planning process, Peterson said.

The majority of students can get involved in the steering committee and its subcommittees, he said.

"We really want students to get involved," Ring said.

Students wanting to participate should talk to the Union Governing Board or Student Senate, Ring said.

"Just being a student, you have experience in what your needs are," she said. "I want people to get involved from all aspects of campus."

BURGERS AND DRUMS

Gemini Sanders (top photo), junior in engineering, gets a lesson in how to use a rhythm instrument from Kenya Ajanaku. Ajanaku was the featured entertainment at a picnic near the Quinlan Natural Area sponsored by the Black Student Union Saturday afternoon. Approximately 35 people listened to Ajanaku play several songs using various "djimbe" drums during his half-hour performance. Ajanaku emphasized audience participation.

Running for a cause

can generate. I can feel it all over," she said.

Carlin is in complete remission and was touched by the turnout for the evening and the show of support by the community, she said.

"It's kind of hard to talk in front of all these people, but when I get up here and see so many people who care so much for someone or for this cause, it really warms my heart," Carlin said.

People in the relay ran for several different reasons. Some were cancer survivors or fighting cancer. Some were running in memory of a loved one who died of cancer. Others ran because they felt it was a good cause.

Betty Piper, food service director for Memorial Hospital and a relay walker, said it was a cause she believes in.

"I not only walk in this for cancer, but I also walk for multiple sclerosis. It's just a real worthwhile cause," Piper said.

Mark Haas, a member of the first infantry division band of Fort Riley, said his team was trying to go for the most laps during the relay.

"It just looked like a fun thing to be doing for a good cause," Haas said.

Some members of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority and the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity walked in the relay as a philanthropic activity, said Jennifer Hull, a member of Alpha Delta Pi and junior in vocal performance.

"We thought it would be a good way to raise money for a good cause and a good way to meet a lot of new people," Hull said.

There was another, more personal reason that Hull got involved, she said.

"Personally, I got involved because my next-door neighbor, a real good friend of mine, just died of breast cancer, and I just wanted to do some thing for her and her memory," Hull said.

Besides helping to organize this year's event, Wichman also had personal reasons for getting involved.

"My dad died of colon cancer in December," Wichman said. "He was 59 years old."

FULBRIGHT SCHOLARSHIPS
for the 1995-1996 academic year
More than 600 awards providing round-trip transportation, tuition and maintenance for one academic year abroad.
In addition to graduate students, seniors are also eligible. Selection is based upon grades, recommendations, and a plan of study that underscores the need to study abroad. In all cases an applicant must have a particular country in mind, as well as suggest a particular school, institute, or research center where he or she would like to study. While the competition for these awards is rigorous, 25 K-Staters became Fulbrighters during the past decade. For further details and application forms, contact Walter Kolonosky, Chairperson, Fulbright Scholarship Committee, Eisenhower Hall 23. Office Hours Tuesday and Thursday 9:30, or call 532-6760.

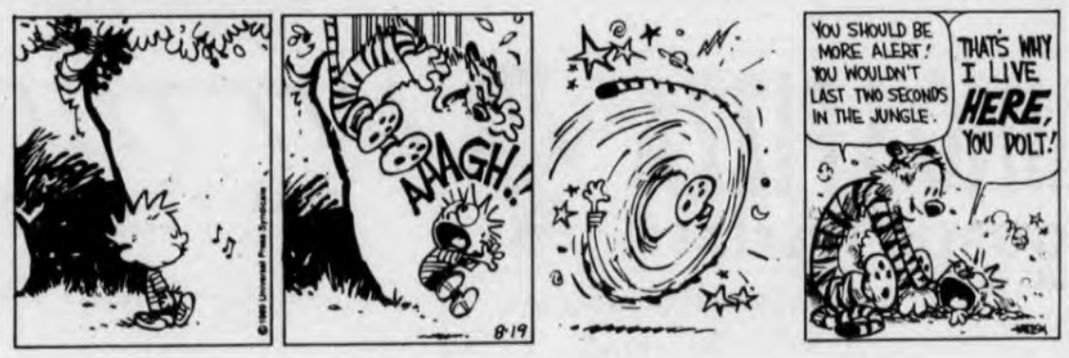
RUNNING ON GREASE



SAN FRANCISCO — The exhaust coming out of the tailpipe had a whiff of donuts rather than the usual diesel miasma as "the Lard Car" ended its transcontinental trek.

The four women on board fueled their 1984 Chevy van with used french fry oil from fast-food eateries for a trip of more than 3,000 miles that started Aug. 10. The used french fry oil had to be filtered, they said. A little wood alcohol was blended with the oil.

Live jazz draws in crowd, local talent to brewery

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

The Manhattan jazz scene is being revived.

The Little Apple Brewing Co. is bringing jazz to life every Monday night.

"People like having a nice venue where they can go and appreciate jazz," Ian West, co-owner of the Little Apple, said.

He said there are usually between 100 and 200 people in the audience on Monday nights.

"We ran jazz all through the summer, and we still had great support," West said.

He said University faculty and students are also big supporters of the jazz nights.

"We are starting to get a regular crowd (on Monday night)," Michael Gassmann, executive chef at Little Apple, said.

The idea for a consistent jazz schedule stemmed from the restaurant's Thursday night live entertainment, West said.

He said the restaurant booked a lot of jazz groups on Thursday nights, and when they did not, people were disappointed.

West said he conducted a meeting of local jazz musicians and enthusiasts. At the meeting, the restaurant agreed to provide the venue and cover the expenses for jazz musicians to perform, and the musicians agreed to provide the talent.

"Most of our talent is from Manhattan and surrounding areas," West said.

He said Manhattan has some very strong ties to jazz.

The International Association of Jazz Educators, which represents 47 countries, is in Manhattan.

Bill Lee, the new executive director of the association, donated a baby grand piano to the club, West said. Lee plays at Little Apple on a regular basis.

"The jazz fraternity is very much behind the club," West said.

Tonight at 7, Wasted Potential and special guest Dennis Wilson will be playing at Little Apple.

Wilson said he came to Manhattan because he wanted to see the stars when he looks at the sky.

Not only has Wilson received Grammy nominations for music he has written for Manhattan Transfer, but he has also played with Ella Fitzgerald, Lena Horne and Sammy Davis Jr., among others.

In addition, Wilson said, he has played on the "Cosby Show" with the Count Basie Band, and he just completed a tour of Japan with the Carnegie Orchestra.

"This is one of only a few performances I'll be doing," Wilson said.

LIVE JAZZ BANDS

The Little Apple Brewing Co. presents the Jazz Club, featuring regional jazz bands from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. every Monday night. Following is the Jazz Club schedule for September. For additional information, call 539-5500.

Aug. 29	Wasted Potential and special guest Dennis Wilson
Sept. 5	The Mike Metheny Quartet
Sept. 12	The Chuck Berg Group
Sept. 19	The Bill Lee Trio

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Crush result of deeper problems

Dear Cassandra,

Recently, I have met a very attractive and intelligent young lady I would like to get to know better. The only problem is that I am already involved with a girl and have been for more than two years.

I have a wonderful relationship with my girlfriend. She is my best friend. I can't get this girl out of my head.

She brings out new emotions in me that I have never experienced. Just looking at her and thinking about her sets my inner soul at ease.

Should I follow my emotions and try to to develop a relationship with this new girl, risking hurting and losing my girlfriend? Should I just let these emotions pass, leaving this beautiful young lady a memory of the past, risking perhaps losing the woman I was meant to be with?

I am not going to lie or cheat on my girlfriend. That is just something I couldn't do. The question remains: What should I do?

Signed,
Dazed and Confused

Dear Dazed,

This could be one of two things: a crush, which often happens in long-term relationships, or it could be a symptom of a problem.

Maybe you're bored with the way things are going in your relationship. You see the grass on the other side, and think it's definitely greener. This could be a sign that you and your girlfriend are in a rut. Let your girlfriend know what's going on with you. She deserves to know how you're feeling.

The other thing is, this could be a symptom of a deeper problem. Maybe things aren't as great with your relationship as you say. It could be the time to look at your relationship and see if there are any deep problems that you aren't discussing.

If it's a crush, don't throw your relationship away; you'll end up regretting it. But either way, let your girlfriend know how you feel.

Showcase offers area bands exposure, prize money

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Opus is back.

The eighth-annual Opus Band Competition will be Friday, Sept. 9, at the K-State Union Plaza.

For anyone not familiar with Opus, the term itself means an original work, especially a musical composition.

To area bands, however, it has come to mean much more.

"It's a great showcase to play in front of a lot of people if they've never heard of you before," Eric Melin, drummer for the band Truck Stop Love, said.

Truck Stop Love placed second in the competition two years ago. Melin said he felt it would be a positive step for any unknown band to enter.

"It's one of the better things UPC does every year," he said.

Brad Allen of Vitreous Humor said exposure is only one reason to enter the contest.

"It was a lot of fun, and it was the most money we had ever made at the time," Allen said.

The bands aren't the only ones excited about the competition. Melissa Wells, Eclectic Entertainment Committee chairwoman, is encouraging any unsigned bands to enter.

"We're real excited about it," she said. "Everyone should enter."

Union Program Council adviser Annie Gilliam said bands that enter the competition will have a shot at more exposure than just playing in the contest.

"UPC will invite any band that enters back to play at some future date, and those that place in the competition will be interviewed on K-Rock," she said.

The contest will be at the Union Plaza. In case of rain, the contest will be in the Union Ballroom.

Last year, more than 1,000 people attended.

"There are a lot of people in this town who do like live music," Wells said. "Hopefully, it won't rain this year."

OPUS EIGHT

Entries are due by 4 p.m., on Thursday in the UPC office. There is a $40 entry fee. The event will be Friday, Sept. 9, at the K-State Union Plaza.

Caller ID one of many new services

STACEY HAGER
Collegian

It's 2:30 a.m. on Monday. The sound of the telephone ringing has awakened someone from a peaceful sleep.

As usual, no one is there.

Wouldn't it be nice if there were a machine that had the capability to call the offender back?

Well now there is, with the introduction of Calling Number Delivery, better known as Caller ID.

Caller ID is a new popular value-added service that gives customers more control over incoming calls by allowing them to see a caller's telephone number on a display unit.

The service was introduced by Southwestern Bell in Kansas on July 18, 1993, in Lawrence.

On July 15 of this year, almost one year later, the service reached Manhattan, Wayne Franklin, Southwestern Bell Area Manager, said.

The introduction of these services coincides with Southwestern Bell's recent installation of advanced digital switching equipment. The company's digital equipment represents a significant investment in meeting present and future telecommunications needs of the community.

The system works by the telephone number of the incoming call appearing on a Caller ID display unit between the first and second ring. The display unit then stores the phone numbers in its memory with the time and date of the call.

The system was introduced for several reasons, including security, safety and convenience.

Caller ID is primarily used to eliminate harassing and obscene phone calls. Nearly 9 percent of U.S. households receive obscene phone calls each month, and a survey of 522 Americans revealed that three out of four women have received obscene calls.

After the introduction of Caller ID and similar services in New Jersey, annoyance calls dropped by 49 percent, Franklin said.

In addition, Caller ID also benefits people with disabilities. People who are hearing impaired or mobility impaired will not miss a call if they can't immediately answer the phone because incoming calls are stored, Franklin said.

The benefits of the service have already been documented in many instances.

There was an instance where police were investigating a burglary of a home with Caller ID, and when the officers checked the numbers stored in the unit, one of the numbers matched the number of the suspect's.

Evidently the suspect had called ahead to "case" the house and make sure no one was home. The police arrested the caller, Franklin said.

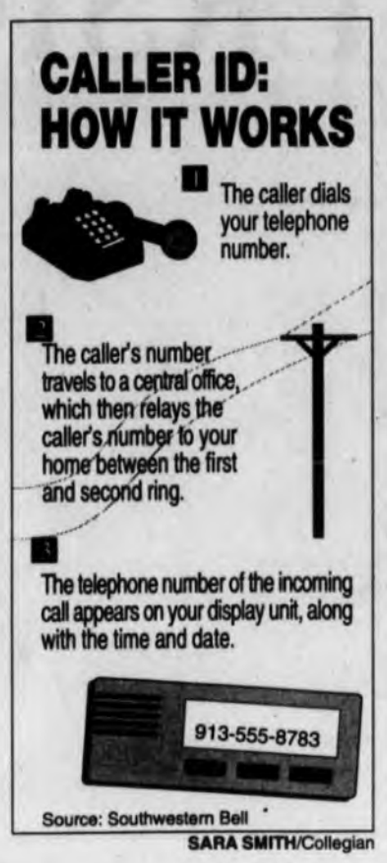
The interest in Southwestern Bell's new services, particularly Caller ID, is high, Franklin said.

"It's hard to say which aspect of Caller ID is most appealing — the convenience, the sense of security, or the ability to deter undesirable calls — but one thing is certain, this is a service many customers have been waiting for and want right away," Franklin said.

Bill Muir, Manhattan, has had the service for about a month andsaid he is very pleased with the results.

He can get rid of the unwanted calls, call back individuals who leave a message on his answering machine but no number and call back the ones who wouldn't leave a message, Muir said.

Muir said he enjoys knowing who has called him. "I was gone for five days and had 34 calls, but only five messages on my answering machine," Muir said.



The Caller ID display unit is available from Southwestern Bell and several vendors in the area.

Costs range from $40 to $100. The price of the Caller ID Value Package is $8.95 for residential customers, plus a one-time installation charge of $6. The value package combines the features of Caller ID, Call Blocker and Call Return.

Call Blocker is a service that rejects incoming calls from a customer's designated list of telephone numbers. The customer can also block the number of the last call received even if the originating phone number is unknown.

Call Return allows the customer to automatically call back the last incoming phone number whether you answer the call or not. Call Return also will keep trying to return the call for up to 30 minutes if that number is busy, Franklin said.

In addition to Caller ID, Southwestern Bell is also offering other new services, such as Auto Redial, Priority Call, Selective Call Forwarding and Call Trace.

▶ JOB GROWTH

Midwest employment outlook remains positive

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Job growth in the United States should remain steady during the fourth quarter, despite what some analysts see as signs of a slowing economy, a survey finds.

Milwaukee-based Manpower Inc., a temporary-help firm, said its quarterly telephone survey of 15,000 businesses, being released Monday, shows 26 percent plan to hire more workers. Ten percent plan job cuts, 61 percent expect no change, and 3 percent are uncertain.

Fourth-quarter hiring projections are lower than the previous two quarters, but better than the fourth quarter of last year, when 22 percent planned to add workers, and 11 percent projected cuts.

"The nation's job machine is now producing at a continuing and steady pace, but it is still tempered by a concern for total labor costs in a very competitive pricing environment," Manpower chief executive Mitchell S. Fromstein said.

Merrill Lynch & Co. senior economist Bruce Steinberg said the survey results are consistent with what we're seeing in the economy — it continues to grow, but not as rapidly as the first half of the year.

One factor slowing the economy is rising interest rates, Steinberg said.

Another is uncertainty over the effect of proposed health-care reforms on businesses, said Raymond Worseck, the chief economist with A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. in St. Louis.

"There's a great reluctance to hire people on a full-time basis if firms can possibly avoid it," Worseck said.

The best job growth is projected in the wholesale and retail trades, where 36 percent of companies polled said they'll hire additional employees, and only 8 percent foresee cuts. Manpower says that sector's outlook is the most optimistic in 16 years.

Most pessimistic is the mining sector, where only 11 percent of companies expect additional hiring, while 14 percent plan cutbacks.

Geographically, confidence is highest in the Midwest for the third straight quarter, Manpower said. In fact, the region's overall job outlook is the best since 1978, with 28 percent of firms expecting to hire additional workers and 10 percent planning cuts.

"I think what we tend to do in the Midwest is stay on an even keel," Worseck said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Welcome Back Concert brings students to City Park

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER
Collegian

A cool but welcoming Sunday afternoon in the park can be complemented best by only a few things: dogs, Hacky-Sack, live music and people gathered for mutual enjoyment.

This was the scene at Sunday's Welcome Back Concert in City Park.

It was a great day for an outdoor festival, with mild temperatures and partly cloudy skies. The Arts in the Park Stage in City Park makes for a great concert atmosphere.

The show, produced by KSDB-FM 91.9, featured local metal act Puke Weasel, former Opus favorite Vitreous Humor, psycho-folk singer Arthur Dodge, Lawrence's Kill Creek, and from Minneapolis, Minn., God's Favorite Band.

Eric Melin, junior in radio and television and DB92 music director, said he was extremely happy about the good turnout.

"This is more students than I've ever seen at a welcome-back concert, at least in the past four years," Melin said.

Scott Borm, vocalist and guitarist for Kill Creek, said this was to be Kill Creek's farewell concert. Luckily, it was just a joke because this quartet played nothing short of a blistering set of powerful riffage.

The show stopper, or certainly the set stopper, was Kill Creek's drummer Charles Sharpe, who went the extra mile with powerful, daring fills and flashy cymbal work.

Kill Creek has released an EP titled "Stretch" on Mammoth Records and will release a full-length album, "St. Valentine's Garage," on Oct. 11 with record release parties to follow at The Bottleneck, a club in Lawrence.

Co-guitarist/bassist/vocalist Chris Benson's cowboy hat and counterpart Jim Crego's matted hair gave a hint to the music God's Favorite Band plays.

Although numbers like "Truckstop" recalled Minnesota's late great Husker Du, the trio still didn't elicit as much obvious audience response as Kill Creek. Some parts were down right dull. But when The Faves went to strong, recognizable material like "Sun Delay" and "Brede Boy," The Faves were in a territory that will take them furthest.

The Faves will be performing at 3 p.m. today at Streetside Records, 1231 Moro St.

By the time God's Favorite Band exited the stage, the crowd had thinned considerably, partly due to a lack of enthusiasm for them and partly because it had been more than six hours since the first band played.

Kassebaum vote is no error

"One of the more polite calls from the opposition said they should put me on a raft and send me to Cuba."

NANCY KASSEBAUM
Kansas Senator

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, besieged with emotional responses from some constituents, defended on Monday her vote for the crime bill now awaiting President Clinton's signature.

In an interview, she disputed a characterization that her vote was a mistake and said Republican leaders passed up what she considered a very attractive offer from Democrats that might have pared another $5 billion from its cost.

"I didn't believe it was a mistake because I thought the Democrats had made a substantial offer to have a vote on all the social spending in the bill," Kassebaum said.

Besides, Kassebaum said, she thinks the crime bill is needed, and she has supported it ever since the Bush administration proposed it — as have five other Republicans whose votes helped Democrats break a procedural logjam and send the bill toward Senate passage.

Still, the senator was getting calls from people irate over her vote.

"One of the more polite calls from the opposition said they should put me on a raft and send me to Cuba," Kassebaum said.

She got a note from a constituent who said, "Congratulations on your statesmanship in putting the people ahead of a political party."

There is no doubt, Kassebaum said, that the vote came down to a political battle between Clinton and the Republican congressional leadership and a test of the lobbying power of the National Rifle Association, which strongly opposed a provision banning 19 semiautomatic weapons, but exempts 650 sporting rifles.

"There are some in the Republican Party who saw this as an issue that would really get Republican juices and blood flowing," she said. "It was just a last chance to have a standoff at the OK Corral."

The Senate GOP leadership made a mistake, Kassebaum said, by rejecting an offer from the Democratic leadership to vote on a Republican-sponsored amendment to remove $5 million worth of the prevention programs from the bill, lowering its cost to $25 billion.

"I couldn't believe it," she said of the GOP rejection. "I thought that was an opportunity for Republicans to say, 'This is a great example of Democrats always wanting to spend more, and we forced them to reduce it.'"

She said the NRA succeeded in confusing the issue.

"I have to hand it to them," she said of the anti-gun control lobby. "They were enormously clever in their campaign because they made the issue pork, but there are other things that have more pork in them, too."

Kassebaum said she respects constituents who opposed the bill, but thinks they were misinformed about its contents.

"I certainly understand there are many people who were opposed to the crime bill," she said. "Most of the opposition was, in many ways, enhanced by the NRA, which believed that any ban on semiautomatic assault weapons could be a camel's nose under the tent. I don't view it that way.

"I also don't believe it's going to solve our crime problems, but I do believe those types of weapons are not important to hunting and recreational use and there are plenty of weapons still legal out there."

Kassebaum said it is irritating for people to become so upset over the $5 billion for social programs contained in the crime bill, when the federal government spends $25 billion a year on 155 job-training programs when people don't know whether they're working or not.

The senator said 80 percent of the $30 billion in the bill — $5 billion to be spent each year for six years — would go to beef up law enforcement, build prisons and support drug enforcement.

The rest of the money — attacked as pork and social spending by critics — would go for prevention programs, she said.

Lafene catches construction bug

STEFFANY J. CARREL
Collegian

Construction on campus buildings seems to be the theme this year at K-State, and Lafene Health Center has not been spared.

This summer, the lobby of Lafene was remodeled to make room for additional office space.

"We've increased our staff in medical records over the last few years," Sally Sowell, administrative officer for Lafene, said.

"It became really uncomfortable and really congested all squashed together like that," Sowell said.

Another concern was making sure Lafene met Americans with Disabilities Act regulations, she said.

"The flow was not good, and we knew we had to do something," Sowell said. "For example, now our counters are at the right level, meeting ADA requirements."

Sowell said the renovation to Lafene took the majority of the summer to do because the clinic was still open for business during construction.

"We cut the lobby not quite in half," Randy Slover, director of facility building maintenance, said. "And actually, we're still working on it. We didn't get done quite on time."

Slover said facilities still needed to install carpet and a set of roll-up doors.

"The carpet is supposed to get done this weekend," he said.

Students will also notice that in addition to less space, the lobby television is now gone and with it, afternoon episodes of Donahue and Oprah.

"When we went to an all-appointment system, we realized we didn't need as large of a lobby as when we were all walk-in appointments," Sowell said.

"And if you don't have people waiting as long, we didn't really feel like we needed a TV," she said. "Besides, there are TVs elsewhere in the building."

With sidewalks being narrowed to accommodate the ongoing construction to Farrell Library next door, some students say they are feeling uncomfortable in the new lobby.

"You feel like you're in a

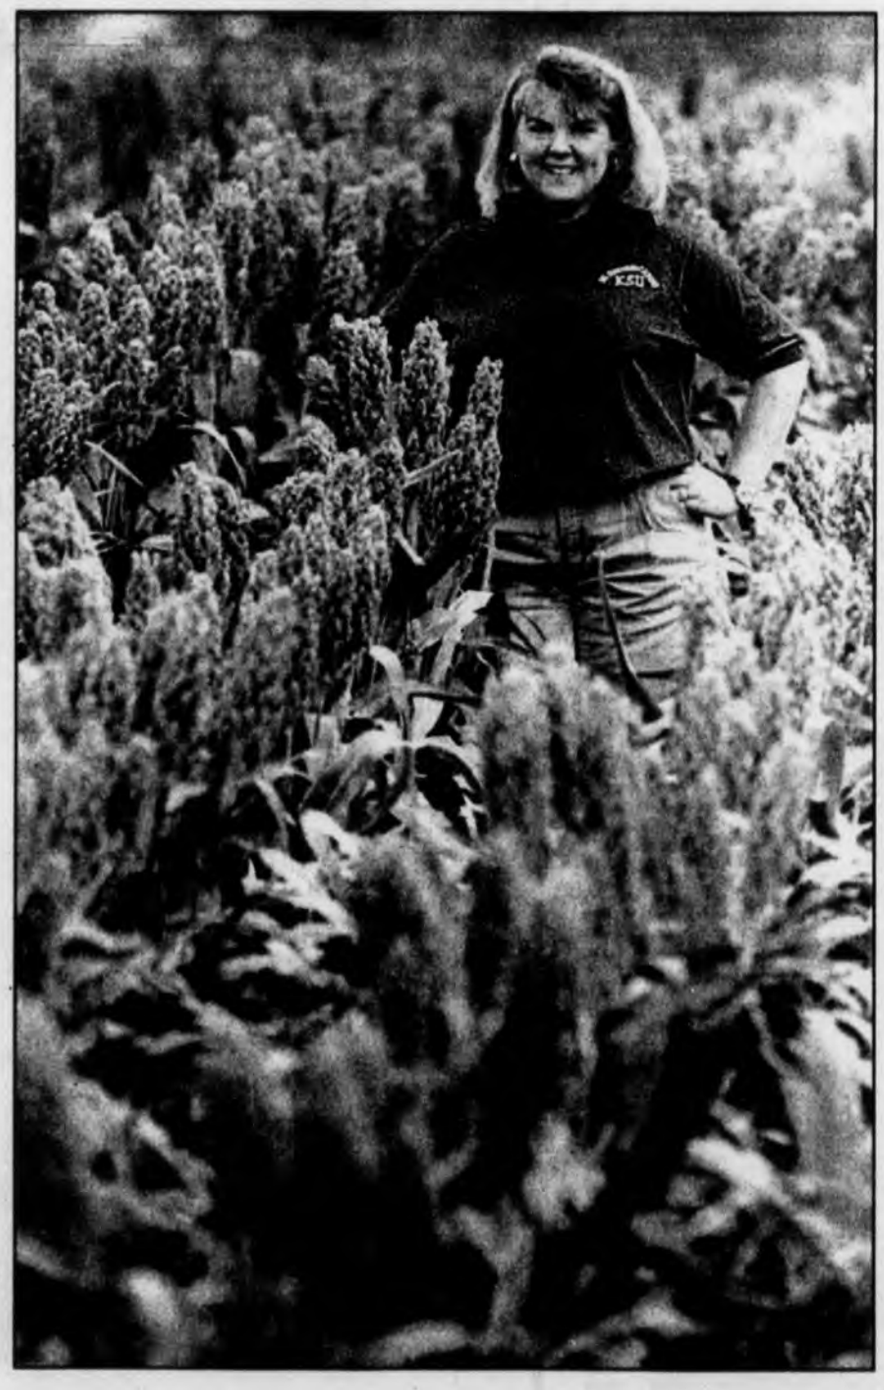
Angie Stump, junior in agricultural journalism, isn't just writing today's crop report. She's telling agriculture students nationwide how to develop a successful career in agriculture.

Junior in ag journalism acts as a guide for students

Stump is the national vice president of Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow, a departmental organization. ACT is designed for college students who have a professional interest in the field of communications related to agriculture, Larry Erpelding, K-State ACT adviser, said.



Five students, including Stump, form the national team elected this past month at the National ACT Conference held in Fort Worth, Texas. The National ACT Conference is held in conjunction with the Livestock Publication Council.

Nearly 20 candidates competed for five positions by submitting an intent to run application and presenting a speech, Stump said.

With her office, Stump will be responsible for the critique contest on the national level. She will prepare materials sent to her by contestants nationwide and make arrangements with the contest judges.

Old pro shares words of wisdom with new greeks

DEBBIE PILANT

So, how does a new pledge survive greek life? That question has no easy answer, but there are some tips a new member can take to heart that might help.

Stephanie Duerksen, senior in horticulture, has been in the greek system for three years. As a member of the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority, she has learned what it takes to survive sorority life.

The hardest thing about getting involved in a sorority is living in the residence halls the first year, she said.

"It's hard to know what's going on," she said. "You have to work hard to keep informed."

It is important to spread activities out so members don't overextend themselves, she said.

"You don't always have the time to do everything you want, so you must budget your time," Duerksen said.

The sororities help new members make the transition into greek life in several ways. Duerksen said the study hours helped her the most.

"You learn new study habits," she said.

Sororities also help by spreading out programs. Duerksen said this is done so the new members don't feel they have to do greek

FIVE REASONS FOR COUNSELING

1. About two-thirds of all students who come in for counseling list stress as the reason.
2. About one-half report relationship problems.
3. Thirty-five percent report family issues as a problem.
4. About one-third have depression symptoms.
5. About one-fourth have academic problems.

- About 1,000 students attended counseling sessions last year, and most of them attended five sessions each.
- Right now, counselors see about 225 students a week. Peak involvement is between October and November, before Thanksgiving break.

Campus counseling beats the college blues

KRISTA COZAD

Not only have you just broken up with your boyfriend because your best friend has been dating him, but your psychotic roommate throws things at you for no apparent reason, and your parents aren't speaking to you since your last report card.

You're stressed out and depressed. Whom can you turn to?

University Counseling Service could be the answer.

Last year, UCS helped more than 7,000 K-State students deal with problems through self-help group sessions, presentations, workshops, and individual and couples counseling, Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, said.

The problem reported most by students who take advantage of the counseling services is stress, followed by relationship difficulties, he said.

However, many more concerns are addressed by the counselors and various groups, from family issues all the way to sexual assaults and eating disorders, Newton said.

"Anybody who has a concern and feels they would like to talk to a professional person is more than welcome to come and find out about University counseling," Mary O'Donnell, UCS therapist, said.

Workshops are another way for students to take advantage of the services offered.

Newton said workshops offered include how to enhance academic performance, assertive-communication training, self-esteem building and stress management.

One of the newest areas UCS is exploring is biofeedback, he said.

The center employs a specialist to administer the biofeedback tests and to teach proper responses to what has been learned in the biofeedback sessions, he said.

▶ CROWD PROTESTS PLAN TO RAISE CIGARETTE TAXES TO FUND HEALTH CARE

OWENSBORO, Ky. — An effigy of Hillary Rodham Clinton was doused with gasoline and burned as a congressman, a state senator and a gubernatorial candidate stood by at a tobacco rally against President Clinton's health-care reform plan.

"Burn, baby, burn," Stan Arachikavitz, president of the Kentucky Association of Tobacco Supporters, chanted.

"If we don't stand up for tobacco, we'll go down with it," U.S. Rep. Ron Lewis told the crowd of about 100 people, who were gathered Saturday protesting administration plans to hike cigarette taxes to fund health-care reform.

Arachikavitz poured gasoline on the effigy, which hung from a wooden frame like a scarecrow in a dress, adorned with a tag reading, "I'm Hillary." A country band played as two women set the effigy ablaze.

"Hillary didn't last as long as my Marlboro," Arachikavitz said afterward.

Matthew Wills, a Republican candidate for Congress, also spoke at the rally, which Democratic gubernatorial candidate Gatewood Galbraith attended.

State Sen. David Boswell, who also spoke, later said he had not known about the effigy.

"I don't support that," he said.

"I disagree with a lot of the policies that are coming out of Washington, but that was out of line."

Owensboro is about 100 miles west of Louisville.

▶ MAN PULLED FROM GROUND 15 HOURS AFTER GAGGED, SHOT AND ROBBED

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — A man who said he was shot by a robber and dumped in a 5-foot-deep pit was rescued when a hiker heard his cries for help.

Charles Logan, 62, was pulled from the ground Saturday, about 15 hours after he was dumped in the hole, Riverside County Sheriff's Sgt. John Guzman said.

Logan told police a man lurking in the bushes outside his house shot one of his dogs. When he went to check on the animal, the man forced him into the house at gunpoint, handcuffed him, bound his legs and gagged him. He took an undisclosed amount of cash and shot Logan in the left shoulder, Guzman said.

The man drove Logan about 10 miles from home and dumped him into a hole covered with a piece of plywood.

Logan was treated and released from a hospital.

▶ 1,000 RALLY AGAINST YEAR-OLD RESOLUTION CONDEMNING HOMOSEXUALITY

MARIETTA, Ga. — Nearly 1,000 gays and supporters of human rights rallied in the town square to protest the Cobb County Commission's year-old resolution condemning homosexuality.

About 200 officers stood guard Sunday during what police called the most peaceful in a year of demonstrations.

"If you want to attack the gay and lesbian community, be aware they no longer stand alone," said Rabbi Steven Lebow of the Marietta Interfaith Alliance, which organized the rally.

"If you attack them, you attack us. If you criticize them, you criticize us. If you want to hurt them, you have to go through us as well."

The commissioners in this affluent, politically conservative suburban Atlanta county passed a resolution a year ago declaring homosexuality incompatible with community standards.

Lynn Robinson-Smith attended Sunday's rally with her 8-year-old son, Geoffrey.

"I teach my son to accept everyone and to appreciate them for their differences," she said. "Basically, I teach him Christian values."

Both carried signs supporting gay rights.

Geoffrey's read, "My Mom Taught Me To Love and Accept All God's Children. What Did Your Mom Teach You?"

▶ FINNEY TO CUT RIBBON IN CEREMONY HONORING GREAT BEND MOTORPLEX

GREAT BEND — A quarter-mile of concrete just west of this central Kansas town will be formally recognized by state officials next month for its place in auto-racing history.

Gov. Joan Finney is scheduled to snip a ribbon in ceremonies honoring the Great Bend Motorplex on Sept. 28.

"It was the site of the first National Hot Rod Association national championships, and nobody else can make that kind of claim," Dick Pankratz of the Kansas State Historical Society said.

Members of the Sunflower Rod & Custom Association, which operated the drag strip, persuaded the national sanctioning group to have its premiere championship event at the Great Bend track in 1955.

Pankratz said giving an official designation to a drag strip is a bit unusual for the historical group.

Traditionally what the board sees is houses, county courthouses and churches, he said.

A replica of the original timing tower is being constructed for the festivities, held in conjunction with the Sears Craftsman Nationals at Heartland Park in Topeka.

"So far as I know, this will be the first time a drag strip has been recognized as a historic site," Bob Russo, chairman of the NHRA's 40th anniversary celebration, said.

The September dedication of the historic track is being billed as the "Great NHRA Return to Kansas," Russo said. He said all Kansas participants in the first race have been invited.

Art Chrisman, who made the first run down the strip, will return with his vintage dragster to recreate that moment, Russo said.

The original "Safety Safari," a four-member NHRA group that traveled the country with its own timing system and public-address system demonstrating how to stage drag races, will be back, with its first station wagon and safety trailer.

These reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County Police departments. Because of space constraints, not all crimes are listed.

DOS versus MAC

Debating the merits of IBM and Macintosh personal computers

Many people argue about which is better, IBM or Macintosh computers. Sometimes the computers themselves fight over the issue. Photo illustration produced on a PowerMac 8100/80 using Adobe Photoshop 2.5.1.

It's an issue that can instantly polarize a room.

It's not politics, music or Rush Limbaugh, but rather the question of whether to buy a Macintosh or IBM personal computer.

There are different benefits from both types of computer systems, so the choice should be based on what each student's personal needs are.

"Ninety percent of our sales go to Macintosh," Tom Maier, computer buyer for the K-State Union Bookstore, said. "We get good enough discounts for the Macintosh, so they become more attractive to students."

"IBM and IBM clones are 91 percent of the computer market," Rich Senften, store manager of Flint Hills Computer store, said. "We don't sell any Macintoshes, and there is a reason for that. They are pretty drastically different, and it takes separate technician people to handle each one," he said.

IBM systems may be a little more expensive than the computers people can buy from a supermarket store, Senften said, but if something goes wrong, it is much cheaper to fix an IBM bought from a computer store than it is to fix the one bought from a supermarket store.

Senften said he warns before purchasing a computer from a Wal-Mart or a Best Buy, the buyer should have it checked to ensure it can be upgraded.

"If it can't be upgraded, then you may have to buy a whole new computer system the next time that you want to have a better program," Senften said.

"Generally, the prices keep falling for both the Macintosh and the IBM systems, but the IBMs seem to be getting a little cheaper than the Macintoshes," said Pat Beedles, freshman undecided, who works in the computer department of the K-State Union Bookstore.

Beedles said even with the IBM system known as Windows, students seem to prefer the easy use of a Macintosh, which may be why IBM is dropping its prices.

"We sell a fair amount of IBM computers to students," Senften said.

"We sell a lot to faculty and businesses. Students are often referred by faculty to come to us because an IBM would fit their needs better than a Macintosh would."

But he said there are times students need a Macintosh because it fits their needs better than an IBM would.

"Macintosh has a graphical application, so it may be better for graphical applications such as art majors, journalism and desktop publishing," Maier said.

"IBM has a stronger business side to it than Macintosh," he said. "I recommend that students talk to their professors to see what kind of programs they will be using in their field."

Maier said his best suggestion would be to go and talk to any computer-store employee to see what kind of computer would best fit each student's lifestyle.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Higher parking fines, prices a blessing

Whenever you pay more for something, you'll always get more.

The increase of parking permits and fines is just another example.

You get more hassles with fewer parking spaces.

You get more time in your car, waiting for a space to open.

You get more confusion about where you can park.

Also, students are in for more benefits when construction begins for the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. The parking lot near Aggieville will get a big chunk of parking spaces taken out when construction starts.

But the students aren't the only ones who are benefiting from the increase of ticket and permit prices.

Parking Services gets more, too.

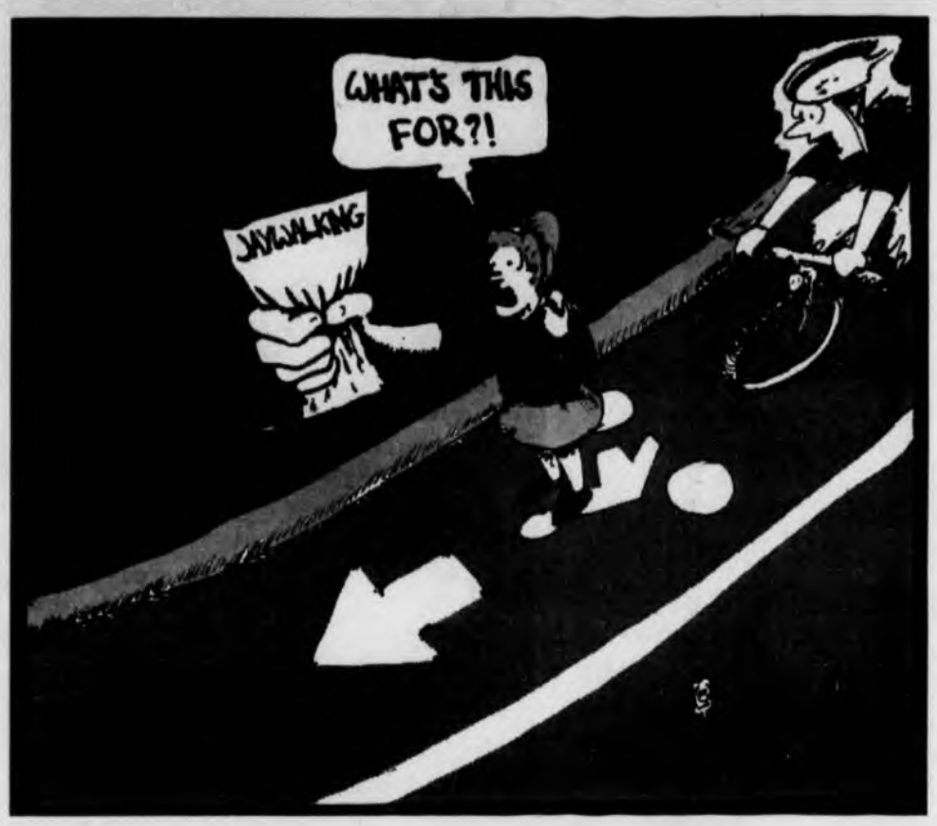
It gets more money to put in its reserves.

And it gets more money to hire more student parking-control officers, which it can use to get — more money.

So, why did those who sit on high decide to be so generous with the gifts this year?

We've already got problems getting from building A to building B with construction.

Parking Services doesn't do more to improve parking lots because students and faculty are using fewer lots this year. Who knows?



But students really should think of some way to repay those on high.

We could stage a parking tribute.

Students could park on lawns, park in drives and park in the middle of streets. Climb to the roof of our cars and blare Beach Boys songs from our car stereos.

Or we could just tell them, "Thanks a lot."

MARLETT'S WORLD

Kansas politics seems unethical

Have you ever passed something over as just a normal, ordinary event and after a second glance, noticed that something is not quite right?

That's what happened with the way two independent candidates for governor were taken off the November ballot by the Kansas secretary of state's office.

A couple of background facts you should know:

1. Bob Eye, Topeka, and Susan Gail Briggs, Derby, were both running as independent candidates for governor.

2. To be on the ballot as an independent candidate for governor, both Eye and Briggs were required to submit petitions with 5,000 valid signatures of registered voters. Definitely not a small task.

3. Both candidates were taken off the ballot after not having enough valid signatures.

4. Assistant Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh supervised the counting of the petitions.

All of this seems routine and ordinary until you hear, as Paul Harvey says, "the rest of the story."

Reportedly, Eye's petition was examined completely and invalidated only after every signature was checked. On the other hand, Briggs' petition was summarily thrown out after fewer than 500 signatures were checked. After several of her signatures were thrown out, she could not meet the signature requirement. So what?

Well, Eye has been associated with several environmental movements and was very active in the 1988 Jesse Jackson presidential campaign. It was believed that Eye would take some votes away from Democratic gubernatorial candidate Jim Slattery, D-Manhattan.

On the other hand, Briggs was going to be the ultra-conservative candidate. As the only pro-life candidate on the ballot, she would have probably drawn votes away from pro-choice Republican candidate Bill Graves.

But wait, there's more. Back in 1990, another independent candidate, Wichita accountant Christina Campbell-Cline, was caught in a "quirk."

The Kansas Legislature was in the process of changing the time and number of signatures necessary to be an independent candidate for governor. Before 1990, a candidate had 90 days to collect 2,500 signatures. It was raised to 180 days to collect 5,000. Campbell-Cline was caught in the middle, so she had to get 3,730 signatures, and she turned them in on the deadline date, Aug. 6, 1990.

Again, so what? But remember that she was running against then-incumbent Republican Mike Hayden and another female candidate, Democrat Joan Finney. It was believed by some that Campbell-Cline would take more votes away from her fellow female candidate, Finney, than from the only male in the race, Hayden.

Now to the topic of Thornburgh overseeing the petition counting. Thornburgh was running for the GOP nomination for secretary of state to replace his boss, Graves. He took an unpaid leave of absence to campaign before the Aug. 2 primary, but he returned just in time to oversee the petition counting.

As an unclassified state employee serving at the pleasure of Secretary of State Graves, he can theoretically come and go from his job as he pleases. He has since left his job again on an unpaid leave of absence beginning Monday.

On the other hand, his November opponent, Democrat Fran Lee, had to quit her job as a classified state employee with the Department of Education. She left her job June 10.

So, while Lee has given up her career and benefits, Thornburgh has been doing his job by day and campaigning at night, as he was recently quoted as saying.

Most people believe that all politicians are lying, cheating, criminals, and situations like this one only add to this belief. Even though everything that happened was legal, it still leaves more than a shadow of a doubt as to if it was all ethical.

And as the old saying goes, not everything is as simple and ordinary as it seems at first, until you have heard "the rest of the story."

Rec center gives youth place to go

From all the graffiti adorning garage doors, trash cans and road signs in Manhattan, you start to wonder who the hell has that much time on their hands.

It is the newest cultural art form to hit the Midwest in a long time. Even if the mainstream world doesn't understand the meaning — heck, it takes talent.

Too bad this talent is going to waste in the form of common-place vandalism.

Manhattan has debated for years about the problems of its youth. Why the increase of violence in schools? Do we have gangs, wanna-be gangs or just a bunch of kids with attitudes too big to comply with the morals of the rest of the community?

Last January, the Manhattan City Commission created the City of Manhattan Youth Task Force. For months, this group worked to assess the ills of the young and gather ideas about what the city must do to cure them.

The issue is still under discussion, and the problems are still unsolved. It is an issue as diverse as the children involved and the talent going to waste.

The commission wants to decide what the city's role should be regarding youth. However, since it is impossible to mandate how a child is raised, when problems develop outside of the home, the effects touch every one of us. Suddenly, youth problems equal community problems.

In 1993, overall crime declined by 13 percent in Riley County; however, 32 percent of arrests involved youth under the age of 18. This was up 2 percent from 1992. Overall crime may be down, but the youngsters are picking up the slack.

The task force surveyed parents, students and community members for possible explanations and solutions. The only strongly repeated solution was to build a permanent youth center.

Somewhere, Manhattan should find the money to build a teen complex. A place independent of the school district, parents and private ownership, where the sole purpose is to provide a safe place for teen-agers to congregate.

Raven Campbell, junior at Manhattan High School, said teen-agers need a place — without parents — where they can gather and dance to a cross-section of music.

One night a week this summer, Berlin offered Club Chaos, a non-alcoholic dance club for teen-agers under the age of 18. However, since Berlin specializes in alternative music, Campbell said most of the youth who attended listened to that style of music, and those who didn't felt out of place.

Eric Shuberg, owner of Berlin, said the club just never picked up and will not continue this fall.

Campbell said she believes her peers just need something to do.

"A lot of teen-agers are bored," Campbell said. "They just hang on the basketball court all the time."

Some cities are using the popularity of basketball to cut gang-related crime.

Fort Worth, Texas, has found midnight leagues successfully cut crime. At 10 p.m. every Saturday in the summer, Fort Worth's Sycamore Recreation Center is home to 500 players and fans for four hours of on-the-court competition away from crime and violence.

Three years ago, before the start of the midnight league, 53 major crimes occurred on summer nights in the Fort Worth neighborhood. Last summer, the count was down to six. Thefts fell from 25 to four.

A youth center in Manhattan could be similar to K-State's own Rec Complex. It could have a dance floor and play a wide variety of music. It could offer a place to eat, play video games, watch movies, play pool and maybe swim.

Participants could use their talents to decorate a room in graffiti-style art. It would be a positive step to see that talent put to constructive use for once.

Most importantly, teens themselves could be hired as center staff. Sure, adults would manage everything, but by drawing a paycheck, we could show teen-agers the rewards of honest work.

Holding down a job could help build a youth's self-esteem. Self-pride comes along with earning one's own cash. By providing jobs, we could keep youth off the streets and constructively prevent them from being bored.

So, you ask, why should a K-State student care? The center would be a fabulous place for college students to work providing teens with role models. Just interacting with older people who at least appear to have their lives together can positively influence an impressionable young person.

Someone must look out for these kids if their parents do not.

If we don't, we are going to feel the effects of their boredom and wasted talent in more ways than we can dream.

Where's Jim's Journals?

Dear Editor,

There were many disappointments that we expected as we returned to K-State this year, i.e., fee payment, drop/add, parking, etc.

But we were unhappy when we found out that "Jim's Journal" was dropped from the Diversions section of our Collegian yet again.

Why? Is there any reason he was dropped before? What will it take to get Jim back?

This may sound corny, but when school and life present so many challenges, many look forward to little pleasures like a satirical look at life via Jim.

Please bring him back.

Columnist shouldn't use stereotypes

Dear Editor,

Mr. Kirk, let me say that I agree some sports players receive more privileges than necessary. But that's all that I agree with.

I don't think you need to resort to name calling and degrading remarks to voice your opinion. It's those kinds of statements that hinder people from breaking out of stereotypes. This may come as a surprise, but students who don't play sports flunk out and screw around in class as much as anyone.

As a member of the Pride of Wildcat Land Marching Band, I support the University and its academic and sports teams. I take pride in the fact that our football team is getting national recognition for winning. I also take pride that the debate team has won the national title.

Maybe you should take pride in the university that is providing you with an education that will allow you to do what you are good at. Also, give the people who are doing what they are good at some respect.

Athletics make for a healthy life

Dear Editor,

I just read Mr. Kirk's column on sports at K-State. Is he serious? Hate the Wildcats? If sports have no place at K-State, then where do they and why?

For many, sports are the pathway to an education (K-State has the most all-Big Eight scholar athletes), a source of revenue for the school (even from the obscure Weiser Lock Copper Bowl) and pride for the school. Success for our teams is something every K-Stater has in common.

As for the jock bashing, that sounds like a skinny, jealous high-school kid. Just because you cannot play sports, Mr. Kirk, don't cheat the whole school over your apparent loss.

Almost all of us play or have played some sport or another because we like to. I feel bad for you, sir, because it is painfully obvious when I talk about K-State's love for sports (and America's, too) that you have no idea what I am talking about.

I'm talking about health, part of a balanced life and possibly a career for some of our athletes. Face the facts, Mr. Kirk — the Cats are here to stay. If you hate the Cats, perhaps you should consider another school. Either way, I don't want to read any more trash like that.

K-State professor speaks out about strike

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

Baseball players and owners remain deadlocked after almost three weeks of the strike.

Maybe they should call K-State's own labor studies expert, Berkeley Miller, to help out in the negotiations.

Miller, assistant professor of sociology and co-director of the labor -studies program at K-State, said baseball fans don't seem to realize that underneath all the hype, real issues are involved in the strike.

"From a public-relations standpoint, the problem appears to be that we have a bunch of greedy millionaires arguing with a bunch of greedy billionaires," he said. "That's the public perception, but I think there are real issues involved here."

One of those issues is free agency.

"There has been an ongoing battle between the owners and the players over the issues of free agency," Miller said. "Free agency is essential to players' incomes and owners' profits. But what the players are afraid of is if the owners get the salary cap, that will effectively eliminate free agency."

But why do the players value free agency so much? Miller said everyone should understand its value, since all citizens of the United States are entitled to free agency.

"We all are free agents," he said. "You and I enjoy free agency. As a matter of fact, most of us would consider free agency an American right. It's our right as Americans to ply our trade and sell our services to the highest bidder to improve ourselves and provide a living for ourselves and our families.

"If I don't want to work for K-State, I could sell my services immediately, assuming I could find somebody to sell them to. If you've just signed with the New York Yankees, you can't do that," Miller said.

If free agency is so important to the players, why would the owners want to restrict it even more with a salary cap? One word — money.

"The owners claim that they're not making enough money," Miller said. "They say they're losing money, and therefore, the players should take a salary cap in the best interest of baseball. But the players don't essentially trust what the owners are saying."

It would appear the owners could prove they were losing money by just showing the players' union the books. But in major-league baseball, it's not that simple.

"Unlike the other professional sports associations, baseball is exempt from the Sherman Anti-Trust Provision," Miller said. "This decision came about in a 1922 Supreme Court ruling authored by Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"In this unanimous opinion, Justice Holmes said that baseball was not commerce; rather, it was a game. It was not subject, therefore, to anti-trust. This enabled the owners to collude, reserve all of their players, eliminate free agency and set the salaries. This was all judged to be legal," Miller said.

Today, 72 years after that decision, that ruling still stands, and it is that ruling that protects the baseball owners from being sued under anti-trust.

"So, major-league baseball enjoys an exemption from anti trust," Miller said. "That's not true in the NBA, it's not true in the NFL, etc. In the NBA, when the owners claimed that they were losing money, they sat down with the players' association and audited the books, leading the players to agree to a salary cap," he said.

"But the players knew all along that if the owners unilaterally instituted a salary cap, they could be sued under anti trust and they would lose," he said.

But baseball players don't have that to fall back on.

"With the anti-trust protection, the owners in major-league baseball have an advantage," Miller said. "The owners will say, 'We're losing money, trust us.' The owners have been taken to court three times, and the players have lost every time. So, there just isn't that additional hammer putting pressure on the owners to cooperate."

"Of course, the players are going to then stick by their free agency — that's all they have. But if the anti-trust exemption were removed by Congress, the owners might be more willing to compromise."

For the time being, though, it doesn't appear that either side is willing.

"Have you ever watched a group of 5-year-olds in a sandbox trying to share their toys? They don't share, and that's what we're dealing with here," Miller said.

"Current indications are that the owners are in no mood to compromise, and neither are the players," he said.

"Most of these issues are either/or issues. It's either you have free agency or you don't. Somebody has to win or lose — somebody has to give in," he said.

"Somebody has to win or lose — somebody has to give in."

Big-Eight coaches express feelings on rule

New NCAA eligibility requirement causing anxious moments.

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Some of the Big Eight Conference football coaches are not happy.

"I've never been through something so frustrating in my life," Iowa State coach Jim Walden said. "It's unbelievable. I've got enough stress in my life without this."

What Walden is referring to is the new Clearing House Review Board set up by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

All the teams in the NCAA must send in ACT scores and transcripts of all the players on their team for approval.

Previously, teams could complete this process by themselves and just send it to the NCAA.

Now, the NCAA has to analyze each player's scores and transcripts at the NCAA office before declaring a player eligible to participate in sports.

"Anyone who is entering a collegiate institution for the first time, on a full-time basis, on or after Aug. 1, 1994, must have their eligibility evaluated by the NCAA," Mary Anne Andrews, K-State compliance auditor, said.

Walden said he expressed frustration with the review board.

"Nobody's thought this thing out," Walden said. "I've got three kids on my campus that are still waiting to be cleared.

"They've been through two-a-days with us, they've practiced, they've been here since Aug. 6, and, all of a sudden, they're going to call and say that they can't play," he said. "Do we send them home? It's too late for them to even go to a junior college. What the hell were we thinking when we did this?"

Andrews said the plan is designed to be fair to all schools in all the divisions.

"The purpose of the Clearing House is to give a level playing field to all schools, including Division I and II schools," Andrews said.

"If they're not a qualifier at K-State, they won't be eligible at any other school," he said.

Kansas coach Glen Mason said he reported some problems as well.

"I'm still waiting on one to be cleared," Mason said. "My guys have been scrambling around and at least on paper, it should be a slam-dunk."

Andrews said she attributed the problems to procrastination on the part of the teams.

"Some of the colleges are just getting used to the process, and they waited until the last minute to send forms in," she said.

Mason said he does not feel procrastination existed at KU.

Additionally, players he needs for the Jayhawks' first game of the season against Houston are still in question.

"The test scores were there early," he said. "He's no doubt a qualifier. There's some technicality on a paid application.

"I'm a little bit concerned, because I play Thursday and I'm not sure those people in the Clearing House understand that if you clear him after the plane leaves on Wednesday, it's not going to help us."

Not all of the teams are experiencing the same kind of difficulties.

"I think there is one freshman that is not a factor that we are waiting on," Pat Jones, Oklahoma State head football coach, said.

"We've gotten the rest of them all through, but I've heard some real horror stories about it from other people," he said.

Defensive line depending on speed, not size

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

This season, K-State's defensive line should have something special that past defensive lines have not had — speed.

"We're not the biggest guys around," Nyle Wiren, defensive end, said, "but we can make up for it with our speed."

The Wildcats will use the speed factor to their advantage by stopping the run and putting pressure on opposing quarterbacks, Wiren said.

Along with speed, experience will also be an advantage for the Cats as they will return three out of four starters from last season's squad.

The tackle positions will be occupied by Tim Colston and Darrell Harbert. This duo is ranked as one of the top in the Big Eight. Colston was also picked by several preseason publications as a first team all-Big Eight performer.

"It's an honor to be recognized," Colston said. "I'm not going to look at anyone and think that I'm better than them.

"I'm not going to say, 'I'm Tim Colston and I'm preseason all-Big Eight. I'm not going to lay down, because I have to earn that title. It's an honor, but it's only the preseason."

Harbert was named to the second team all-Big Eight last season with 58 tackles, including 26 solo tackles.

At the end positions, the Cats return Dirk Ochs, who finished among the Big Eight leaders with eight sacks for minus 40 yards as a sophomore. He will be backed up by senior transfer Dart Forst.

The other end position will be played by either Wiren or Matt McEwen, and sophomore Curt Turner will back both of them.

Andrew Timmons, who was a two-time letterwinner, won't return to the defensive line this season after suffering from an injury during last season.

Another strength for the defensive line is their togetherness, Colston said.

"We came in here together and we're all the same class," Colston said. "We were all also on the scout team together, and now we're all playing together."

Wiren said he agreed with Colston.

"It's just a tight clique," Wiren said. "We've got a lot of speed, and a lot of good runners. We've been together for a while now."

Although the defensive line may be the strength of the defense, you won't get the linemen to agree.

"The defense is all together, and we're one big family," Wiren said.

"I can't say that we are the strength, because it's got to be even all around.

"We're just going to have to see how good we really are. Just got to wait and see," he said.

New CNS relocates with upgraded systems

ANNETTE RIEDL
Collegian

Computing and Network Services has moved its consultants and upgraded equipment to provide better services for students.

CNS consultants moved from the basement of Fairchild Hall and took over a lab from the Department of Computing and Information Sciences in Nichols 126D. CNS also extended consulting hours and upgraded computer software and equipment.

"The best CNS has to offer is now in one location," Charles Gould, microcomputer support manager at CNS, said.

New students can get user IDs for the mainframe from the consultants in Nichols, Neil Erdwien, associate specialist at CNS, said.

"User IDs enable students to use the mainframe, Unix, electronic mail and all kinds of other software," Erdwien said.

Gould said the summer was busy.

"CNS upgraded labs," he said. "In five labs, over 100 486-IBM personal computers are available to students and faculty."

Software has also been upgraded. Gould said the labs released Windows, WordPerfect 6.0a, Lotus version 4.0 and Microsoft Works for Windows.

For the new lab, Gould said CNS purchased 10 486-IBM personal computers with Windows, nine Sun work stations and six Power Macintoshes.

"Sun station computers are powerful computers with no storage space of their own, but they can run several user programs at once. Students do a lot of programming on them," Kyle Hutson, senior in computer engineering, said.

Gould said CNS' goal is to get the new systems set up and running.

"We are researching hardware and software security systems," Gould said.

"Officially, the only software the Macintoshes will have is ClarisWorks and connectivity software, which allows users to link up with the mainframe," he said.

When asked about the possibility of the Macintoshes having PageMaker, he said, "If everyone out there uses left-handed widgets, we probably will, too."

Gould said the best thing about moving from Fairchild to Nichols is the physical environment and the proximity to Computing and Information Sciences.

"Restrooms are close. The CIS 110 consultants have a booth dedicated to them in the back of the room. And there are individual cubicles that give students privacy," Gould said.

Paul Lebbin, freshman in mechanical engineering, said the change was for the better.

CNS HOURS

Starting the first week of September, consultants will be available Sunday through Thursday from 6 to 9 p.m. The consultants' regular hours are 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Students can get a user ID in Nichols 126D.

"The new lab is a lot nicer place to work," Lebbin said. "It helps since consultants are right there. The power PCs will allow students to use more advanced software."

Erdwien said the move from Fairchild to Nichols was a cooperative endeavor with Computing and Information Sciences.

"It's like when you wake up and you look in the mirror. The mirror gives you feedback about your appearance. Well, biofeedback is like holding that mirror up to your body," Newton said.

This information "mirror" can be the simple procedure of placing an extremely sensitive thermometer on a student's finger, he said.

The thermometer monitors the student's response to a situation or conversation by any slight change in temperature, he said.

Payments for UCS range from $10 for all workshops, to $20 for a continuing group session. Individual and couples counseling are free for the first five sessions. After five sessions, the fee is $8 per session.

relations campaigns, broadcasting tapes and feature stories," Stump said.

Also, she will organize a mid-year meeting in Kansas City, Kan., this November.

There are more than 15 active chapters representing universities from across the United States, Erpelding said. Several new chapters are springing up and Stump said she hopes to help some of them get started.

Stump said she wants more people to know about the organization.

"This year, I hope to accomplish an increased awareness of our organization, not only on the national level, but here at K-State also," she said.

Stump said she wants other agricultural communicators to realize how helpful ACT is in planning for the future.

Erpelding said enrollment in agricultural journalism has increased to 50 students this fall as compared to 26 students in 1990.

"There are a good number of job opportunities with agricultural magazines and news agricultural trades," he said, explaining the increase.

Nearly 60 percent of agricultural journalism majors are involved in ACT, Erpelding said.

Anyone who has a professional interest in some form of agricultural communications can join ACT.

Next summer, the national team will be hosting the 25th annual National ACT Conference in Chicago, Stump said.

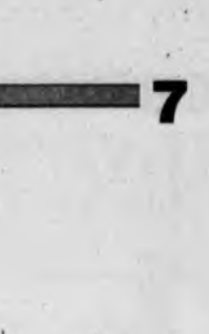
Don't bite hand that feeds you generic tunes



I feel welcomed, but enough already!

A brief, unscientific count of offerings from Union Program Council, KMKF-FM 101.5 and other groups revealed at least 20 different events associated with variations of the term "Welcome Back."

KSDB-FM 91.9 saw it fit to welcome back the so-called alternative crowd to campus.

K-Rock is welcoming back the Camaro Rock crowd with the Kansas concerts this week.

Most campus organizations have some type of event to introduce prospective members to their organization.

ANDREW TOMB

Sounds a little like diversity to me.

Is any one event going to be of interest to the entire campus?

The answer is no.

K-State's football team could be pounding Nebraska, and there would still be a student at home, quietly typing a term paper, oblivious to the fact that hell just froze over.

The simple, undeniable truth (in programming, not football) is you can't please everyone, so stop trying.

Here is a cute, unscientific example. Most names have been changed to protect the innocent.

Surveys are taken as to what kind of music is most popular at K-State, and the results come back in this order:

1. Country/Western (Chris LeDoux, Garth Brooks)
2. Camaro Rock (Bad Company, Damn Yankees)
3. Alternative (Primus, Green Day)
4. Rap (Public Enemy, Warren G)
5. Black Sabbath (Black Sabbath)

From this model, we determine that the kind of music that will appeal to K-Staters is twangy, hard, alternative, cross-bred with rap-stylings.

So we hire a band, a generic cover act called Dead Rio Camaro X. They suck. Nobody comes.

This produces the least-common-denominator effect: By sacrificing artistic quality for diversity, you appeal to nobody.

Next year, having learned our lesson, we have the kings of Camaro Rock themselves, Lynyrd Skynyrd.

Skynyrd packs Bramlage to the rafters, K-Rock eats it up, and the legions of Camaro Rock fans are once again appeased.

I will not entertain queries about whether Skynyrd classifies as art, but few would question whether the concert was a success.

That same year, the campus radio station decides to put on a concert of its own.

It does it on a shoestring budget, with a few local businesses sponsoring it.

The concert, being a predominantly alternative event, and free, appeals to a bunch of hippies.

Nobody is hurt, life goes on, and the world is still a relatively pleasant place, right?

It receives criticism that the event is not culturally diverse enough. Groans and yawns.

How come nobody's criticizing Black Student Union for not having Frank Sinatra Jr. at its picnic?

Because it would be stupid. "Don't ask, don't tell" is my new motto.

Freaks and hippies deserve to be welcomed back just like everyone else.

Before the supporters of political correctness start whining that something's rotten in Denmark, let them attend one of the umpteenth other events that may appeal to them.

And if they don't like it, let them start their own event, just as the the folks at DB92 did.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Discouraged student searches for perfect woman; kitty escapes with life, knife

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing to you about an age-old problem: women. More specifically, the lack of.

The problem began in high school when I was blessed with a high level of maturity and a higher-than-average intelligence. As a result, I had a difficult time socializing with people. Although I was going with somebody during that time, I was never challenged enough by anybody to remain interested.

When I started college, I thought that I would finally meet more mature women. To my dismay, I was wrong.

Almost all of the women I met seemed to only be interested in partying. Their idea of fun was to get stupid drunk, be loud and obnoxious, and finally pass out. Again, I got involved with women only to get tired of their immaturity. I finally got away from women my own age and started seeing older women.

I have now reached an impasse. Although I am satisfied with older women, I would like to date someone my age. Therein lies the problem.

I am a grad student in engineering. I do not have a lot of opportunity to meet a lot of women because there are no women in my classes, and I do not know where I can meet the kind of woman I am looking for. I exercise every evening, so I meet some women there who are pretty nice, but I do not get to know them enough to know if I want to ask them out. I know that there are mature women my own age out there somewhere.

What should I do? Do I continue to see older women, see immature women my own age and live with it, or should I continue the search for the perfect woman? Maybe if you publish this letter, someone will contact you.

Signed,
Discouraged

Dear Discouraged,

Please know you are not alone!

I hear the exact same complaints from many women I know.

Many are interested in much more than going out every weekend, getting plowed and acting immature, as you would say. Unfortunately, sometimes these types of people are difficult to find.

It doesn't help that the majority of students in your classeso are all men.

You simply have to create your own opportunities.

You said you exercise every night. Therefore, I assume you are at the Rec occasionally.

This is a great place to meet people.

If someone catches your eye, challenge her to a racquetball game or ask her advice on aerobics.

Or if you jog, run past campus or City Park. People are always plentiful there — walking dogs, heading home for the day, jogging, etc.

Meeting people is difficult if you aren't around people.

So, get involved.

Join clubs, go out to dinner, hang out at the pool, and if you see someone you're interested in, strike up a conversation.

I know there are some delightful women out there who would love to be with you.

You don't have to settle for less!

Dear Cassandra,

On Aug. 22, the Collegian ran an article on how a woman held her cat at knifepoint.

The article's title read "Woman threatens cat; both killed," but the article said the cat could not be located. Could you find out if the cat died or if they located the cat?

If the cat was found, could you notify us if he/she needs a home, since her former owner was killed?

Thank you for your help.

Signed,
Concerned Kitty Lover in Kansas

Dear Kitty Lover in Kansas,

The last I heard, the cat grabbed the knife and took off running feverishly through town.

The cat was spotted later the next day digging through some woman's trash can but had somehow ditched the knife.

No further information has been passed on to me, but if I hear our feline fur ball needs a place to crash, I'll pass on your address.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Standing in a field of grain sorghum is Keith Bolsen, professor of cattle nutrition and forage preservation, who will attend a week-long international dairy conference in Australia. The invitation to the conference was a result of contacts Bolsen made on sabbatical in the Philippines.

Bolsen goes 'down under' for silage

JANET McPHERSON
Collegian

His graduate students call Keith Bolsen the Silage King.

Since 1971, Bolsen, professor of cattle nutrition and forage preservation, said he has made and evaluated more than 5,000 silages, a fermented feedstuff for livestock.

"I hesitate to put a dollar value on Keith's contribution because the amount would be so large," John Shirley, professor of dairy science, said.

"It'd be unbelievable," Shirley said. "He's probably the most knowledgeable silage person in the U.S., maybe in the world."

Most silage is a roughage source for ruminants, unless it's in a growing cattle diet, Dennis Holthaus, former graduate teaching assistant to Bolsen, said.

"Even God fed silage," Holthaus said, referring to Isaiah 30:24 in the Bible, which says, "the oxen and young asses — shall eat salted, seasoned, preserved fodder."

Bolsen has worked in 24 countries as a forage-preservation and cattle-feeding consultant and has taken sabbatical leave to Israel and the Philippines.

"The concepts are the same, whether you're in the Philippines or Kansas. Our goal is to get silage technology to as many people as we possibly can," Bolsen said.

Bolsen said he teaches the only course in silage technology at a land-grant school in the United States that he's aware of.

Bolsen left Aug. 25 to speak to dairy farmers at the 1994 DAIRYPRAC Convention in Queensland, Australia.

Bolsen said he was invited after his participation in the second Australian Maize Conference in February while on sabbatical in the Philippines.

The coordinators of that conference wanted to bring him back to talk to all Australian dairy farmers, he said.

Bolsen said he will speak about feeding the future dairy cow and on-farm feed conservation, present K-State research findings and interact with producers and other researchers.

"I'm going to be learning as much as possible," Bolsen said.

Mark Young, graduate teaching assistant, said he traveled to Colorado with Bolsen in 1991 for a presentation at the National Lamb Growers Conference.

"You learn a lot from Keith," Young said. "He's always spouting off stories. He's like a preacher, walking up and down the aisles."

Holthaus said Bolsen can talk to 50 farmers about research on the producers' level unlike anyone he's ever seen.

Bolsen said he talks to producers or someone in the livestock industry daily on the phone, although he has no official appointment as an extension specialist.

He said he likes to say that 50 percent of his appointment is to teaching, 50 percent to research and 50 percent to extension.

"You have to do all three to be good at your job," Bolsen said.

He said he gets a lot of his research ideas from producers and industry people.

K-State's silage research utilizes crops from the University farm and supplies all the silage for the Dairy and Beef Research Units, Bolsen said. Silage research bunkers are at the Sheep Research Unit.

Bolsen will return from Australia Sept. 2.

Alaskan river floods; Allakaket residents head to high ground

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCHORAGE, Ala. — Army helicopters were sent Sunday to evacuate residents of the village of Allakaket after the Koyukuk River surged to its highest level in 40 years.

"We're completely surrounded by water," Allakaket Mayor Agnes Bergman said.

No injuries were reported, and nobody was in immediate danger, National Guard Capt. Mike Haller said from Anchorage.

One house in Allakaket was uprooted, and a neighbor said only the electric wires were keeping it from being swept downstream.

The community of about 175 people is 180 miles northwest of Fairbanks.

The river has been rising because of heavy rains last week in Interior Alaska. It was not expected to crest until Monday at Allakaket.

Most of the village's 35 to 40 homes were flooded with about 4 or 5 feet of water, Haller said.

Allakaket villagers were putting belongings on top of houses and building a heliport on high ground for the evacuation. The town's only airplane landing strip was under 5 feet of water.

▶ JUNK DEALING

Discoveries in trash cans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Mostly, it's junk. Broken appliances, old clothes, floppy old mattresses. Sometimes, it's dead bodies, cash in shoe boxes, letters from Charles Manson.

So goes the trade of the junk dealers, who make a living buying other people's castoffs and reselling them at swap meets and yard sales.

It can be lurid as well as lucrative work — this month, an unwitting scavenger bought the contents of an abandoned Northridge storage unit that contained three bodies in steamer trunks.

And for many, it's tax-free. Dedicated and savvy scavengers say they can earn $40,000 to $100,000 per year, most of it in cash and all of it in a market not monitored by the Internal Revenue Service.

"We are aware that in numerous industries, income may not be reported," IRS representative Keith Kimball said. "But with the staffing we currently have, we cannot control every area."

For that reason alone, the tightknit band of independent merchants would rather do without public attention. At a Long Beach auction this month, a few were downright hostile.

"This is poor people's work," said a woman bidding $575 cash for a storage unit piled high with mattresses and furniture.

"You publicize this, more people come, drive up the prices. Go away," she said, refusing to give her name.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

KSU-Salina receives library grant

BRETT MAST
Collegian

The K-State-Salina's Library Resource Center increased its bank account by $2,000 from a state grant.

The Interlibrary Loan Development Grant was awarded to the library for the purchase of Total Quality Management literature and videos.

The grant, which is awarded on a competitive basis, was given to the library by the Kansas Library Network Board in Topeka, Michael Piper, KNLB executive director, said.

"The Kansas Library Network Board is a group of representatives from various types of libraries that meets quarterly to put together plans for upgrading libraries across the state," Piper said.

Beverlee Kissick, director of libraries at K-State-Salina, said the materials will meet a need to provide a core body of Total Quality Management literature for the state.

"Total Quality Management is a process of shared values used to empower people to make decisions. And in this environment, there has to be trust and respect for people," Kissick said.

TQM stresses a strong team concept and the ability to look forward to the future, she said.

Another important aspect of the program is the constant assessment and measurement of progress, Kissick said.

Because K-State Salina is a Kansas Board of Regents University and participates in the Interlibrary Loan System, all materials are available to the public.

Students say new lobby gives 'fishbowl' effect

fishbowl in Lafene's new lobby," Angiela Meyer, sophomore in fine arts, said. "With no blinds and all that compressed traffic going by, you lose an element of privacy."

Denise Dickson, senior in nutritional exercise science, said she could understand this concern.

"I've been over to Lafene this semester, and it really didn't bother me," Dickson said. "But if someone was really sick, I could see how they would want some blinds or something on the windows."

Sowell said the absence of blinds allowed more light to enter the potentially dark lobby.

"With no blinds, the lobby is lighter, cheerier, with a brighter color to it," Sowell said. "But we can most certainly correct that if it bothers our patients."

Members give tips for surviving greek life activities all the time.

"You get to pick and choose," Duerksen said.

Jarrod Fish, senior in finance and management, said several of the same things about surviving a fraternity. He has been a member of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity for three years.

He said the biggest problems he has witnessed in that time have been the transition from high-school to college life, dealing with the freedom new members feel as they leave home for the first time, and time management.

Most problems that occur deal with academics, Fish said. He said the key to surviving these problems is to get help before they get out of hand. The houses help in this with periodic grade checks.

Fish said the checks allow the house to find out about problems and get tutoring help to members who need it.

Fish said all new members live in the house, so fraternities don't see the problem with new members staying informed, as sororities do.

To Fish, the key to surviving fraternity life is to relax and take things easy. A lot goes on at once, and there is a lot to be learned, he said.

"You have to realize there are only 24 hours in a day," he said.

There are several ways fraternities help new members survive greek life. Fish said the big-brother system is an important part of survival. He said the big brothers' job is to teach new members the history of the house and to help them adjust to college life. If a member has any problem, the big brother is the first person to talk to.

The new-member orientation, which was last Sunday at McCain Auditorium, also helps all new greeks learn how to survive greek life, Fish said. Skits were performed, and Bernard Franklin assistant dean of student life, spoke.

Barb Robel, adviser for the Office of Greek Affairs, said a new activity called Greek 101 is also helpful. She said these monthly activities involve speakers who discuss a wide range of subjects concerning greek members.

The September activity will feature a speaker from the Student Alumni Board, who will discuss study skills; in October, the focus will be on hazing, and in November, the subject will be acquaintance rape and alcohol, Robel said.

Rappeller survives 70-foot fall

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Emergency personnel and rappellers carry Joe Fund, a rappeller, up the dam after he fell from the control tower at Tuttle Creek Reservoir Tuesday evening. The rapeller's D-ring and figure-eight became unlocked during his descent, causing the accident. Fund suffered a broken leg and wrist after the 70-foot fall.

Poor preparation blamed for Tuttle Creek rappelling accident

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

A 23-year-old man was involved in a rappelling accident at Tuttle Creek Reservoir Tuesday evening.

Joe Fund was rappelling off the control tower when he fell an estimated 70 feet because of improper use of equipment.

According to the Saint Mary Hospital, Fund is in stable condition.

Lance Trollope, who was rappelling with Fund, said he failed to prepare his equipment properly.

"He came unhooked, slid down the rope and fell," Trollope said.

"He has rope burns on his arms."

Fund was using a lock-in, D-ring clip, which he failed to twist all the way in, Trollope said.

Brad Ensminger, graduate student in electrical engineering, who was rappelling at the same site as Fund, said it appeared the fallen rappeller had failed to get the figure-eight ring locked to the D-ring.

He said the accident occurred between 6 and 6:30 p.m.

Dave Baldwin, who was also with Fund, said they had been rappelling since 5:30 p.m.

He said the men 0 rappelled off the tower four times, making their way from rock to a gravel embankment.

Ensminger said he fell 10 feet from the rock.

"If we hadn't moved down, he would have been dead," Baldwin said.

"He used to rappel when he was younger.

"It's his first time he's been out since then," he said.

Ensminger said he was told by the people who were with Fund that it was a one-in-a-million chance the accident was caused by the equipment.

Fund had started down the rope when the D-ring had come apart, Ensminger said. He held on to the rope for two to three minutes before letting go, he said.

Members of Riley County EMS lift Joe Fund, Manhattan, onto a backboard after he fell approximately 70 feet while rappelling down the Tower at Tuttle Creek Dam Tuesday evening.

RAPPELLING SAFETY TIPS

Tips:
1. Have someone to supervise.
2. Have a belay person at the bottom to control the rope and the rappellers as they come down.
3. Don't attempt anything above your level of expertise.

Things you should have:
1. 120 feet of rope.
2. At least 30 feet of recovery line.
3. Safety line for the supervising person to make sure nothing is wrong with the rapeller.

Students find ways of surviving in a new home

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

This is the second in a four-part series on housing at K-State. The third and final parts will be run in Thursday's and Friday's Collegian, respectively.

Surviving residence hall life isn't easy. Many issues, from roommates to alcohol, can arise that make life in a hall difficult, but there are ways to deal with these issues.

Darren McElfresh, sophomore in electrical engineering, said he experienced some anxiety about such issues before he came to K-State. "I was worried about living around loud or drugged people," he said.

HOUSING

The biggest adjustment McElfresh had to face was dealing with the different lifestyles of the other residents. He said he had to deal mainly with minor issues like people being loud.

"I just approached them and asked them to tone it down," he said.

McElfresh said the adjustment wasn't hard for him.

"Knowing my roommate before and getting to know people on the floor helped," he said. He also said he personally knows all the resident assistants in his hall.

Shawn Martin, senior in human development and family studies, has lived in the halls for four years and has been a resident assistant for 2-1/2 years. In that time, he has seen every kind of problem ranging from minor roommate problems to domestic violence. He said each problem is different and must be dealt with individually.

In Martin's opinion, the best way to avoid such problems is to be proactive.

"It's best to get to the problem before it happens, individually, with those involved," he said.

Another thing Martin said helps new residents survive is making as many friends as possible. He said it doesn't take many. Just a few close friends gives a new resident someone to talk to about any problem they might have.

He also said respect for fellow residents is important. "You have to respect other people," Martin said. "You may not like everyone around you, but if you say bad things, rumors can start. That can cause problems."

Talking to family is also a way to survive the halls.

"Talk to good friends from your group. Call home for encouragement," Martin said.

Carrie Ambler, junior in horticulture, has been in the halls for three years and is now a resident assistant. She said as a resident assistant, she is there to help new residents adjust to college life.

"I try to tell them what classes are generally like, what teachers generally expect and point residents in the right direction when I can't answer a question," she said.

She said she also acts as a social activities director.

"Everyone gets together to get to know each other," she said.

All of these roles make the resident assistant a great resource to use in surviving hall life.

Sidewalk cyclist fined, handcuffed

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Two bicyclists got more than they bargained for Tuesday when they rode on the sidewalk.

B.C. Camp II, junior in journalism and mass communications, and Julian Hubbard, senior in accounting and marketing, were both stopped by Bob Fenton, K-State Police officer, for riding on the sidewalk.

Camp was taken to the KSU Police Department and given three tickets for disobeying a law enforcement officer, obstructing the legal process and riding a bicycle on the sidewalk.

Hubbard wasn't detained.

■ Camp's version of what happened

Camp said he was riding his bike east of Seaton Hall when he was stopped by Fenton.

"The officer stopped me and told me to get off my bike. I got off of it and asked him if he was going to give me a ticket," he said.

Camp said Fenton did give him a ticket and asked him for his student ID.

"When I told him that I didn't have my ID with me, the police officer gave me a lecture, telling me that you always have to carry an ID on campus," Camp said.

Susan Scott, assistant dean of student life, said there is no policy requiring students to carry their IDs while walking or riding their bikes on campus.

Camp said he was trying to be polite and courteous to Fenton while he was being ticketed and questioned.

"I even tried to make a few jokes. I honestly was not trying to be rude or anything," he said.

Fenton then handcuffed him and took him to the police department in a patrol car, Camp said.

"I was embarrassed. Everyone was looking at me, and it probably looked like I had done something really bad," Camp said.

While looking for his ID card at the station, he discovered that he had a friend's ID and told the officer that it wasn't his.

Camp said Fenton told him, "Now we got you for false ID."

The handcuffs were placed on his wrists backwards, with the left cuff on the right hand, Camp said.

Because the handcuffs were put on wrong, his wrists were swollen and injured, Camp said.

"The police officer was definitely rough when he handcuffed me," he said.

Camp said he told Fenton that he would go to the station and show the officers his ID.

▶ FORT RILEY MILITARY POLICE UNIT ORDERED TO GUANTANAMO BAY

TOPEKA (AP) — Fifty more Fort Riley soldiers have been ordered to the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, where thousands of refugees are being held.

Members of the 716th Military Police unit will help set up camps and provide humanitarian assistance. They will join 45 Fort Riley soldiers sent to Guantanamo earlier.

The latest group was scheduled to leave Forbes Field at 2:30 a.m. Tuesday and was expected to stay in Cuba for six months.

More than 13,000 Cubans picked up at sea while trying to reach the United States were at the naval base as of Monday.

▶ FRATERNITY BROTHERS PLEAD GUILTY TO INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Two fraternity brothers have pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter and hazing in the death of a pledge at Southeast Missouri University.

Mikel Giles, 22, of Dallas, and Cedric Murphy, 22, of Memphis, Tenn., were sentenced on Monday to 30 days in jail, five years' probation and 500 hours of community service.

Prosecutor Morley Swingle said they should speak out against hazing at other colleges. The family of the victim, Michael A. Davis, wants them to work in a morgue.

"Maybe seeing bodies will make them remember what they did," Marisa Hilliard, Davis' sister, said.

Davis, 25, was left unconscious in his room after he and four other Kappa Alpha Psi pledges were repeatedly beaten last February. Fifteen hours later, a pledge discovered that Davis had stopped breathing. Giles and Murphy are among 16 defendants. Both agreed to testify against the others.

Fraternity member Keith Allen, 22, of St. Louis, was convicted last week of five counts of hazing Jurors recommended six months in jail on each count.

▶ COURT REVERSES DECISION; HALCION NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR DEATH

DALLAS (AP) — An appeals court has reversed a decision that found the manufacturer of the sleeping pill Halcion partly responsible for causing a former policeman to kill a friend.

The Dallas Court of Appeals ruled Friday in favor of Upjohn, the Kalamazoo, Mich.-based maker of the world's best-selling sleeping pill.

In November 1992, a Dallas district court awarded up to $2.15 million to the family of William Freeman, who said Halcion altered his personality and caused him to kill.

The presiding judge later reduced the damages to $1.3 million.

Freeman, a former assistant police chief of Fort Stockton, was convicted in 1989 and sentenced to life in prison for the 1987 killing of a friend.

Upjohn officials said they were pleased with the court's reversal and pointed to other liability cases in which their product was vindicated as proof that Halcion does not cause violent behavior.

Juries in Houston, San Antonio and Worcester, Mass., have rejected claims that Halcion caused abnormal behavior.

"Our product has been the target of many unfounded charges in the past few years," Upjohn spokesman Phillip Carra said in a statement.

"We certainly hope that this string of courtroom victories will help reassure patients who can benefit from Halcion that it is a safe and effective product when it's used appropriately."

Randy Johnston, the Dallas attorney for Freeman and his family, said the appellate court ruled that Freeman's relatives cannot collect any of the damages because the original jury awarded no money to Freeman himself.

"Awarding no money damages to Bill is the same as saying he was not hurt. And if he wasn't, hurt then the family can't get any money damages," he said.

Johnston said he would appeal.

▶ THIEVES STEAL WOODSTOCK '94 CURTAINS WORTH $28,000

SAUGERTIES, N.Y. (AP) — Thieves posing as employees of the company that backed Woodstock '94 walked away with $28,000 in one-of-a-kind curtains decorated with the concert's dove-and-guitar logo.

The promoters had planned to raise money for charity by selling the three curtains that covered the 50-foot-high speaker towers.

After the Aug. 12-14 concert, promoters received a phone call from a man identifying himself as an executive with the PolyGram entertainment conglomerate.

He asked where the curtains were stored and got the name of a warehouse just outside Lancaster, Pa.

This week, several men turned up at the warehouse, collected the curtains and drove off.

Police said everyone thought the men were from PolyGram.

Andrea MacNary, director of memorabilia acquisitions for Hard Rock Cafe International, said it would be almost impossible to sell such distinctive items on the open market.

She theorized that the thieves had a buyer lined up beforehand.

Cast in 1861, the original Bluemont Bell has been sitting in the Anderson Hall tower for more than 100 years. Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, is looking for a way to remove and preserve the bell so it can be put on display someplace on campus. The bell was donated to Bluemont College (K-State's original name) in 1861 by Joseph Ingalls.

Piece of history looking for new home

Sometimes disaster can lead to discovery.

After lightning struck Anderson Hall last year, the joint Legislature committee on state buildings was invited to inspect the damages, Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said.

Some of the committee members, who were K-State graduates, remembered that the distinctive central tower of Anderson was open to students during the 1970s, when they were students, he said.

Carter said he unlocked the door to the tower at the members' request.

Inside, the group discovered a large bell hanging from the wooden rafters, he said.

Carter said the bell was dusted off to reveal the inscription, "Gift to Bluemont College by Joseph Ingalls, 1861."

Carter said he recognized the bell as a rare remnant from Bluemont College, K-State's predecessor.

Older than all the buildings on campus, the Bluemont College bell is a part of the University's rich heritage.

According to documents from the University archives, Bluemont Central College, originally located a mile west of K-State campus, was in need of a bell to call the students to class.

Isaac Goodnow, co-founder of Bluemont Central College, solicited a wealthy Easterner, Joseph Ingalls, to fund the bell.

Ingalls provided $175 for the bell and shipping in exchange for having his name engraved on the side.

In December 1861, the 513-pound bell arrived in Manhattan after traveling by train and wagon from Maine.

When Bluemont Central College was turned over to the state and moved to its present location in 1875, the bell was installed in the Farm Machinery Hall (Leasure Hall).

The bell was moved, for the last time, to the tower of Anderson Hall in 1892.

The familiar peal could be heard for five or six miles, according to the archives, and it only rang late once in almost a century of service.

In 1905, a group of pranksters called the "Naughty Five" stole the bell's clapper.

Harry Umberger, who later became dean of the Agriculture Extension Service, was one of the culprits. Umberger Hall was later named for him.

An electronic bell system replaced the Bluemont Central College Bell in 1966. The last time it rang was in 1985 to commemorate the death of former K-State President Milton Eisenhower.

Tentative plans to move the Bluemont College Bell from the tower to a more visible location are being considered, Carter said.

▶ CONSTRUCTION

Research aided by construction; artifacts found

SUMMER RUCKMAN
Collegian

Construction on campus is an inconvenience, but a positive side is that many of K-State's forgotten artifacts are being located.

"With so much construction, people are made aware of how the campus used to be," Tony Crawford, University archivist, said. "It makes people think of how our campus used to look and its traditions."

Expansion at K-State is a balance between constructing new buildings while preserving the original buildings and the look of the campus, he said.

Architects work closely with researchers when making changes to the campus, Crawford said.

During research of the original campus, many artifacts, such as the original water pump, were discovered, he said.

The pump serviced K-State for over 50 years, during a time before refillable Wildcat mugs at Union.

According to documents in the University archives, students and faculty came from all over campus to drink the water. Students preferred the well water to Manhattan city water, which tasted strongly of iron.

The pump was located between Eisenhower and Anderson halls. The handle was broken, and it had two hooks on the side to hang tin drinking cups. A sink from the chemistry lab served as a drain for the water.

The well was filled in 1937 when the pump was no longer used.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said there still is an underground water source in that location.

"It intrigues me that K-State still has a water source in that place. As a facility planner and architect, it interests me to make it a working pump again," Carter said.

For now the pump will remain at the archives, Carter said, while the plans to display, or even reinstall the pump, are considered.

"We've located it, and we're going to talk about it," he said. "Eventually, we'd like to be able to show it to students, faculty and staff.

"There are bits and pieces of K-State that people aren't aware are around. We hope to display the pump so students and faculty can see a part of their heritage." Carter said.

Police make example of sidewalk biker

A student was handcuffed and detained by K-State Police for riding on the sidewalk.

K-State Police showed no respect for the students of K-State Tuesday.

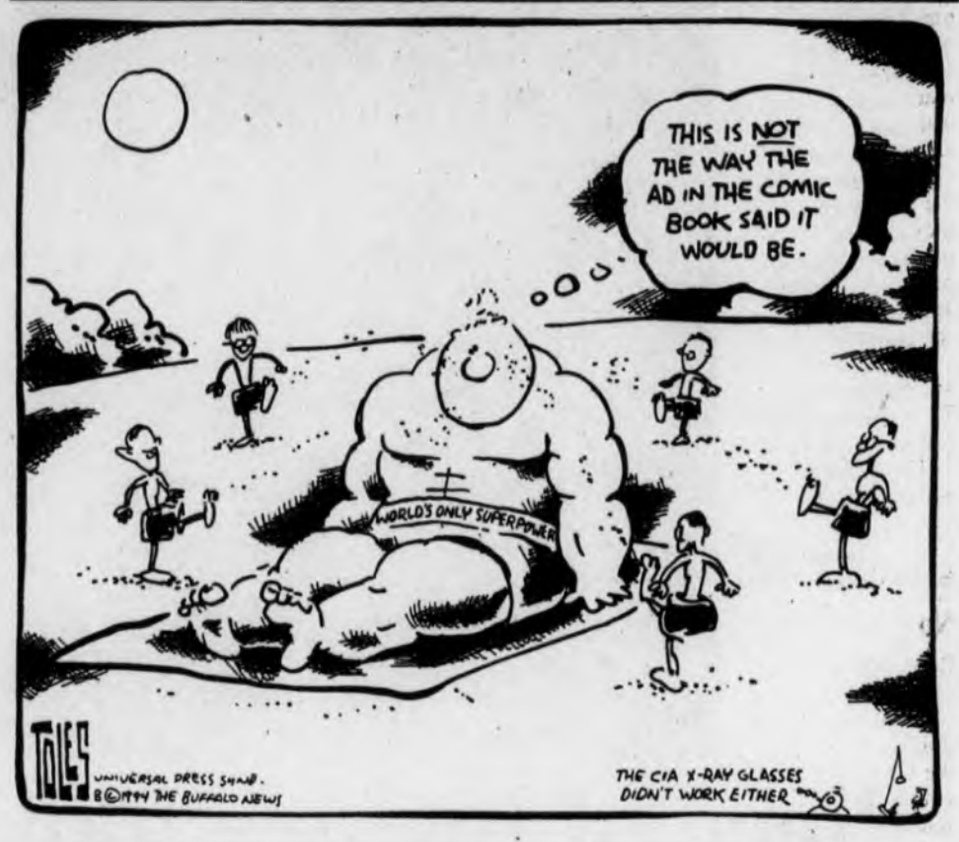
A student was handcuffed in front of his peers and escorted to the K-State Police Department. He had pedaled across campus without his ID.

Being on campus without an ID is not illegal. Bicycling across campus sidewalks is illegal.

The officer decided the student was obstructing justice and disobeying an officer for not producing his ID quickly and without comment.

Because of these heinous crimes to humanity, the student was treated like a hard-core criminal.

He was not arrested, he was detained — with handcuffs. Never mind the fact campus police are dealing with college students. Never mind that we are typically not violent, uneducated or criminal in nature.



He was treated like a murderer because the campus police apparently want to make an example of him.

These laws need to be enforced, but the campus police don't need to embarrass students in the process.

The officer could have put the handcuffs on the bicycle as easily as the student. Impounding the bike solves the problem better than impounding the student. The student could not ride his bike on the sidewalks if he could not use it.

He would not have to be paraded in front of campus like he was trying to shoot the president.

Campus construction: A story to pass on

Fifty years from now, you'll love the construction. You are going to sit close to the fireplace at family reunions, rocking in your favorite chair, telling your grandchildren about how when you were in school there was no such thing as a library (which without the new construction would be pitifully close the truth, I might add).

Students had to walk to the publishing house if they wanted to read anything. Sometimes it would be hard because you had to fight 20,000 other people to get through a corridor six inches wide just to get across campus.

There was always the risk that the remains of the fourth floor Minority Resource Center would fall on your head and maim you right there on the sidewalk. It was uphill both ways and there was snow up to your armpits in the summer, and then it got difficult.

Now go get granddaddy some more bourbon.

No, you probably won't make up such stories for your grandchildren; nor are conditions really that bad. But there is a discontented element on campus that thinks it's that bad or worse. Rumor has it there is a petition drive to halt construction and allow greater mobility on the main campus sidewalk.

This would be a bad thing. Student recognition of the need for library expansion was the reason we began this whole process in the first place.

Not that there aren't problems with the current expansion. It's easy to become discontented when you have to walk behind a smoker through that corridor during rush hour.

It's important is for everyone to recognize the inconvenience and do whatever possible to mitigate it. Everyone on campus can play a role, just like in those teamwork exercises you always did at summer camp, so listen up.

Students: your job is to play nice. No bikes — fines are bad. No giant gym bags loaded with books, lunch, freshmen, etc. No smoking. No spitting your gum on the sidewalk, or sticking it to that cool wooden wall. All of these actions are decidedly unfriendly and, though not prohibited, are strongly discouraged.

Faculty: your job is to understand. Any student who has to navigate the north staircase in Eisenhower and then go around the library construction is going to be late to class. Just learn to live with banging doors and rustling notebooks for the first ten minutes of class.

Deans: your job is to provide. Library construction has decimated on-campus study space, and you have the resources to help. Just open a couple big lecture rooms in around campus (say in Durland, Bluemont, and Umberger), and we'll be set. If you don't, we may have to ask Uncle Max in athletics to set up tables in the practice building.

Administration: your job is to troubleshoot. I know someone is working on the blind corner by Lafene, but maybe you could move the wall or speed up the process or something. That's why you get paid more than the parking ticket people — you can do something positive.

If we as a K-State community are willing to work on this together, we will all survive the construction in better shape than our grandparents. When they were at school....

Global awareness important for students

Some time after classes started, between buying books and going through drop/add, I lost Africa.

Losing a continent is not like losing a set of keys or a pair of sneakers (two things I happen to lose with a disgusting frequency). What I mean is, I lost contact with it.

I lost an awareness about a current issue that was important to me.

I used to be a fountain of information about the goings on over there. Asked for the latest figures on the number of Tutsi killed by guerrillas in Rwanda, or about how many new immigrants were in Zaire, I was as up-to-date as CNN.

It wasn't a nifty, stupid-human trick to keep partygoers amused with, like figuring pi to the 27th place. It wasn't about numbers. It was about the lives those numbers represented.

It was about watching people on television staring at me with eyes that took up the whole of their faces. It was about seeing a picture of refugees draw water from a cholera-infected river and then turning the magazine five pages forward to see one of a dozen men, standing in fresh water up to their thighs, fly fishing.

It was about being aware.

Students get lost in the relatively safe, almost sterile atmosphere of this campus. Absorbed in academia, we forget what exists beyond day-to-day concerns of homework, rent and friends.

It's so easy to shut out the world. For most of us, human rights in China or religious issues in Bangladesh are not paramount to our existence. It's not like being concerned about those things is going to help us pass Algebra or get a job with one of the Big Six accounting firms.

We must keep in mind we live an incredibly privileged existence as students. Difficult, but compared to others, it is not unbearable. The fact that we do is not something we should be made to feel guilty about. Many of us have honestly won the privileges that we have and are very much aware of how very lucky we are.

Even the most informed of us can fall into the trap of feeling we can afford, at least for a few years, to ignore what goes on around us in the larger global community and locally. Perhaps we are thinking that when we graduate and find jobs, it will be time for us to become real citizens.

Now is the time. We need to take an active interest in what goes on beyond the borders of this university and its extended arm of Aggieville.

Sooner than we all know, we'll be leaders in this country and will be responsible for what changes are made to improve or destroy what we inherit.

There are plenty of opportunities for a student who's interested in getting involved. The Community Service Program is always looking for students to tutor Manhattan Middle School pupils, to be with senior citizens and to man summer teams in surrounding Kansas towns and internationally.

There is an emergency homeless shelter in town, several care facilities for the elderly, the Crises Center and the Hospice.

On a global scale, there is a chapter Amnesty International on campus, Students Ending Hunger and even a Rainforest Action Group. If you are into changing political issues, check out the Students for the Right to Life and the Voices for Choice.

Pick a cause and fight for it. Don't voluntarily cover yourselves in plastic wrap and live the life of a cloistered student, avoiding issues that happen to be larger than bike riding on campus.

If you can't volunteer your time, your voice or your money, be aware of what is going on. Become a fountain of information. Make the daily struggles of others to survive mean something personal to you. Whether here or in Africa, wherever.

Don't lose contact.

Many athletes are good students

Dear Editor,

I'm writing in response to Robert Kirk's extremely biased views on the roles of athletes and athletics at K-State in his Aug. 29 column. One might wonder when reading Kirk's remarks if he ever gets to go outside of his greenhouse at all.

Oops! I just used a stereotype, something Kirk appears to be quite well versed in.

I am an athlete here at K-State. I take a dim view of being told that I'm an idiot because I choose to spend a large portion of my life developing my talents as an athlete. On the track team, I compete. It's part of me as horticulture is a part of Kirk. I don't expect him to be so absorbed in his plants that he has no other interest in his life.

I live in Smurthwaite Scholarship House. I had to apply to get in. That means that I had to have good test scores.There are many hard-working athletes who are also hard-working, intelligent students. I regret that Kirk is unable to see past the few bad examples, but I would ask him to remember that not all the bad examples are athletes. Non-athletes can be and frequently do prove to be just as disruptive.

Another thing I would like to point out is that we athletes do indeed work hard. We have to be full-time students as well as practice more than 20 hours a week. Then, on top of all that, we have the extra burden of having to bear up to the scrutiny of bigots like Kirk, who, I am sorry to say, is a Scot (his own words) and will never forget or forgive. I do not know what we athletes did to you Kirk, but I can assure you that we can probably forgive you for prejudices.

I'm also struck by how bitter Kirk sounds over the prospect that some of our athletes might make the professional levels. I notice that he doesn't blast our theater majors. He doesn't blast our art majors. He doesn't even blast the English majors! He fails to realize that there are wonderful opportunities for every student in this University. If you "make it big" someday, and I fail to rise above the poverty level, I won't hold it against you because you had an opportunity, just like an athlete on this campus would, including myself.

Students are behind the Cats

Dear Editor,

I am writing a response to Mr. Kirk's column.

Where in the heck did you come from? In my opinion, one shows lack of education and maturity (graduate student or not) when they refer to athletes as "jabbering cavemen," "football Neanderthal" or "jocks."

There are a lot of students attending Kansas State University on scholarships. Some people are able to attend college only on their ability of the body or the mind. Some have music scholarships, others football, volleyball, and then, of course, the academic scholarships.

Football at KSU is good public relations. Good public relations for the entire University and for the city of Manhattan, which helps bring students to this campus.

You, sir, are showing a lot of disrespect to the entire University and all of the students, staff, and faculty who make their living being involved with K-State athletics. If you "hate the Cats" then why don't you go to some other university? And as far as the "jabbering cavemen" are concerned, good luck this year and know that more than the majority of the student body are behind you guys 100%.

Students support the Cats

Dear Editor,

On Monday, I was surprised to see Robert Kirk's column concerning sports here at K-State. More importantly, I was even more surprised to see the K-State Marching Band thrown into the heap as well. His singular statement about the parasitic band was not taken well by myself and other band members. What upset me was Kirk's lack of justification in his blanket sentence concerning the bands. I would just like to take a few lines to justify why not only marching band, but other bands as well, are valuable to the University and its participants.

According to the College Board, the people who give the SAT Test, they have found that when people participate in bands, they score 45 percent higher on their verbal score and 37 percent higher on their math scores than other mean scores.

According to Fortune 500, you know that finance magazine, over 70 percent of CEO's have some form of sports or band experience.

For you college athletic supporters, Coach Snyder tells a story that goes like this. In order to make communication easier on the sidelines, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics moved the marching band from the standard seats on the 50-yard line to another place in the stadium. Coach Snyder claims that this was the quietest place that he had coached football in. Therefore, the band is very vital for support and pep for the teams, students and alumni.

What I have tried to do here is not make a blanket statement like, "Obviously, the world would be a better place without grad students in horticulture." Hopefully, I have shown that bands and the people that support them are valuable.

This year's band consists of almost 240 members which are not your average group of people. We are devoted, hard-working and very motivated men and women. I am looking forward to this weekend where you will see a different band than last year and see the Cats eat Cajun. I invite you to take a look at Kirk's parasites up close.

No grades, no play

Dear Editor,

Dear Robert Kirk — real cool opinion column you submitted to the Collegian Aug. 29. First of all, it had no structure and made no sense.

Second of all, student athletes' bodies are tuned and built from the hours of hard work we put in each day, not to get a gold chain to fit around our necks properly.

Thirdly, we make grades, otherwise we don't get to play in our sports, and we don't get to go to this school anymore. So I think you need to review your badly stereotyped view of athletes — that is what this school runs on, Purple Pride. Why don't you put on your house slippers, flip on the tube, and criticize yourself, instead of a subject that you have no schooling in. Get a life.

Attack unfounded

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the Aug. 29 column, "Sports Have No Place At K-State."

I feel that I am particularly qualified to respond to your charges since I most likely represent everything you despise in a college student. I skip the occasional class, but I also make good grades and also have a good time. I am a K-State fan, and I am a member of the greek system, which is about the only group of people who you didn't purposely try to offend.

In your article, you claim that the members of our football team are only working for a paycheck.

You couldn't be farther from the truth.

When I look at our football team, I see a group of hard-working athletes who are using their God-given talents to do what few other teams in the country have done — resurrect a dying program, and, whether you believe it or not, this University.

Ask President Wefald how to build up K-State. He'll tell you what he told me once — you build up the sports program.

If it wasn't there, the money you're crying about being misallocated wouldn't be there either. (Sorry, I didn't get the exact figures, but I was too busy killing brain cells and enjoying my college years.)

I think you sank particularly low when you dared to question the ethics of a respected judge, simply for the fact that he was a Big 8 referee. You then insulted the senate minority leader, Bob Dole. You proceeded to basically invalidate the existence of the band and other sports-loving student body members.

In reference to these personal attacks, I found your comments to be more obsolete than offensive. I thought we were past glorifying stereotypes. "Jabbering caveman," "Parasite of Wildcat Land," and "baseball-cap crowd" are terms I would expect from a junior-high student, not from a man in his "golden years." Correction: I suppose Fred Phelps is the "exception that proves the rule." You two should have lunch and exchange barbs and insults.

Pay close attention to this statement before you pretend to laugh this letter off. Just because you have the minority opinion doesn't mean you are some intellectual martyr by default. Put simply, if you were to express your views to any random group of people, anyone from a campus worker to a graduate student in horticulture would tell you to take a flying leap from our plush, new $3 million press box.

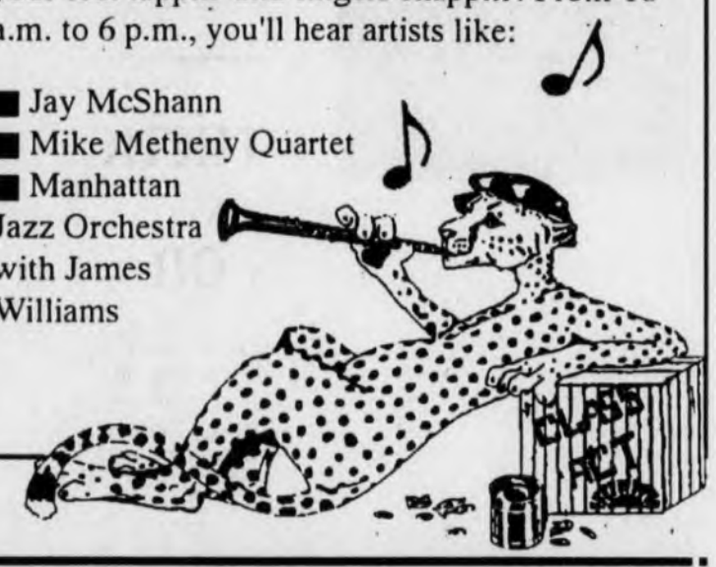
Laws should be fair for all

Dear Editor,

As a daily rider of a bicycle to campus, I actually feel that the new $25 fine for riding on the sidewalks is appropriate — a little steep, but probably appropriate. However, something needs to happen before this fine becomes fair to everybody involved.

When will the campus police start fining pedestrians $25 for walking on clearly marked bike paths? If I pose a threat of injury to a pedestrian when I ride by bike on the sidewalk, don't pedestrians also threaten me with possible injury when they obstruct the bike paths? The path by Durland especially comes to mind. If I ride on that path, and meet a person, neither one of us has much time to react.



By the way, I'd like to thank the Collegian editorial for encouraging people to daydream while they walk on the sidewalk.These daydreamers are probably the same people who step off the curb into the street in front of my bike without even looking. In fact, there are some who look back, see me coming, and still step in front of me.

Tidbits

Women are twice as likely as men to be diagnosed as depressed. It is not known if this is due to biology differences, the fact that women may show their feelings more or that women may have more stress in society.

Tidbits

Married people experience more depression than singles. This may be due to the interpersonal conflicts that arise in close relationships such as marriage.

"The most stressful time in my life was when I sat out from college eight years. When I came back, my grades didn't meet my expectations. I'm from Salina so the commuting added extra stress. I felt like everyone knew I was old, like I didn't fit in. I slept constantly, and it developed into a sleepng disorder, which made me even more depressed."

— Cindy Larson, graduate student in learning

"When my grandpa died, I slept a lot. With death, you just don't know how to deal with it upfront. There's nothing you can do about it."

— Jennifer Miller, senior in social work

When DARKNESS rules your world

You can't sleep. Or maybe you sleep too much. You feel as if you can't make a decision, and something inside is telling you it's all hopeless anyway.

At any given time, about 5 percent of the population in the United States can be diagnosed as having major depression, and at least 10 percent of Americans will experience a major depression at some point in life, according to information from Lafene Health Center.

Many factors contribute to depression including family history, low self-esteem, pessimistic attitude and being overwhelmed by stress.

Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, said a person who is suffering from depression might not get out of bed, get out to see people or miss classes.

"The sooner you do something about it, the sooner you'll be able to stabilize the problem and get on it," he said.

Stress management is a key aspect in avoiding depression.

A long-distance relationship, school work and paying bills are just a few of the things that cause stress in Sarah Turner's life.

Turner, sophomore in architectural engineering, has a boyfriend in Wichita. Each week, she tries to complete her homework by Friday, so she has time to see her boyfriend, and, if necessary, work on the weekends to help pay for the added expenses of living on her own.

"When I start to stress, I tend to sleep a lot. I get really tired and have a hard time getting up in the morning," Turner said. "I also suffer from headaches."

Turner said she's learned better ways to handle stress from past mistakes.

"I used to smoke, which was really bad," she said. "For me, sleeping a lot was actually a negative thing to do, because if I had exercised or just stayed active, it probably would have been better."

Stress management is just one controllable aspect of maintaining good health, according to information distributed by Lafene.

The others include: eating a sensible diet, exercising regularly, getting seven to eight hours of sleep per night, avoiding both drug and alcohol abuse and retaining an optimistic attitude.

Health factors that cannot be completely controlled include: heredity, environmental problems such as pollution, sex-related diseases such as prostate cancer and age.

Newton said that he recommends seeking treatment for a problem as early as possible to prevent long-term side effects.

"Students shouldn't wait until they are hanging on by their fingernails before getting help," he said. "We have trained psychologists and we see our role as important in helping others make life-skill decisions."

Newton said some of the things the counseling center does is help people manage stress, make relationship decisions and learn assertiveness skills.

"Fifty percent of the students we treat have a 3.0 or better," Newton said. "Basically, good students make use of our resources in a timely way. This might be an example of why they succeed."

Newton said students who have a close friend or relative with a serious problem should encourage him or her to get help.

"Often times we will sit down with someone to work out a strategy to bring someone in for help," Newton said.

"There is a tendency for people to protect someone with a serious problem. This includes doing things such as calling an employer for them," Newton said. "What protecting them does is enable them to continue on with that problem."

Stress, alone, or in combination with another problem, was the No. 1 case description that students sought treatment for at Counseling Services last year.

"People need stress. It's an incentive to get things done, but people need to learn to live with it to their advantage," Newton said.

Are you depressed?

The following test, known as "The Wakefield Questionnaire," contains groups of statements. Carefully read each group, then circle the number in front of the statement that best describes how you are feeling now, not how you were feeling or how you hope to feel in the future.

Olympics trying new events

Once, a sports columnist told me that if someone wrote an opinion about the Olympics when the Olympics were going on, a lot of readers would not read it.

Last week, the International Olympic Committee added several sports to future winter and summer Olympics, and some of the events really aren't athletic events.

The first of these events is snowboarding. This might be added to the 1998 Winter Olympics in Japan. I've got nothing against this sport, but it is something to please the MTV generation.

The next sport is beach volleyball. A very competitive sport, but I have a hard time believing the sport has gained world-wide success.

Beach volleyball has grown by leaps and bounds as a recreational sport on the California beach in the 1970s to the broadcast of tournaments on NBC every weekend and as a medal sport in the Goodwill Games.

BRIAN ANDERSON

Both of these sports I can live with, but the next three sports don't live up to the Olympic tradition.

Women's ice hockey. I'm all for gender equality, and women do have a right to participate in any sport, but there aren't any amateur or professional women ice-hockey leagues around for females to develop.

I think there are not enough talented women to play competitive hockey, at least not on an international level.

Remember the beer commercial where the bartender hit a beer bottle against a television so the viewers could watch beauty contestants and a hockey game at the same time?

There have only been two women play at the professional hockey level, and I doubt it is popular in ice hockey countries.

Women and ice hockey — the worst combination of nouns since Michael Jackson and Lisa Marie Presley got married.

Bowling. Maybe the least physical sport next to hop-scotch, bowling might be in the 2000 Olympics in Australia.

It takes a lot of practice to be a consistent bowler, but it takes more energy and time for tracksters, basketball players, etc., to reach international status than a bowler.

Or maybe I'm just worried about the image of beer-gut bowlers wearing their polyester plaid slacks, matching shirts with their names embroidered on them and rainbow-colored bowling shoes as they tearfully accept their gold medal.

Parachuting. Yes, parachuting. I'll give you a moment to think about it..

There are several problems with this. How do you determine a winner? Closest to a spot. Or how close a person can be before the parachute opens, causing near-death situations.

Maybe, it will be degree of difficulty. Will the parachutist have to do 100 flips and 60 twists before opening the chute?

Besides, how are people going to view the event on television? Is every parachutist going to be be accompanied by a cameramen?

No Olympic athlete has died in modern Olympic competition, and I'm sure parachuting is safer than in the past, but if a chute doesn't open, it will probably be the end of it in the Olympics.

Hopefully, this has sparked your interest and made you realize that anyone can be in the Olympics. I don't think I'll go out and work to be in any of these events.

I'll just wait for checkers to become a sport.

Starting positions still questionable as K-State nears first game

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Many starting positions still seem to be up for grabs as the Wildcats are nearing the season opener this Saturday.

Coach Bill Snyder addressed this issue Tuesday at the first of his weekly press conferences in the Vanier Football Complex.

"There are still a lot of positions that aren't definite," Snyder said.

"This might give the impression that there's still a lot of instability, but that's not the case," he said. "We want to keep it competitive."

The defensive secondary is one of those competitive positions with as many as eight players competing for four spots.

"There are seven or eight guys capable of playing in the secondary," Snyder said. "The inside guys also have the ability to play at more than one position."

Johnson was a redshirt in '88 for the Cats and came back to the team this year after being in the service.

"Johnson has come on strong this fall and set his sights toward playing," Snyder said.

The conference provided a few surprises involving the linebackers. Mike Ekeler was listed on the depth chart ahead of Percell Gaskins to claim starting rights.

"It could change by game time, but we will feel comfortable with Ekeler there," Snyder said.

The fact that this special-teams veteran is a strong candidate for starting linebacker is still quite an improvement since his walk-on days.

"No matter what happens with the situation, I'll be pumped and ready to go," Ekeler said.

The defensive-end slot is a tough one to predict, but Snyder has narrowed it to sophomore Nyle Wiren and junior Matt McEwen.

On the offensive side, it was questionable whether J.J. Smith would start ahead of Leon Edwards at running back, or if Ross Greenwood would start ahead of David Squires.

However, Smith and Greenwood will most likely take the field first on Saturday, Snyder said.

An area where Snyder said he would especially like to settle on one guy is at kicker.

The two vying for the position are Scott Collins and Martin Gramatica.

"We would like to have just one doing both jobs for travel reasons, but whoever is best at kick-off or short-range will play," Snyder said. "I'll put the best one for each situation on the field."

K-State plays its first game against Southwestern Louisiana at 6:30 p.m. on Saturday.

It is the Cats' first night game since 1992.

A concern was whether starting the season at night would be a problem for the Cats.

"The only concern I have is that the players won't get to spend as much time with their relatives that come up and see them," Snyder said.

The players don't seem to mind the late start, either.

"I'm not worried," Greenwood said. "It'll be a lot cooler and won't wear us down as much."

Rodeo Club available to everyone, not just cowboys

Beyond the books and bars, some K-State students are getting an education from broncs, buckles and bills.

"Rodeo is a business, and we have to fight for an entertainment dollar," Dan Suderman, Rodeo Club President and senior in animal sciences and industry, said.

Suderman said the rodeo team is a branch of the Rodeo Club, and the club acts as an umbrella to help support the team.

"You don't have to be a rodeo participant to be in Rodeo Club," Suderman said. "The club is geared to people who have a curiosity."

K-State is part of the Central Plains region of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association, Suderman said. Athletes purchase cards that allow them to rodeo in NIRA.

"The team exists in probably the toughest region," Randel Raub, Rodeo Club faculty adviser, said.

Dave Katzer, saddlebronc rider and junior in public relations, said K-State is in the toughest collegiate region in the nation, which makes it a challenge to set goals.

Rodeo athletes earn the right to go to the collegiate finals in Bozeman, Mont., by accumulating points throughout the season, Suderman said.

He said team eligibility requires students to be enrolled full time at K-State or K-State-Salina and have a minimum 2.0 grade point average. The rodeo team consists of two women and six men, selected by the coach, Steve Frazier, adjunct professor of animal sciences and industry, Suderman said.

Suderman said roughstock events are bullriding, bareback and saddlebronc these events require the rider to stay on the animal for eight seconds.

Mens' timed events are team roping, calf roping and steer wrestling. Women can compete in goat-tying, barrel racing or break-away roping, Suderman said.

Cory Bailey, senior in agricultural education, will be a third-year NIRA card-holder. Bailey said he steer wrestles, or bulldogs, off Mack, a horse his dad bought in 1978.

Bailey was in the rodeo in high school. He started steer wrestling in June 1993.

"I was scared to death to fall off a horse," Bailey said. He said he was threatened by a hazer, a friend of his father, who was helping him.

"He said, 'If you don't get off, I'll pull you off," Bailey said. "I got off."

Bailey competed in International Professional Rodeo Association competition this summer in Baxter Springs, Columbus and his hometown, Girard.

Katzer has also been able to enter in IPRA rodeos, and is ranked in the top 15 in the United Rodeo Association seven-state region standings. This weekend, Katzer said he will try to ride in four rodeos — Mound City, Mo., Eskridge, Brookville, and Dayton, Iowa.

"It costs a lot of money just to be a hobby," Katzer said, who averages at least two rodeos and 300 miles per weekend. He said he won't have a weekend in Manhattan until Thanksgiving.

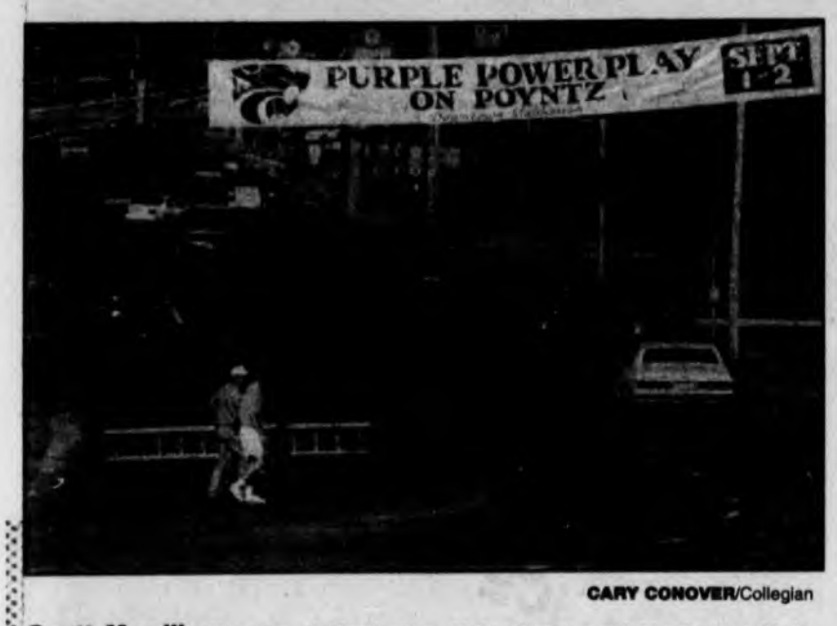
Katzer said people don't have to compete to be involved in Rodeo Club.

"The club is the backbone of the team," Katzer said. "Without the club, we'd just be a bunch of individuals."

The club has worked to raise money and support for the team's needs, Raub said. He said the group brought cowboy poet Baxter Black to Manhattan for a fund raising concert last February, and has worked for the support of local businesses and people who enjoy rodeo.

Raub said a rodeo club advisory board made up of alumni has been formed to give the team direction and to raise money.

"I think that's been a pretty significant step forward," Raub said.



Club and team members are responsible for acquiring and taking care of practice stock and equipment, Raub said.

"It's like any other team and club on campus that does not receive a lot of financial support," Raub said. "It's a struggle. They have to really love it."

The K-State Rodeo Club meets at 7:00 p.m. on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month in Weber 111.

Wanted: one worthy, weird, wild, wacky Wildcat

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Scott Morrill, director of Manhattan Main Street, and Manhattan Main Street volunteer Mark Mugler walk across Anderson Avenue on Aug. 23, after hanging the Purple Power Play on Poyntz banner. The event, a pep rally for the K-State football game against Southwestern Louisiana, is scheduled for Thursday and Friday nights.

If you are trying to find a way to get to Las Vegas to see the Wildcats play in November, reach into your creativity file and head to Poyntz Avenue Thursday night.

This year marks the ninth anniversary of the Purple Power Play on Poyntz pep rally and tailgate party, and this year there is something new.

Scott Morrill, director of Manhattan Main Street, said this is the first year for the Weirdest, Wildest, Wackiest, Wildcat Fan Contest, co-sponsored by KQLA-FM 103.5 and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The contest is designed to encourage fans to demonstrate their loyalty and spirit for the 1994 football season, Morrill said.

"The new contest idea evolved from a beginning idea to have a best fan contest to reward those K-State fans who have been very loyal over the years," he said.

J.J. Davis, program director of KQLA, said this type of contest is geared toward, but not limited to, students.

There will be two divisions of the contest, Morrill said.

An all-expense paid trip for two to the K-State vs. the University of Nevada-Las Vegas football game is the first-place prize for the individual who generates the most enthusiasm as the weirdest, wildest, wackiest wildcat Fan, Morrill said.

The winner of the group division will win a tailgate party for 200 people at a K-State home game, and consolation prizes will be offered to some non-winning entrants, he said.

"The contest is pretty wide open. Skits, cheers and stunts are ideal things for competition," Morrill said.

Davis said it encourages any off-the-wall entrants.

"If you want to paint yourself purple, anything goes," he said.

Members of various K-State coaching staffs will serve as judges, Morrill said.

"I think a contest of this nature promises to produce a highly entertaining means of displaying purple pride, especially for students," he said.

Registration is due by noon Thursday. Those interested can register at Kansas State Travel Service, Varney's Bookstore, K-State Union Book Store or any downtown merchant.

Hort therapy club to peddle flora

BROOKE GRABER FORT
Collegian

The K-State chapter of the Horticulture Therapy Club has several events planned for the year.

In addition to the plant sales the club regularly does, club members will be selling bundles of dried flowers during Saturday's K-State vs. Southwestern Louisiana football game in the Bramlage parking lots.

The club is planning to take a field trip to the Konza Prairi Research Natural Areae, a CPR class will be offered, and club members will participate in Project Learning Tree, Sarah Page, club president, said.

No specific dates have been set for any of these events.

A CPR class will be offered because it is a requirement for all horticulture therapists.

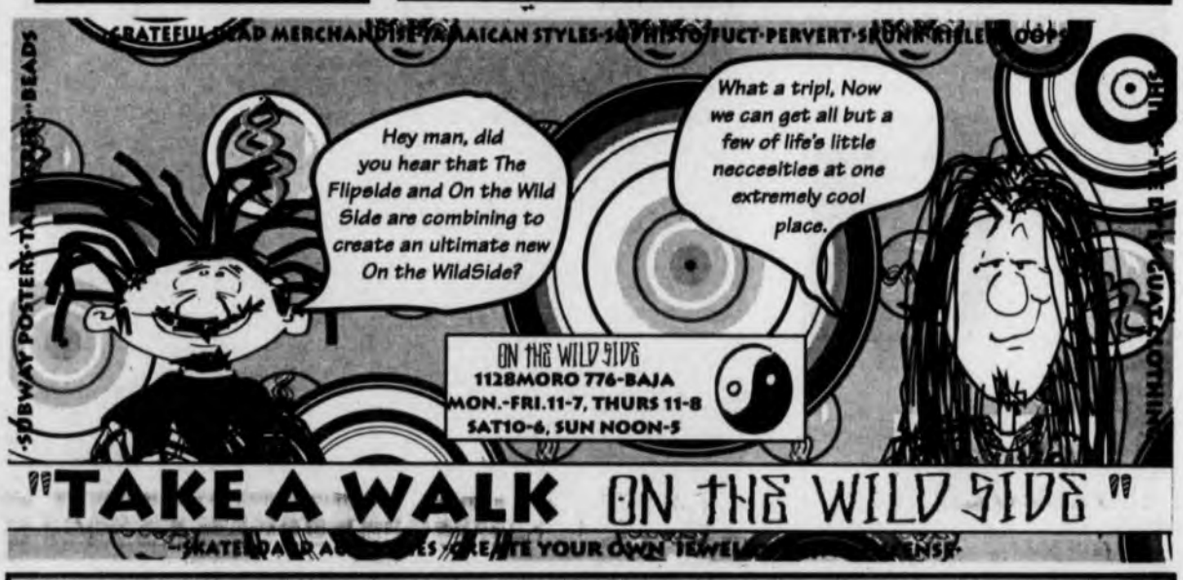
Richard Mattison, club adviser, said Project Learning Tree is a national program that was developed by the Extension Forestry Department for public school teachers. The one-day event is held at Rock Springs Ranch.

Mattison said the event gives horticulture therapy students a chance to do problem-solving exercises that they will engage in when they are horticulture-therapy professionals.

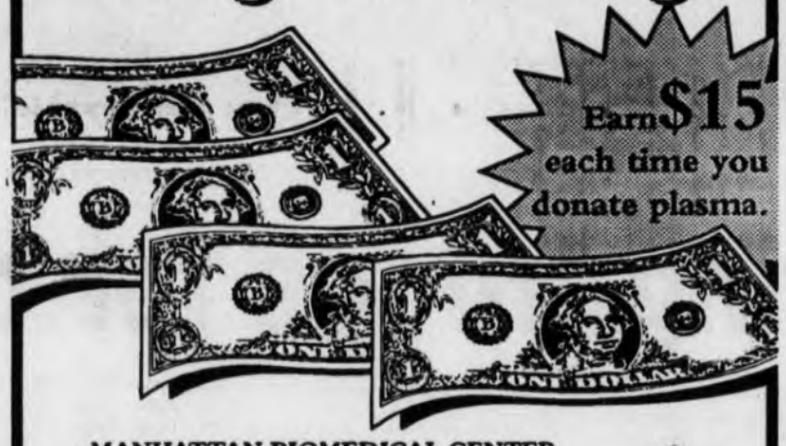
Norma Jean Davis, graduate student in horticulture therapy, attended Project Learning Tree last year.

One exercise participants did was to draw a picture of a tree they liked and a map leading to the tree. Another participant then had to try to find the tree drawn using the map and drawing given to them, Davis said

Christie Spicer, sophomore in horticulture therapy, said horticulture therapy involves working with special populations, such as the elderly, disabled people and young children.



Each person has a different definition of what horticulture therapy is, Spicer said.



MEETING TIME

Students interested in joining the Horticulture Therapy Association should attend the next meeting at 7:30 p.m. on September 12 or contact President Sarah Page. Dues are $2.50 per semester or $5 per year.

Erin Brester, an 18-month-old, enjoys herself while playing on a watermelon Tuesday evening at the annual College of Agriculture watermelon feed in front of Waters Hall. Her father, Gary Brester, Agriculture Economics Club adviser, right, said he comes every year, although last year he was baby-sitting Erin. The event was for all members of the College of Agriculture and served as a time for students to mingle as well as find out about the different agriculture clubs at K-State. A total of 449 pounds of watermelon was eaten.

Welcoming with watermelon

JANET McPHERSON
Collegian

More than 200 agricultural faculty and students consumed about 450 pounds of watermelon in front of Waters Hall Tuesday.

The Agriculture Council and Alpha Zeta agriculture honorary sponsored the annual College of Agriculture watermelon feed.

"The watermelon feed is a long-standing tradition in the K-State College of Agriculture," Travis Ellis, senior in milling science management and Agriculture Council president, said.

"We mainly do it so all of our new students can get acquainted with agricultural clubs or other students," Ellis said.

Jerrod Westfahl, sophomore in agricultural economics, coordinated the feed as part of his duties as Agricultural Open House coordinator.

Westfahl welcomed the crowd. Students and faculty then participated in a bingo-mixer designed to show the diversity in the college.

Mark Johnson, dean of agriculture, encouraged students to broaden their perspectives, and to accept opportunity when opportunity knocks.

Ellis spoke to the crowd about the benefits of being involved in College of Agriculture activities.

He said that activities are great stress-relievers, plus they result in friends for life and improved leadership skills.

"I've got a two-for-one challenge for each new member of the College of Agriculture," Ellis said. "Get involved in two clubs for at least one semester."

Each agricultural club in the college had representatives attending to answer questions about organizations.

"When I transferred here, I didn't have a clue about the clubs, organizations, or campus in general," Ellis said. "The Watermelon Feed gave me a chance to see what was available."

"The handcuffs weren't necessary," Camp said.

When Camp and Hubbard asked if they could take their bikes with them, or at least lock them up, Fenton refused, they said.

"He said, 'If it's still there when we get back, you can get it,'" Camp said.

Both Camp and Hubbard said that when they returned to where they had left the bikes, they were gone.

Camp said he is considering legal action against the police department for the loss of the bikes.

■ What the campus police said happened

Fenton said that when Camp was asked to stop and get off the bike, he continued to ride and ignored the officer.

Capt. Robert Mellgren, acting director of the campus police, said that when Fenton was giving Camp a ticket, he asked him for his student ID.

Fenton said since Camp could not produce positive identification, he was taken to the police station until he could.

A dispatcher for the campus police said that although students are not required to carry their IDs, an officer can ask for the name and address of the student if they are suspected of committing a crime.

Mellgren said the officer believed that the suspect was not being truthful as to his identity.

"Police officers have the right to arrest people if they feel they are given false identification," Mellgren said.

Although technically it was a detention, not an arrest, Camp was handcuffed and taken to the police station in a patrol car, Fenton said.

"He was not taken down to the Riley County police station, booked and put in jail, so this would not be classified as an arrest," Fenton said.

Mellgren said that Camp was handcuffed because he was not cooperating.

"He was just trying to test us, I think," Mellgren said.

Fenton said he may have told Camp and Hubbard to leave the bikes there, but he thought one of Camp's friends was taking care of them.

As of Tuesday night, Mellgren said he had no knowledge as to the whereabouts of the bikes, but officers were looking for them.

Ohse recalls hot dogs

TOPEKA — Ohse Foods voluntarily recalled on Monday about 14,000 pounds of Ohse Gold Label Bun Size weiners.

The weiners had been distributed exclusively through Sam's Club stores in nine states.

Ohse spokesman Ken Ward said the recall applies only to boxes containing 16 of the three-pound packages of weiners sold in Sam's Club stores and no other Ohse products.

The weiners were distributed through stores in 29 cities in Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia.

Ward, director of quality assurance for the Topeka-based meat products company, said the firm discovered the undercooked weiners itself and ordered the recall, which was announced by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Washington, D.C.

The affected weiners were processed at the firm's Topeka plant and carry a black package label and the UPC code number 74800-10108.

Those with questions about the recall may call 1-800-535-4555 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., CDT, Monday through Friday.

▶ COLLEGE OF BUSINESS

Calvin Hall facelift includes lab, lounge

CHARITY WOODSON
Collegian

The College of Business Administration in Calvin Hall is in the middle of a $2-million project aimed at preparing business majors for the job market.

The remodeling project was set up in two phases.

Daniel Short, dean of the College of Business Administration, said that the first phase, a new computer lab located in the basement of Calvin, is equipped with computers for student use.

The second phase of the project is the transformation of the fourth-floor attic into an office for students, Short said.

The main area of the office will be a student lounge where business majors can go to relax between classes, he said.

Short said the office will also house several conference rooms, equipped with computers, that can be reserved by students.

Each conference room will be large enough to accommodate six to eight people, and includes resources to work on class projects, he said.

"This office provides space for students to work together and build their skills," Short said. "Our vision is that students will go to the lab or the office between classes and apply what they learned in the classroom."

The project, funded by alumni gifts and state funds, is expected to be completed by spring 1996, he said.

The computer lab, which cost $200,000 to install, is already functioning; the attic renovations are estimated at $750,000; and additional repairs to Calvin, like staircases and elevators, put the project at $2 million, Short said.

Koch Industries, a petrochemical research plant based in Wichita, also contributed $50,000 to the project, Yar Ebadi, associate dean of the college, said.

"Koch has been helping the college for a long time, and they consider this project to be very important for the students," Ebadi said.

Short said the remodeling effort began as a response to absolute need.

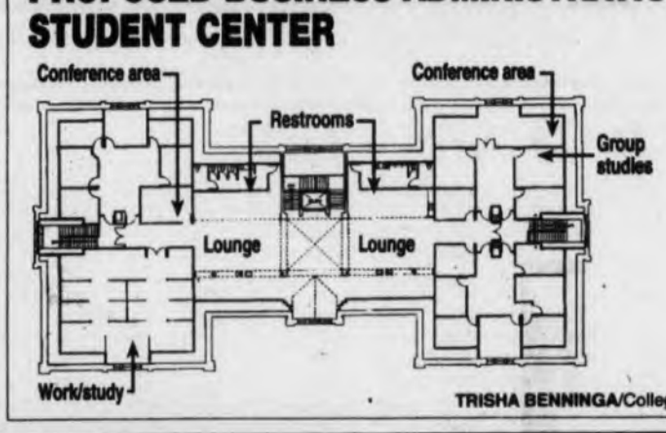
"We talk to businesses to find out what they want from students, and we try to integrate that into our students' learning," he said.

One component of business that Short stresses is teamwork.

"The office will help teach students how to interact with each other in much the same way as they would in the business world," he said.

Another way the new office will make graduates more marketable is by addressing the change in the way business administration is taught, he said.

"Business in the '70s and '80s was taught mainly in terms of facts," Short said. "Now we're moving toward interpretation and analytical skills. We want students to learn how to use the information that we give them in class in practical ways."



The Market Driven Education Program, which aims to fully prepare graduates for the business world, created a questionnaire to survey recent alumni and businesses, Richard Ott, associate professor in accounting, said.

"We've gone out with these surveys to zero in on specific skills that employers are looking for," Ott said. "Our next step is to revise our curriculum to meet the need for these skills."

Once opened, the office will be another step toward helping students achieve the skills much needed to succeed, Ott said.

"This facility will lend itself to building students into good employees," he said. "Employers say that they want students that are team workers, and that is what we'll give them."

Moving the 513-pound bell may delay project

Physical difficulties in moving the 513-pound bell delay the project, he said.

"It's lodged far enough up in the tower that no equipment is capable of taking it out through the interior," Carter said.

The Kansas Historical Society must first approve any construction to Anderson Hall to ensure the building structure suffers no damages, he said.

"There have been problems in the past," Carter said.

"It takes much negotiation to make necessary changes and to satisfy the guidelines of the state Historical Society."

Tony Crawford, University archivist, said he hopes to see it displayed to the public.

"I'd like to see it where it's visible so people, students and faculty can have more appreciation for K-State history," Crawford said.

"The bell is presently safe where it's at," Carter said.

"Until there's a way to safely pull it out with the right equipment, we'll leave it up there undisturbed."

FULBRIGHT SCHOLARSHIPS
for the 1995-1996 academic year
More than 600 awards providing round-trip transportation, tuition and maintenance for one academic year abroad.
In addition to graduate students, seniors are also eligible. Selection is based upon grades, recommendations, and a plan of study that underscores the need to study abroad. In all cases an applicant must have a particular country in mind, as well as suggest a particular school, institute, or research center where he or she would like to study. While the competition for these awards is rigorous, 25 K-Staters became Fulbrighters during the past decade. For further details and application forms, contact Walter Kolonosky, Chairperson, Fulbright Scholarship Committee, Eisenhower Hall 23. Office Hours Tuesday and Thursday 9:30, or call 532-6760.

▶ ART EXHIBIT

Local sculptor carves new niche

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Michael Mastranardi, assistant professor of art, is breaking new artistic ground. The first national sculpture exhibition at K-State opens its doors today.

The exhibition, called "East to West," includes sculptures by East-Coast artists.

"It's a national show, but it's selective of one area," Mastranardi said.

Mastranardi's recent move from Boston to Manhattan inspired the exhibition.

"I don't really know a lot of artists here," Mastranardi said.

"I knew the best artists from the Northeast. Why not share with my new community?" he said.

Four of the artists are from Boston, and two are from New York. Mastranardi has collaborated with many of the artists.

"The work in a lot of ways, is pretty much cutting edge,'" he said.

"It's not necessarily what you would typically think of as a sculpture," he said.

"One of my purposes for bringing this work to K-State is an education," Mastranardi said.

Mastranardi said he wishes to expose the campus to works that are different from what he's seen in Manhattan.

"Sculpture is kind of an under represented media," he said.

The exhibit's six artists work in very different ways.

Judy Haberl, who will be giving a gallery talk at Wednesday's opening, explores the many meanings behind domestic objects taken out of context.

Internationally-renowned artist Paulo Pelosini's destructivist pieces threaten artistic movements ("neos" and 'posts") with their raw, ambiguous style.

Marilyn Pappas constructs garments that investigate the nature of humans.

Larimer Richard's bronze sculptures appear as breastplates and armor, but upon closer inspection, their meanings are revealed. Richard's art concerns AIDS and society.

"Most work that needs explanation, but doesn't have it, is not meant to have it," he said.

"The meaning is in the poetry of it. It's up to the viewer to bring something to it, to interpret it on many different levels," he said.

"I would love to see this show go on the road," Mastranardi said.

"If we could get this show on the road and rent it, we could raise money for the art museum (the soon-to-be-built Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art) and the art department and for further exhibitions," he said.

The art department, the fine arts fee and the Union Program Council Arts Committee are funding the exhibition.

EXHIBITION

"East to West," the first K-State national sculpture exhibition, is currently running in the Union Art Gallery. The gallery is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The show closes Sept. 27.

There will be a formal gallery opening from 5 - 7 p.m. Wednesday in the Union Art Gallery. Judy Haberl, featured artist will give a speech concerning her work.

The exhibiton is being sponsored by the KSU Art Department, the KSU Fine Arts Fee, and the K-State Union Program Council Arts Committee.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Freshman needs ZZZs

Dear Cassie,

I am a freshman and still trying to get into a comfortable routine. I am enrolled in a 7:30 math lecture class and that means waking up at about 6:30. That would be easy for me if I could only get to sleep BEFORE midnight. My roommates make sure that doesn't happen.

Don't get me wrong, I have great roommates. It's just that during the first week, I ended up missing this class, and sneaked into a later math lecture.. How can I get my roommates to comply with my wants and not infringe on their wants?

My next problem is an ethical dilemma. If I just skip the 7:30 class and attend later ones for the rest of the year, that would solve my problems, but would it be right? I like to think of myself as doing the right things, and I hope that whatever I do, I would consider it OK for anyone else to do.

Thank you,
Tired

Dear Tired,

There's nothing more annoying than inconsiderate roommates, especially when you are trying to catch some Z's in order to attend a 7:30 a.m. math lecture. The solution is simple. Have a chat with your roommates.

If you don't care to attend a 7:30 class, go talk to an instructor or your adviser—a few other dandies will drop, leaving you an opening.

'Annie Hall' exhibits Allen's neurotic style

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

"Annie Hall" is the quintessential Woody Allen comedy. It's like buttah!

If you have never experienced an Allen film, drag your keister off the couch and see this film.

It's chock full of kitschy wisecracks, philosophical musings, inane chatter and some of the best movie lines ever spoken in film history.

It's so nice to finally be able to see such a smart film from Union Program Council.

"Annie Hall" is Woody Allen at his best. The film, taking place in New York — a metaphor for Allen's neurosis — explores Allen's love life.

Diane Keaton, Allen's love-interest in the film (and offscreen, at times), is the maniacal, harried Annie Hall. She's so mixed up, she can't even talk straight.

Keaton's understated performance won her an Oscar in 1977. The film didn't do badly either, picking up Best Picture and Best Screenplay Oscars. Allen nabbed Best Director Oscar.

Woody Allen has this, well, it's hard to put a finger on it. Allen's character, Alfie, has been seeing an analyst for 15 years. He's funny, yet insightful. Crazy, yet strangely normal.

He can make so much sense. Allen explains politicians: "You know the ethics those guys have — it's like a notch under child molester." Allen on masturbation: "Don't knock masturbation — it's sex with someone I love."

Allen's direction is Land-O-Lakes (butter). He cuts scenes in two, showing Alfie talking with his analyst, and Annie talking with hers. It's a risky format to use, but Allen's master touch makes it work beautifully.

The film is full of flashbacks of Allen's past flames, a cartoon of his love life with Keaton, and hilarious looks at the families of both Annie and Alfie.

"Annie Hall" is a modern comedy. It was one of the first current takes on realistic love. The ground-breaking realism is Allen's achievement.

Don't go to this movie with preconceived notions of Allen's affair with much, much-younger Soon-Yi Previn (ex-wife Mia Farrow's adopted daughter). Geniuses have their quirks.

Afterward, you'll want to go get some coffee and talk up a storm. You know — no big whoop.

ANNIE HALL

"Annie Hall" shows today at 8 p.m. and at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Thursday in Forum Hall and 8 p.m. on Friday in the Little Theatre. Tickets are $1.75.

Kansas sells out with Manhattan crowd

LOLA SHRIMPLIN
Collegian

The line for the sold-out Kansas concert Tuesday night at the Wareham Opera House stretched down Poyntz Avenue and around the corner to the alley.

Finally, the doors were opened at 7:30 p.m., and the crowd streamed in.

More than an hour later, Submytion took the stage.

Submytion has all the makings of a good metal band. It has the requisite long hair, the tattoos and a lead singer named Theron, who has mastered the ability to scream at decibels previously reserved for planes taking off.

This band should have a definite spot on Headbanger's Ball, if it doesn't already.

While the music was slightly louder than a train wreck, the band would have been better with a larger stage. Wiz, the bass player, seemed to have more energy than the stage could contain.

The music went nearly uninterrupted, with brief pauses for Wiz to speak to the audience.

Submytion has released two albums, "Finally" and "Heart of Darkness."

Submytion's music isn't for everyone, but anyone who is into heavy metal would absolutely love it.

Submytion tours 50 weeks out of the year and travels from their homes in Kansas City all over Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska.

Kansas' music, on the other hand, was almost classical. The band was formed in 1968 and had its first album released in 1974.

This was the self-titled album. It had a copy of the mural of John Brown, which is painted in the Statehouse.

The original group consisted of Phil Ehart, Dave Hope, Kerry Livgren, Robby Steinhardt, Steve Walsh and Richard Williams. Walsh and Williams were the only original members to play with the band last night. Kansas is celebrating its 20th anniversary this year.

They took the stage at around 10:15 and started with "Point of Know Return."

Listening to them made one want to go out and buy every album Kansas ever made.

The band has been on the road performing for 12 straight days, Ken Snook, owner of Snookies Bar and co-sponsor of the concert, said.

The band didn't show it though, and performed many older songs, such as "Dust in the Wind," "The Wall," and "Wheels."

Some of Kansas' songs tend to be a little long, as Kansas likes to emphasize instrumental ability.

While this could be a drawback for another band, the fact that Kansas has included an electric violin and two keyboards makes it work.

As with Submytion, Kansas would have benefited from a larger stage, as singer Steve Walsh seemed to bounce off the rafters.

Kansas will be playing again tonight, with Squib Cakes opening.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Kansas foods fill K-State plates

Local farms bid to keep food dollars at home

BROOKE GRABER FORT
Collegian

As the saying goes, you are what you eat, and if you're eating on campus, then you are a Kansan.

The food you eat in the K-State Union and campus housing often comes from local Kansas farmers and the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

Barb Depew, production manager of the Union, said the Union tries to buy food products from local farmers whenever possible.

"During this time of the year, when produce is available, we do buy from Kansas farmers," Depew said. Produce that is purchased locally includes tomatoes, cantaloupe, peppers and cucumbers, she said.

Last year, the Union sponsored Kansas Fest in conjunction with Kansas Day. Depew said Kansas Fest is a week during which Kansas products are offered for sale in the Union.

"Kansas Fest was done by the Kansas Board of Agriculture contacting us," Depew said.

Depew said the Board of Agriculture suggested that the event be around Kansas Day.

Kansas Fest will take place again this year, she said.

"I feel that offering these products will be no problem," Depew said.

Malley Sisson, food services director of the Union, said she thinks buying local produce is important because it brings money into the state and keeps money in the state.

Sisson said it is sometimes difficult to work with local vendors because the local farmers often do not have the transportation needed to bring produce to the Union, nor do they have regular delivery dates.

Buying locally takes a bigger effort by both the farmer and the buyer, Sisson said.

Many food products sold in the Union, such as bread, mil, and some beef, come from food distributors, such as General Mills, Depew said.

Both well-known food service distributors and local farmers place bids with the Union, she said.

Karen Winslow, procure officer of Housing and Dining Services, said the department buys tomatoes, watermelons, and cucumbers from local farmers as often as possible.

Winslow said the decision to buy produce locally is based on the quality of produce and the lowest bid.

Sausage links and spare ribs are some items that are purchased from the animal science department, she said.

John Wolf, manager of the meat laboratories at the animal science department, said the department has sold meat products to the Union and Housing and Dining Services for the past three years.

Mike Forbes, plant manager of Call Hall, said Call sells ice cream to the Union, Housing and Dining Services, Dilly's Deli and Gambino's Pizza in Riley.

Sisson said that in 1986 or '87, the Union opened its ice cream counter featuring K-State ice cream.

"We really wanted Call Hall ice cream," she said.

Sisson said alumni often stop by the Union to sample the ice cream they enjoyed as students on campus.

Forbes said the Union and Housing and Dining Services pay monthly for the ice cream they get from Call.

Two full-time employees and two students make all the ice cream at Call , she said.

Keeping open mind key in dealing with people residence hall life — communication, involvement and open-mindedness.

McElfresh said keeping an open mind can help new residents accept and deal better with the variety of people they will come into contact with throughout the year.

"Don't fly off the handle at anyone too soon," he said.

Ambler said communication is also key to survival. "If you get people to talk to each other, it's the best way to minimize problems," she said, "It helps avoid a big blowup."

She added that patience and understanding are very important.

"Many things will bug you over time, and you have to learn to go with it," she said.

If a new resident is having real problems, there are several places and people to go to. Martin suggested each respective assistant hall director, the dean of student life office and the many counseling services offered on campus.

"There are almost too many people who can help," he said.

But the resident assistants are always there to help their residents survive. That's why they're there.

1994 Football Preview

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

K-State receiver Mitch Running leaps for the ball against Colorado last season. Running was the Cats No. 3 receiver in 1993. This season Running will play an even more important role in the K-State offense, since the Cats have to replace third team all-American Andre Coleman. Also returning along with Running, is freshmen all-American Kevin Lockett.

Cats prepared to step to the next level

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Things have definitely changed in Manhattan.

The K-State football team finished last season with a 9-2-1 record and a Copper Bowl victory, but it wasn't too long ago that the program was deemed the worst in the country by Sports Illustrated.

Attendance at home games was poor, the wins were few and everybody used to schedule K-State as the homecoming game because it would be an easy victory.

However, that's all in the past. The Cats have won more games in the past four seasons than they did in the previous 10.

The question now is what is the next step for the program, and coach Bill Snyder said the answer is a New Year's Day bowl game.

"We have the opportunity to take the next step," Snyder said. "Be it another bowl game, an improvement on the record, competing for a conference championship or the opportunity to play in a New Year's Day bowl game.

"But we will have to do several things to help make that step easier."

Snyder said having many of his top players in Manhattan during the summer is the type of thing that he was talking about when he said the team will have to do some things to help make the transition easier.

"We had 70 of our top players here during the summer," Snyder said.

"It was the finest on-campus summer that this program has ever had.

"We've taken the appropriate steps there," he said. "What we have to do now is have great senior leadership."

The senior leadership Snyder is talking about will come from returning all-Big Eight quarterback Chad May.

"I take the responsibility of being the leader on offense," May said.

"I'm the one that they look to inside of the huddle. I want to have the ball when the game is on the line. I just hope that we have the ball."

Snyder will also depend on seniors Darrell Harbert, Kirby Hocutt and Laird Veatch as the leaders on defense.

Then on offense, senior leadership will also come from J.J. Smith and Barrett Brooks.

"We're going to have to have the seniors step up," Snyder said. "Senior leadership is always important for a team to be successful."

As an overall team, the Cats return 15 starters and 10 all-Big Eight selections from 1993. The offensive unit returns seven starters, and the defense returns six starters.

The hardest-hit position, because of graduation, was the defensive backs. Lost are all-American Jaime Mendez, Kenny McEntyre, Kitt Rawlings and Thomas Randolph.

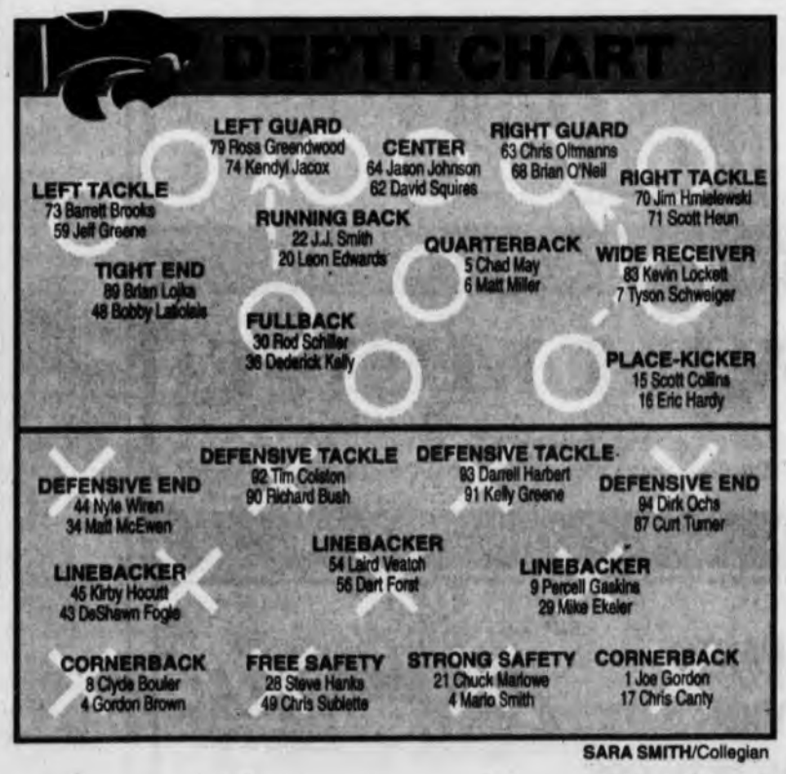
Replacing them will be Clyde Bouler, Steve Hanks, Chuck Marlowe and Joe Gordon.

Snyder said the new group is talented, but is still missing one thing.

"At one point this season, we will have as good of talent as we had last season," Snyder said. "We are still missing one ingredient, and that is on-the-field experience."

The rest of the defense should be solid, as the Cats return almost everybody in their front seven. This includes all of the linebacking corps of Veatch, Hocutt and Percell Gaskins.

On the offensive side of the ball, the Cats are loaded with returning starters.



Everybody returns in the backfield, including Smith, May and fullback Rod Schiller.

The Cats' offensive line will break in three new starters, but the tackle positions will be filled by returners Brooks and Jim Hmielewski.

"We spent the entire summer working out and getting ready for the season," Hmielewski said. "Our new guys are just as talented as the guys we had last season. They just need to play."

The receiver position also returns two starters, as Kevin Lockett and Mitch Running are both back

K-State will again have to battle Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado and Oklahoma in consecutive weekends.

▶ K-STATE FOOTBALL

Freshmen attracted to winning program

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Keeping it in the family seems to be the motto for this season's freshmen football class.

Many of the recruits have deep roots with the K-State football program.

Among these players are Travis Ochs, the brother of defensive end Dirk Ochs, Todd Miller, son of offensive coordinator Del Miller, and Troy Hackney the great-grand nephew of K-State Hall of Famer Elmer Hackney.

Several of the freshmen said the tightness of the program is what attracted them to Manhattan.

"The team really seems to be like a family," Jeremy Martin, offensive tackle, said.

The sucess that K-State has recently built also turned heads toward the program and helped the freshmen choose K-State.

"Of course the program was close to me," Todd Miller, the Kansas 6A first team all-State quarterback last season, said.

"The program is up and rising, but there is a lot of opportunity here."

The Cat 9-2-1finish last season also helped bring in the group.

Coach Bill Snyder said the recruits have a lot of talent.

This is despite reports in recruiting annuals that said the freshmen class is the fifth-best class in the Big Eight Conference.

"We got what we needed in our freshmen class," Snyder said.

"The class is definitely a lot bigger in stature than our other classes have been.

"They are full of talent, and we've got speed where we needed it."

The talented group includes Ochs, Troy Hackney and Brian Jackson.

Ochs was a first-team 6A all-state linebacker in Kansas last season, and he was also selected to the all-Metro team in Kansas City.

Unlike his brother, who plays defensive end, Ochs is a linebacker.

Hackney and Jackson both earned first-team 5A all-state honors at Hays High School last year.

Marlon Charles, from Kansas City, Mo., comes to K-State listed as the No. 15 defensive back in the nation by Superprep magazine.

The publication also said offensive tackle Ryan Young is a man mountain who moves well for his size.

Derek King, a defensive back from Ft. Meade, Fla., was a candidate for Florida's Mr. Football award, and he was also named to the 2A all-state team.

Other recruits who snatched first team all-state awards are Mike Munson, an offensive guard from DeSoto, Texas, and David Conley, a defensive back from St. Louis, Mo.

Rounding off the roster is tight end Justin Swift, from Overland Park, and David McIntyre, from Ravenna, Ohio.

▶ PREDICTIONS

Huskers and Irish favored in Collegian preseason poll

When the Collegian sports staff sat down to select how the Big Eight Conference race will unfold, one question loomed over everyone's head.

Can anybody grab the title from the Big Red Machine?

Well, six out of seven voters answered no to that question and cast their No. 1 vote for Nebraska. The other No. 1 vote was cast for the Oklahoma Sooners.

Colorado was tabbed to finish in second place, and Oklahoma was picked third.

The race for the fourth-place slot was close, but K-State edged out Kansas by a few votes. Oklahoma State will finish sixth according to the poll, and Missouri will take seventh place.

Nationally, the Collegian predicts that Notre Dame will capture the national crown, after finishing second last season.

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz has one of the best rushing games in the country. If the Irish can make it through regular-season games with Florida State and Michigan, they have the inside track to the title.

Finishing second will be the Florida Gators. The Associated Press has tabbed the Gators as their No. 1 team, and the Gators have the talent to win it all. They have two quarterbacks who can lead them to the title, if they stay healthy.

Behind Florida, Nebraska will finish third and Florida State will take fourth. These two teams met last season for the national title, and they could meet again.

Miami will return to the top 10 this season as No. 5 team in the country. The Hurricanes have Florida State at home this season, and they never lose at home.

Alabama comes in No. 6 in our poll. Look for them to battle Florida in the Southeaster Conference title game again.

Tyrone Wheatley will carry Michigan to a Big Ten Conference title and to a No. 7 ranking, according to the poll.

Then, the Wildcats from Arizona will come in No. 8. The Cats are Sports Illustrated's No. 1 team, because they have the top defense in the country.

Last season, Wisconsin was the surprise team in the country. This season, the Badgers will be successful with an experienced offense, and they are picked to finish at No. 9 in our poll.

The No. 10 team will be Colorado. With one of the best offensive attacks in the country,the Buffaloes have enough ability.

Big Eight schools offer different ticket packages

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Possibly, because of the Copper Bowl victory, there has been an increase in ticket sales for the upcoming K-State football season.

"Public season ticket sales are at 12,400 so far, compared to 9,700 from last year," Carol Adolph, K-State athletic ticket manager, said.

Student season tickets have also increased in comparison to last season, Adolph said.

"Last year, our total was 5,500," Adolph said. "Through the first three days of enrollment, we sold 5,600 tickets."

Compared to Colorado, ticket sales at K-State may not seem too impressive.

"We reserve 14,000 seats for our students," Jolene Quigley, Colorado athletic ticket office manager, said. "We generally sell out of them.

"For public season tickets, we normally sell anywhere from 30,000 to 35,000."

Colorado charges $22 for student season tickets, compared to K-State's $42 charge.

However, the Buffaloes make up for this by charging $160 for public season tickets, as opposed to K-State's $120.

Oklahoma charges $40 for student season tickets and $120 for public season tickets. A comparison between K-State and Oklahoma may be more applicable.

Iowa State also offers a similar price format with student tickets at $36, and public tickets at $108.

Nebraska, which typically sells out the 76,000 seats in Memorial Stadium, charges $146 for public tickets and $73 for student tickets, respectively.

Many of the Big Eight teams feature combination tickets.

"We sell student season tickets that allow students to go to all home events, except basketball games, for $59," Dave Doggett, Oklahoma State senior ticket clerk, said.

"Sales are down a little bit, but that's typical after a 3-8 football season."

Missouri and Kansas also handle similar combination tickets. Missouri offers a student season pass to all home events for $132, while Kansas issues a student ticket to all football and basketball games. Also included in their package is admission to the Kansas Relays, all for $85.

K-State offers a combination package for football and basketball games. The package offered costs to students at $102. This saves $15, if you buy them in a package.

The universities have a marketing department to help promote ticket sales.

"We use the general bumper stickers, posters and ads," Jennifer Pratt, Missouri intern at sports marketing, said.

"We also go to parades and other events to pass out schedules."

Also, Missouri administers special deals for big groups.

"We offer group discount prices, which really helps sales," Pratt said.

"We also have big tents available for tailgate parties, which is a little more expensive," she said. "But it's very popular with our big groups."

Big Eight Team Previews

Five conference teams might play in a bowl game

COMPILED BY COLLEGIAN STAFF AND ASSOICATED PRESS

▶ MISSOURI

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Larry Smith believes he's just the man Missouri needs, a tough man for tough times.

It's been a decade since the Tigers last had a winning team. So the atmosphere is perfect for his no-nonsense, no-frills coaching style.

Smith's been cracking the whip almost since he arrived. He set the tone when he began fall practice with a grueling week of two-a-days at Wentworth Military Academy in tiny Lexington, Mo.

There, the boot camp-style days began at 6:15 a.m., and there was no let-up until lights-out at 10:30 p.m.

For the running backs, there was also togetherness with a football. After a rash of fumbles early in the week, Smith ordered the backs to carry a ball everywhere.

"We took it to the bathroom, to lunch and dinner, to bed," Michael Washington said.

Smith also had the names removed from the jerseys, and woe is the unlucky soul who arrives late to meetings.

"He's basically all business, and he's going to do what it takes to win," senior quarterback Jeff Handy said. "He's big on discipline. If you mess up, you will pay the price."

Smith said this approach is just what the team needs.

"To me, you don't get discipline overnight," Smith said. "It takes time. It's not that I'm trying to be a dictator, but you've got to have a schedule."

Certainly, Missouri should look different on the field.

Last year, the Tigers ran the ball only nine times more than they passed, a totally unacceptable ratio to Smith.

The new style will feature two backs, Joe Freeman and Washington. Handy will throw on the run and out of play action more, rather than strictly on a drop back basis.

Freeman led the team with 675 yards and is aiming to become only the fourth 1,000-yard rusher in school history.

On defense, Missouri has eight returning starters, led by linebackers Darryl Major and Travis McDonald, who will work in the same attack-style defense as last season.

"They should be our two leading tacklers," Smith said.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Slipping through

Colorado quarterback, Cordell Stewart dodges K-State linebacker Kirby Hocutt in the Buffaloes 16-16 tie with the Cats last season. Stewart led the Big Eight in total offense last season, as he finished with 2,299 yards passing and 524 yards rushing.

▶ COLORADO

BOULDER, Colo. — His team plays the current Rose Bowl champs, the past Rose Bowl champs and three other nationally-ranked opponents this year, but Colorado football coach Bill McCartney looks at the 1994 schedule and sees nothing but red.

Cornhusker Red.

McCartney can't seem to shake the nauseating feeling of losing to Nebraska at home last year after getting destroyed 52-7 in Lincoln two years ago.

"That hurt a lot," he said. "I would have expected us to rebound from that a year ago and beat them, but we couldn't get it done."

The desire to beat Nebraska is evident in the team auditorium below Folsom Field, where McCartney has put up two large posterboards. One has Colorado's 1994 schedule with each team written in white except for one opponent sticking out in red.

It's not Wisconsin or Oklahoma.

"I feel like we've got something to prove," all-American cornerback Chris Hudson said of the Nebraska game Oct. 29. "I feel like the morale will be up like it is every year. There is more at stake this year."

Hudson is the glue of an inexperienced secondary.

"Everybody's perceiving the secondary as a dropoff, but the secondary's up there," Hudson said.

That's the feeling in the trenches, as well. The Buffaloes return all five front linemen on offense and defense with linemen Shannon Clavelle (defensive tackle) and Tony Berti (offensive tackle) anchoring their respective lines.

Senior quarterback Kordell Stewart will guide the offense. He led the Big Eight in total offense last year with 2,299 yards passing, and 524 yards rushing.

"Day in and day out, all I see is a great athlete making plays," McCartney said.

Wide receiver Michael Westbrook should be one of Stewart's favorite targets.

For McCartney, no game means more than the Nebraska game. Not even the game in Ann Arbor, Mich., where he was an assistant for nine years.

"I'm looking forward to the Michigan game," he said. "But that game's not in red letters."

▶ IOWA STATE

AMES — Despite a disappointing 1993 season, Iowa State has a wealth of experience, and the prospects for an improved 1994 season look good.

The Cyclones open the season with 22 fifth-year seniors on the squad.

As for his team, Walden has two expectations for a program that went 3-8 last season: Be competitive and win more games than lost.

How?

"We must eliminate turnovers, improve our play-action passing and improve our defense," Walden said.

The 1993 Iowa State defense was ranked last or next to last in the Big Eight in the four major statistical categories — total defense, rushing, passing and scoring.

In the past, Iowa State used a four-man front, but they have made a switch this season. The Cyclones will sport a three-man defensive line this season, creating the need for a strong nose guard.

The nod will apparently go to senior and three-year starter, Troy Petersen, who has made 127 tackles the past two seasons.

On the other side of the ball, Walden expects his offense, particularly the backfield and the line, to be the strength of the senior-dominated team.

Todd Doxzon returns at the helm for the Cyclones, after filling in for the injured Bob Utter for three games last season.

"I am confident that once I've learned the offense, I can lead the team and not make as many turnovers," Doxzon said.

Behind Doxzon in the backfield is a group of runners Walden said is one of the best he's ever seen.

"The backs are potentially great football players," he said.

Included among the great is Calvin Branch, Artis Garris, Jim Knott, Rodney Guggenheim, Graston Norris and Geoff Turner, who was redshirted last year.

The offensive line also promises to be experienced.

Walden said the line is the overall strength of the team.

"They are one of the best that I've ever coached," Walden said. "They will definitely help."

Returning veterans include Tim Kohn, Jim Thompson, Doug Ragaller, Tony Booth, Mark Konopka and Brian Wilkinson.

With experienced veterans on both sides of the ball, Walden said he has tagged the 1994 season as one to watch.

"I have not seen a group of guys rally to itself and work harder than this bunch has," he said.

"Maybe, a little bit of it is that old thing of I'm just damn tired of having guys kick sand in my face."

▶ OKLAHOMA STATE

STILLWATER, Okla. — Pat Jones isn't sweating as Oklahoma State's football coach. Despite going 0-10-1, 4-6-1 and 3-8 the past three years, he enters his 11th season secure enough to have recently moved into a new house.

"I've always been treated fairly here," Jones said. "Always have been, am now."

The thing Jones isn't sure about is his team. The Cowboys have been picked by media who cover the league to repeat their last-place finish this season, although Jones believes they could be better than that.

At the same time, he qualifies almost every statement with the word if, as in if some players play up to par, and if the Cowboys stay free of injury.

"There's a lot of unknowns involved with this roster that I don't have the answers for," he said.

Start at quarterback. Oklahoma State has been searching for a dependable quarterback since Mike Gundy ended his career as a four-year starter in 1989.

Jones said he thought he had an answer in Gary Porter a year ago, but Porter wound up being kicked off the team by midseason because of off-the-field problems.

The Cowboys turned to true freshman Tone' Jones in the fourth game of the year, and Jones showed some good things, but got knocked out by a shoulder injury.

Jones is back as the starter this year, ready to assume the role as a consistent leader.

"He can be a good college quarterback," Pat Jones said. "Some days you can tell he's a sophomore."

There was that if word again. Jones is quick to use it when he talks about tailback David Thompson, who ran for 466 yards as a true freshman last year. Jones said he has a chance to rush for 1,000 yards if he stays healthy.

There may be no greater if factor than in the offensive line. Jones said the Cowboys are still one wave of guys short in the offensive line.

The challenge on defense will be to replace three outstanding players in defensive end Jason Gildon, safety Scott Harmon and linebacker Keith Burns.

Although the Cowboys only won three games a year ago, Jones said they were better than the previous season. He also knows the bottom line is the Cowboys did only win three games in a year when more was expected, and that improvement is expected again.

▶ NEBRASKA

After 21 years as the Nebraska football coach and 32 years on the Cornhusker staff, Tom Osborne has coached his share of coaching machines.

This year's operation could rank up there with some of the best scoring machines Osborne has coached.

The offensive line has four starters back along with an experienced quarterback in Tommie Frazier.

One way to judge the effectiveness of an offense, Osborne said, is the stability of the offensive line.

"One thing I always look at is the offensive line as to whether you have got a chance," he said. "And I think we have a chance."

Senior all-America candidates Zach Wiegert, Rob Zatechka and Brenden Stai anchor what Osborne classifies as one of the strongest lines in recent history.

Frazier, a Heisman candidate, leads the pack on offense. The junior quarterback from Bradenton, Fla., who has a 16-0-1 regular-season record in games started, said a repeat of last year's 11-0 run is possible.

"I feel that we can have the same type of year," Frazier said. "But it's going to take a total effort from the whole team."

Sophomore Lawrence Phillips, who ran for 533 yards and five touchdowns last season, heads into the year as the No. 1 I-back, but that could change. Sophomores Damon Benning, who started two games last year, and Clinton Childs will press Phillips for playing time.

Senior Abdul Muhammad, who led the Huskers in receptions with 25 last year, is the most experienced returning receiver.

While virtually every offensive position features returning talent, the place-kicking duties are somewhat of a question mark.

Husker baseball player Darin Erstad will back up senior Tom Sieler. Sieler has made 16 of 17 extra points in his career and handled kickoffs last season, but has never attempted a field goal.

The Huskers are just as tough on the defensive side of the ball, as they return 22 letter winners from last season.

On the defensive line, the Big Red are led by defensive tackle Terry Connealy. Connealy has earned three letters at Nebraska, but he is also expected to be an all-Big Eight caliber player this season.

Donta Jones and Ed Stewart are the Huskers' top returning linebackers.

Both have three years of experience with the Nebraska defense.

Nebraska's leader in the defensive backfield is Barron Miles.

Miles started all 12 games for the Huskers last season, and he is considered one of the Big Eight's most underrated players.

▶ KANSAS

To say that Kansas' outlook is optimistic would be an understatement.

The Jayhawks have 46 returning letter winner's from last season's 5-7 club.

"With the number and caliber of players we have returning," coach Glen Mason said. "We should make an impact."

Among the players returning is quarterback Asheiki Preston.

"I've always had confidence in my ability," Preston said. "Even when I wasn't the No. 1 quarterback."

The running back position will also be a strong position for the Jayhawks. June Henley leads the way after breaking the Big Eight Conference freshman rushing records with 1,127 yards last year.

At wide receiver, KU returns its top two reception leaders — Ashaundai Smith,who had 27 receptions, and Robert Reed, who had 22 catches.

On the offensive line, the Hawks return two first-team, all-Big Eight selections from a year ago in seniors John Jones and Hessley Hempstead. The other three line positions are question marks Mason said.

On defense, the tackle position looks to be the Hawks' weak position. Kansas has to replace both tackles from a year ago. Alani Pahulu and Darnell Britt will most likely replace them.

The race for the inside linebacker job will be between Ronnie Ward, a starter last year, and Tyler Quast.

Steve Harvey and Don Davis form an experienced outside-linebacker tandem, Mason said. Harvey managed 87 tackles, while Davis had 10 tackles for losses last year.

Kwamie Lassiter leads the pack in the defensive backfield. Tony Blevins, Dorian Brew and Gerald McBurrows will fill in the other remaining defensive back spots.

▶ OKLAHOMA

This fall, the big question around Norman, Okla., is can anybody replace Cale Gundy at quarterback for the Sooners?

Gundy led Oklahoma to a 9-3 record last season, while passing for 2,096 yards.

Well, trying to replace him will be Northeastern Oklahoma A&M Junior College transfer Garrick McGee.

McGee earned the job in spring practices, and he will have eight starters on offense to help him make the transition.

The Sooners' top returner on offense is running back James Allen. Allen, who rushed for 788 yards as a freshman, is being tabbed a preseason all-Big Eight pick by several publications.

The offensive line is stacked with four returning starters, and the receiving corps are also experienced.

Gibbs said the defense will be the strength of the team.

"Defensively, we should be better since there is strength and our numbers are better," Gibbs said. "Our line is bigger, quicker and stronger."

The defensive line Gibbs referred to is led by defensive ends Cedric Jones, who recorded 50 tackles in just eight games, and David Campbell, who had 74 tackles last year.

Even with the experienced defensive line, the linebackers are the key to the Sooners' defense, Gibbs said.

Mario Freeman, Tremayne Green, Brent DeQuasie, are all returning starters.

"The linebackers are the most solid group that I've ever coached," Gibbs said. "They are also the quickest that I've ever coached."

The Sooners' schedule includes road games against Syracuse and Texas A&M to start the season out. Then, they start Big Eight Conference play against Iowa State, and the match-up against Nebraska will take place on Nov. 26.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Running back J.J. Smith answers questions at the Big Eight Skywriters' press conference. Smith is considered to be one of the most versatile running backs in the Big Eight Conference. Last season, Smith rushed for more than 700 yards, and he had more than 200 yards receiving. Several preseason publications have him listed as the third-best running back in the conference.

Role model status enjoyed, but Smith likes playing more

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Football players are under the microscope both on and off of the field.

No one knows this better than running back J.J. Smith.

Smith said he knows that with all the cheers come responsibility and hard work.

"I just try to cross the bridges when I come to them," Smith said. "When you have to keep up with school and football, you can't get too far ahead of yourself."

Varsity athletes must live up to high expectations both on and off the field — too many expectations, Smith said.

"I think too much is expected of athletes, but on the other hand, we get a lot of benefits as well," he said.

ONE on ONE

Unlike Phoenix Suns' forward Charles Barkley, Smith said he does believe he has a responsibility as a role model to children.

He said athletes need to realize they do have an influence on kids.

"In a way, I do consider myself a role model because I remember when I was little kid, I used to love to meet the players and get their autographs," Smith said.

Being a role model isn't a burden, Smith said. It is something athletes should be aware of and even enjoy, he said.

"It's just a story that goes with life," Smith said. "I don't worry about my actions off the field because I know I was brought up right."

This summer, Smith took his role-model show on the road as a K-State ambassador.

He traveled to virtually every corner of the state appearing at numerous alumni functions telling of his experiences on the football field..

"I went north, south, east and west meeting people and talking about K-State," Smith said.

"It was a good experience."

Smith said most of his time was spent at alumni functions meeting people, shaking hands and telling people whatever they wanted to know about K-State.

In addition to being an ambassador, Smith said he enjoys studying psychology.

"When I was a business major, just going to class was a chore," Smith said. "Now, I actually enjoy going to class and learning. I really like to learn about psychology."

Although he enjoys his time learning about psychology and being a K-State ambassador, what really gets Smith excited is football.

The Wildcat running back said he loves everything about the game: the hype during the week, the fight songs and even the hits he has to take.

"It's just the thrill of the whole thing," Smith said. "You get out there making everybody happy. The crowd is yelling, and it just makes me feel good."

Smith is not the only person who gets excited when he plays football.

He has excited the fans from his first carry as a freshman when he scampered 72 yards untouched for a touchdown against Idaho State.

Last season, Smith was the only player in the Big Eight Conference to collect 700 yards rushing and 200 yards receiving while splitting time with Rod Schiller.

With all the success last season, Smith said, expectations are high, but he is going to keep everything in perspective.

"Expectations are always high," he said. "All the different publications try to pump up the season, but you just can't let all of the hype get to you."

> "I do consider myself a role model because I remember when I was a little kid, I used to love to meet the players and get their autographs."
> J.J. SMITH
> Running Back

Smith has been mentioned as one of the top 15 running backs in the nation by Lindy's Football Preview and the NFL Draft Report.

Smith is a candidate for the Doak Walker National Running Back Award for the second-consecutive year. The award is given annually to the nation's top running back.

Additionally Smith was the only running back in the Big Eight to gather more than 700 yards rushing and 200 yards receiving.

Smith said along with recognition, pressure has increased.

"All I can do is play hard," Smith said.

"I just have to ignore the pressure, get out on the field and do what I can do."

If the summer workout program is any indication, the rest of the Cats are responding to the pressure, Smith said.

"We had more people stay and work out than we have ever had before," Smith said.

"That should tell you right there that we are ready to play."

Smith said the team is focused on the upcoming season and is anxious to get the season, a season Smith said he has been dreaming about, underway.

"I guess my ultimate season would be going to the Orange Bowl," Smith said.

"Then I want to fly home with my ring, and visit with all the fans waiting at the airport for us when we get home."

Big 8 worthy of more respect than it gets

The Big Eight Conference is one of the best football leagues in the country, but people outside of the nation's heartland don't often realize this.

It often gets overlooked by everyone else in the country because people think the Big Ten and the Pacific 10 Conferences are better. That's wrong, and people would realize this if they took a look at the facts.

JEREMY CRABTREE

The Big Eight has two teams that can honestly say that they have a chance at winning the national title. Who other than Michigan, in the Big Ten, has a legitimate title claim? The answer is nobody. When was the last time that a Big-Ten team won the national title?

Looking at the Pac-10, UCLA has been the only team that has been consistently in the top 10 in the late '80s and '90s. Washington could be in that same category, too, as they rose to the top in 1991. However, they are now under probation, and they aren't able to compete for the title. Arizona has also come on lately.

It's been a while since the Big Eight has won a title, but Nebraska came within a few feet of winning last season.

Colorado won the title in 1990 and almost won it in 1989, and Oklahoma won the title back in 1985.

Another knock on the Big Eight is that the players aren't as talented as players from other leagues. Well, the Big Eight has at least two Heisman Trophy candidates in Tommie Frazier and Chad May.

The Big Eight also has many opportunities this season to place players on the all-America team. The talent pool is also much better from top to bottom in the Big Eight than in the other conferences.

Look at Northwestern in the Big Ten. Can you honestly say they are better than Iowa State? At least Iowa State has defeated two ranked teams in the past two seasons.

The Big Eight has the talent, the titles and fans to truly be one of the best leagues in the nation. It's too bad it isn't perceived that way.

Maybe when the league becomes the Big Twelve, it'll get the respect it deserves.

Since everyone else is making predictions; I thought that I would get in the act also.

■ Nebraska will beat Colorado and Oklahoma but will stumble in to those pesky Cats in Manhattan.

■ K-State will beat KU and Nebraska, but will lose to Oklahoma and Colorado on the road.

■ Chad May will throw for 2,000 yards again, and he will be selected in the second round of the NFL Draft.

■ June Henley will rush for more than 1,000 yards and make the all-Big Eight team. He accomplishes this despite several run-ins with the law throughout the season.

■ Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs will find replacing Cale Gundy to be harder than he first thought.

■ Colorado's Chris Hudson will finally return Andre Coleman's face mask from last season's game.

■ Iowa State coach Jim Walden will finally get the ax in Ames.

■ Oklahoma State will upset someone big this season. They almost beat Nebraska last season. Hey, it could happen.

■ Missouri's Darryl Major will get a new sack routine. That salute sack dance is getting old.

Cats to face underrated Ragin' Cajuns

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

A tougher test than fans may realize awaits K-State.

The Wildcats open the 1994 campaign against the Southwestern Louisiana Ragin' Cajuns at 6:30 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"I see a lot of things I don't like," Snyder said.

"It really is a very fine football team."

SW Louisiana recorded a 8-3 overall mark last year and 5-1 in the conference.

The Cajun football story sounds a bit like the story of the Cats. In 1992 the SW Louisiana posted a 2-9 mark.

The 10-team Big West includes future K-State opponent Nevada-Las Vegas, whom the Cats will face Nov. 26.

Unlike most teams in the conference, SW Louisiana specializes in pressure defense, Snyder said.

"They are going to be an aggressive football team on defense," Snyder said.

The Cajun defense ranked third in the nation last year in stopping the rush, allowing a mere 88.6 yards per game.

Additionally the Cajuns forced 39 fumbles, picked off 22 passes and recorded 116 tackles for 528 yards lost.

"They will blitz on about one-third of the snaps," Snyder said. "Maybe that's good, because we want to get these guys field tested."

One player to watch is senior all-America safety Orlanda Thomas.

Thomas led the nation in interceptions last season with nine.

Another factor Snyder addressed was the difficulties of preparing for the first game of the season.

"You can watch film from last season, but the faces change from season to season," Snyder said.

"I don't have a clue what they are doing in practice. We don't have spies and I know they don't, either."

Snyder said he has to prepare the offense, defense and special teams for every possible offensive and defensive situation as well as tricks.

"After five games or so, you can look at what other teams are doing in games," Snyder said.

Most notably linebacker Mike Ekeler appeared on the depth chart Monday ahead of last season's starter Percell Gaskins.

"No matter what happens with the situation, I'll be pumped up and ready to go," Ekeler said. "I only get excited 11 times a year, and this is one of them."

The 6:30 p.m. has also added to the concern over the Cajuns.

However, offensive guard Ross Greenwood said the weather will be cooler and he welcomes the change.

Snyder said practices have also intensified in the week leading up to the game and the players are ready to play someone else besides each other.

"I'm just ready to get out on the field and do what I can do," running back J.J. Smith said.

LuckyBrew Grille doorman Charles Firestone's collection of fake IDs grows every weekend as minors attempt to get in the bar. Firestone is a junior in business administration.

MIPs with fake IDs pay through the nose

Busted!

Four minors were caught while enjoying a couple of cold ones at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon on Sunday, Aug. 21.

The arresting officer observed them at a table, thought they looked underage, asked to see identification and then wrote each a minor-in-possession ticket, Lt. Adam Angst, watch commander at the Riley County Police Department, said.

The officer has the right to ask to see ID and write tickets, and if a minor refuses to sign the MIP ticket, they will then be arrested and taken to the police station, Angst said.

"One lousy beer can cost a minor $302.50," Bill Kennedy, Riley County attorney, said. "Two hundred dollars in county cost and $102.50 in court cost."

"If they get caught, it's a lot of money. Might as well light it on fire," Kennedy said.

Bartenders and waitresses are supposed to check identification of individuals ordering alcoholic beverages, Rusty Wilson, owner of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, said.

"The main problem with MIPs is that a lot of people use a fake ID, and we are not ID experts," Wilson said.

Coty Gilman, general manager of Fast Eddy's, said bars have a book of what to look for in checking an ID.

Gilman said there was a place in Westport, located in Kansas City, Mo., that does fake IDs.

"Most fake IDs comes from that damn place in Westport," he said.

Students who present fake IDs and do not identify themselves are taken to jail and fined $50-$200, Kennedy said.

"Once caught with a fake ID, I suggest they cooperate," Kennedy said. "If they don't, there is another crime committed called resisting arrest with fines from $50 to $100, depending."

Students are not the only ones being caught with fake IDs, Gilman said.

Military personnel from Fort Riley also greatly contribute to fake-ID collections.

"Military are worse than students," she said.

Minors are not the only ones who must pay fines, Kennedy said. Bars also suffer penalties and fines for MIPs.

For their first MIP, bars are fined $500, Gilman said. Second and third offenses each increase the fine by $100. The fourth MIP is a $1,000 fine and a day closed. Each additional MIP after the fourth includes a $1,000 fine and additional day closed, Gilman said.

If the bar catches a minor in possession and contacts the police, the bar will not be fined, but if the Alcoholic Beverage Control or RCPD discovers a minor in possession, the bar will be fined, Gilman said.

The ABC picks what days the bars will be closed, usually beginning on a Friday, Gilman said.

"No business can afford to be closed," Gilman said.

Bob Leetch, owner of Lucky BrewGrille, said MIPs are not a huge problem for him or the bar.

"We have had only two MIPs since we opened just over a year and two months ago," Leetch said.

"We run a tough door, and if you don't, it just leads to problems," Leetch said.

"We card on weekends," Hidi Hodges, bartender at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar, said. "Minors are marked with an X and the rest are stamped with 21."

Tim Giles, bartender at Auntie Mae's Parlor, said because they depend on regulars, there is not always a person at the door.

Lambert: Patrol halted, officer overreacted

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

The KSU Police Department's bike patrol has been suspended until Tuesday's confrontation between a student and a campus police officer can be reviewed.

John Lambert, director of public safety, announced Wednesday the suspension of the bike patrol because he said Officer Bob Fenton overreacted when he detained B.C. Camp II for riding his bicycle on the sidewalk.

Camp, junior in journalism and mass communications, was improperly handcuffed, detained at the police department and ticketed for disobeying a police officer, obstructing the legal process and riding on the sidewalk.

The bike patrol only started regular daily patrols this week, Capt. Robert Mellgren, acting director of police, said.

Mellgren said the two bike patrolmen, Fenton and Officer Dave Springer, will be reassigned to other duties until he and Lambert review the incident.

Campus bicycle regulations will continue to be enforced, Mellgren said.

"The only thing that's changed is the manner of enforcement by bicycles," he said. "The bicycles will be parked until the incident is reviewed thoroughly."

Lambert said the bike patrol itself will also come under investigation.

"The bike patrol is new, and I think we may need more experience with it," Lambert said.

Mellgren said it was unfortunate the patrol, which began positively, ended abruptly.

"Hopefully, after we have a chance to evaluate what happened this time, we can clear up any improprieties and get it back in service," Mellgren said.

The campus police will probably reinstate foot patrols to continue regulating bicycle traffic, he said.

Mellgren and Lambert both said any prior complaints about the bike patrols had been from students protesting $25 tickets for riding on sidewalks.

However, Mellgren said the most complaints had come from bicyclists about pedestrians walking on bike paths. Mellgren said Tuesday's incident was an isolated one.

"I hate to weigh all the positives and negatives against this particular incident," he said. "Until it's been reviewed, I don't want to say yea or nay against bicycle patrols."

Residents want answers, security in hasty meeting

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

At a rushed meeting Wednesday night, Putnam Hall residents voiced concerns over the Department of Housing and Dining Service's plans for their hall.

In question were safety policies affecting residents of the Strong Complex, which consists of Boyd, Van Zile and Putnam halls.

Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services, informed the residents of new lock-down hours starting at 10 p.m., instead of the usual midnight.

Residents were informed about the 10 p.m. lock-down when they arrived to check into the residence halls at the first of the semester.

Hasan also said there will be no receptionist on duty from the hours of noon to 3 p.m., as there were in the past.

Many residents expressed concerns that noon to 3 p.m. were precisely the hours students would most need a receptionist to check equipment out.

However, Housing and Dining

Time management problem in off-campus living

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

This is the third in a four-part series on housing at K-State. The final part will run in Friday's Collegian.

Living off campus is the first taste of the real world for most students. That taste can be sweet or bitter, depending on how they balance college life and real-life responsibility.

Achieving that balance isn't easy. Jennifer Brewster, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said there are many adjustments she has had to make her first year off campus.

The biggest problem Brewster said she has encountered is time management.

"You have to learn how to budget your time," she said, "You have to go to school, clean your place and cook when you can."

Brewster said she has dealt with that problem by designating times for her daily activities.

"I use mornings for my errands and go to class in the afternoon," she said.

Another aspect of surviving off-campus life is sharing the apartment with roommates. Brewster said she and her two roommates were friends last year and that has made surviving off-campus life easier. "We share the same major and that's made it easier," she said. "That has helped us understand each other better."

She said they've set up a system to ensure the apartment is kept up. She said the three talked about many issues last year and over the summer.

Cooking was one issue Brewster and her roommates had to deal with. She said they set up a schedule.

"We set it up so no one does everything," she said. She explained that if one cooks, another does the dishes. "That wasn't a real problem," Brewster said.

Another issue they had to face was bill payments.

"We have a dry-erase board with each bill on it and when it's due. The person who is supposed to pay the bill put it into an envelope and puts it with the others," she said.

Brewster said the key to surviving life in an apartment with roommates is communication.

"If you don't talk, you might wind up hating each other," she said. "If you have a problem, sit down and talk."

She said having roommates with similar ideals is important, also.

"You should have the same ideals and goals. That has helped us avoid problems so far," Brewster said.

Living off campus can cause a person to become detached from the University. One way to avoid this is to become involved in University activities. Brewster said that's the main way she has kept in touch.

"I'm still part of the Pre-Vet Club and Block and Bridle. I still know what's going on," she said.

Brewster said her one year in the residence halls helped her avoid this problem. "I think everyone should live in the dorms at least their first year. It really helps you get to know other people," she said.

Safety is a real concern when living off campus. Brewster said off-campus life is not as safe as residence-hall life, but there are things she and her roommates do to ensure their safety.

"One thing we do is we don't go alone to class," she said.

▶ SOLDIERS SENT TO FIGHT FIRES CONTINUE TO WORK AROUND THE CLOCK

The 600 1st Infantry Division soldiers deployed this week to help fight wildfires in Idaho are still working hard on the job. Captain Jim Gray, spokesman for the task force, said the fight is going well.

"We've got soldiers working around the clock," he said. "They are strengthening the fire line and putting out hot spots that jump the line."

Gray said that despite the physically demanding conditions and the steep, rugged terrain, the soldiers remain well motivated.

"Soldiers make good firefighters because they are already fit and have their own discipline and leadership," he said.

Gray said safety has been of utmost concern during the fight.

"To this date, we have had no injuries," he said.

Gray said the fires have consumed approximately 85,000 acres in the Boise National Forest area, north of Idaho City.

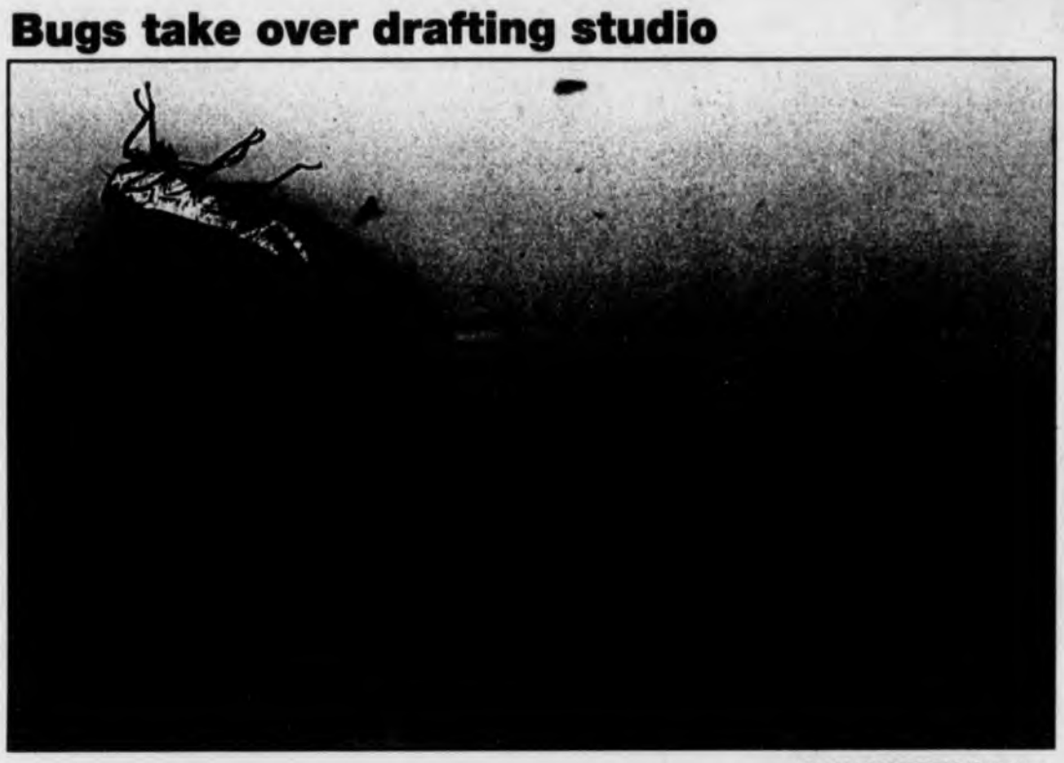
▶ STATION SWAPPING KEEPS POPULAR FOX PROGRAMMING IN MANHATTAN

There is no need for Simpson lovers and Star Trek fans to panic. A swapping of stations occurring on Sept. 12 will bring Manhattan viewers prime time Fox programming.

Due to KSHB, Channel 2, changing to NBC programming on Sept. 12, TCI of Manhattan was scrambling to bring Fox programming to viewers, said Ron Frazier, manager of TCI in Manhattan. The company wanted to ensure viewers that Fox programming would be available on Sept. 12.

"We got everything taken care of a lot sooner than we thought we would," Frazier said.

TCI of Manhattan will make a program swap between KSHB and WDAF. Due to KSHB switching to NBC programming and WDAF switching to Fox programming, both on Sept. 12, Frazier said, there will be no interruption of programming. He said the process will simply be to delete one and bring in the other.



Pat Carney, student senator, said that because Fox programming is so popular in college towns, the topic was brought up in the student activities and social services committee.

"We were looking into what KU had done to force a Fox station into that area," Carney said.

However, since a Fox station is being pulled in, there are no plans to bring forward such a motion, Carney said.

Golden show has bronze protection

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

"East to West," the current offering of the Union Art Gallery, combines an intelligent repertoire of contemporary sculpture in what is, by far, one of the best shows this fall.

Michael Mastranardi, the show's curator, has blended artists' works that resound in common themes of survival and human reason.

Larimer Richard's striking, frightening armaments constructed out of cast bronze condoms are a harsh reality.

Richards has taken the bronze breastplates and helmets of ancient times and re-examined them with the cruel knowledge of AIDS. This armor, that protected ancients from the fretful sword, is reconceived as a protection device for the modern man.

With the onslaught of AIDS, condoms are society's protection device. There is no solution, for now, to the AIDS virus, and Richards has created the breastplate, the armor, that will be used in man's quest for survival.

Artist Judy Haberl, who gave a brief explanation of her work at Wednesday's opening, investigates the replicated/re-contextualized domestic object in her series of sculptures called "La Belle Epoque/The Beautiful Age," 1990-93.

Haberl, growing up in the hotel/restaurant business, is very much at home with domestic objects. She craftily mixes dishes, shells, Jell-O molds, and objects d'art into hybrid objects without function. She then casts them in a hydrostone (hard plaster), successfully making each object a unit.

Some of the objects take on very provocative appearances.

Haberl's "Bags," 1994, are hydrostoned purses. Haberl explains herself as a quasi-anthropologist examining the aged-looking purses as if pursuing a knowledge of an ancient culture. What is a purse? How does the purse function in society?

Marilyn Pappas re-articulates architectural purity with her clothing sculptures, "Six Caryatids," 1993. Their crude appearance mirrors the crumbling stone surface of the many caryatids that adorn the ancient building sites of the Romans, Greeks and the Egyptians.

These statuesque figures of clothing represent a lasting human power, and yet they all reflect an erosion of the human strength. Pappas questions the human psyche and why we build what we do. These caryatids are a constant reminder of the humans' eagerness for existence.

Through poetry and images, Young Kyu Kim explains, what are obviously, very personal thoughts about her grandmother and the oppression of women.

'New at Strecker' good sculptures, bad paintings

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

There seems to be a plethora of new art shows during the past few weeks. A definite must see is "New at Strecker," an art show featuring Julie Green and Michael Mastranardi, which has just opened at the Strecker Gallery.

The reasons for going are Michael Mastranardi's spiritually mysterious vessels.

Mastranardi, an assistant professor of sculpture and metalsmithing at K-State, creates large, metal vessels and objects he uses for meditative rituals.

They are displayed together on a large platform in the back Gallery. At home, Mastranardi said the vessels are simply blended into the environment. He said they are used during ritual, but for everyday life, they play no key importance.

"I call them a family. They are related by the material, the process and the design elements," Mastranardi said.

There is something very Greek about the vessels, and yet the symbols used on them are very much Byzantine. .

"These objects are elusive of historical and cultural categorization," Mastranardi said.

Mastranardi said many of the symbols are pagan. The pagans were very spiritual people that were close to the earth, he said.

The work, "Dark Scepter," can best summarize Mastranardi's style. He has constructed a long, phallic-like vessel, with two separate symbols on one end with the opposite end curving ambiguously.

Although Mastranardi loves symmetry, he also throws in some very eccentric, off-balance elements, such as "Dark Scepter."

Julie Green, a Lawrence artist, has displayed her paintings in the front two galleries.

Green's paintings are, to say the least, unaccomplished. A narrow color scheme and Turner-esque viewpoints (a misty quality) leave much to be desired in each painting. Green draws from her personal experiences and somehow tries to make them relevant.

Most of her paintings feed off the emotional, child-like sensitivities in the viewer. The opening show crowd's favorite painting, by far, was "Dead Dog Shrine." The work depicts a dead dog lying on the ground with flowers and other assortments around it.

K-State Police needs to suspend officer

K-State Police are blaming bicycles for improper actions rather than the officer.

K-State Police has made a token gesture to decide if one of its officers acted incorrectly.

Tuesday, a bike-patrol officer detained a student for riding his bike on the sidewalks. The officer determined the student was disobeying him and obstructing justice. He handcuffed the student and took him to the KSU Police Department.

Campus police said the officer overreacted. The bike patrol has been suspended, but the officer is still on duty.

By suspending the bike patrol, it has put the blame on the bicycles.

Capt. Robert Mellgren said the only thing that changed was the use of bicycles to enforce the law.

The bicycles did not pull the student over or put the handcuffs on the student or humiliate him in front of the student body.

It was the officer who did these things.

The campus police needs to review its policy and, more importantly, its officer — not their bicycles.

You can take the officers off the bikes but you can't take the jerk out of the officers, at least not by shuffling them around.

The bike patrol is a good idea. It makes the officers very visible and mobile. It brings officers closer to the subjects they are serving.

But if the bike patrol officers don't know how to deal with the subjects, they are no good.

TOLES

Secret of manhood: Lots of power tools

Frequently, I am asked by wild, obsessed females (my mother, my three sisters and my wife) why I do certain things or think a certain way. And my standard, gutless answer is that much of what I think and do is completely out of my control: I am, of course, male.

One of the distinguishing characteristics between men and women, besides the ludicrous fixation women have (and I mean that only in the nicest way) that ALL toilet seats within a 500-mile radius of their domicile be DOWN, is the natural, biological fascination men have for tools.

BRAD SEABOURN

(My wife says that actually there is probably an underlying, disgustingly immature, sexual basis for this which I won't go into here because this is a family column.)

However, just to drive my point home, let me offer the well-known fact that one of the oldest archeological artifacts ever discovered is a stone TOOL, found alongside an ancient papyrus, which after rigorous laboratory tests turned out to be one of the earliest-known copies of the Sears catalog. Obviously, primitive cavemen (as opposed to technologically advanced cavemen), with their primitive little cavemen brains, recognized the advantages of ordering by mail as well as cash back on one's Discover card.

AND, to drive my point even further into the realm of unquestioned scientific fact, let me just say "Nyah nyah nyah." (That was specifically for my wife and her "sexual basis" comment.)

Well, it wasn't until Benjamin Franklin first discovered electricity and how it could eventually be used to make battery-powered, remote-controlled, make-believe, nuclear trigger devices for children that we (men) finally created the definitive male artifact: the power tool.

Why, just saying it ... "POWER TOOL" ....I can feel little bursts of testosterone running up and down my ... body.

So it should come as no surprise that scientists have actually discovered a biological basis for the male attraction to power tools, particularly the gas-powered type.

Let me refer you to the April issue of a highly respected scientific journal, Things Men Do, in which appeared an article titled "Evidence for the Biological Basis of the Male Attraction to Belching, Breaking Wind, and Power Tools," by E. C. Farthing.

To quote Dr. Farthing: "Sight, sound, and smell — the most important being smell — provide the stimulus for these unique and characteristically male activities, not to mention copious amounts of beer and baked beans."

In an attempt to verify Dr. Farthing's findings, I decided to do my own experiment and cut down a few trees in my yard.

SCIENTIFIC FACT: Any male will of course immediately recognize that the required power tool to do this job is a chain saw.

With my wife standing by as the so-called laboratory control rat, I started the experiment by firing up my chain saw and diving headlong into the trees, at the same time making a quick mental note that not another male was in sight.

RESULTS: Within seconds, my wife was screaming hysterically and running for cover. BUT, more importantly, within exactly 12.6 nanoseconds ("nano" which is Latin for "tiny") six smiling males were crowded around my gas-powered power tool.Now, I will readily admit I DID begin to drool and make threatening gestures at my wife with the chain saw, but that still does not explain this: WHY DID THE MEN SHOW UP?

Again, at this critical juncture, let me quote Dr. Farthing: "The fumes or gaseous products from these uniquely male activities (namely belching, breaking wind and power tools) act like chemical attractants or pheromones for the normal human male. They cannot help but be attracted to these things. It is in their nature."

Just to be absolutely sure of my results, I devised another experiment in which I tore out all the concrete in my driveway using nothing but a sledgehammer and enormous amounts of sweat. (I know this sounds a little extreme, but hey, THIS IS SCIENCE.)

As you can imagine, it took a long time. Just to put it into perspective: it took me roughly the same amount of time it takes a densely-populated highway repair crew to build 5 feet of freeway. (Which coincidentally, is EXACTLY the current age of the universe.)

RESULTS: Not one male in the neighborhood so much as peeked his balding head out of a door or window.

In fact, my wife observed several males who accidentally happened to be walking down the street near my experiment (probably on their way to the grocery store to buy more beer and baked beans) actually running away in terror.

From this, I concluded that "work sweat" (sweat produced from hard work) as opposed to "fun sweat" (sweat produced from dancing, drinking and chasing women) contains toxic chemicals that will actually REPEL and even KILL males for hundreds of light years in all directions.

So, ladies, the next time you ponder one of the great mysteries of life, "Why Men Do What They Do," just remember: the answer can be found in their, uh ... power tools.

Why ask why? Put beer in Union

Kansas is perhaps one of the most fickle states when it comes to alcohol.

From county to county, laws and regulations regarding the sale of alcoholic beverages change; in one town, you may only consume liquor publicly in a private club, other towns only allow weakened beer to be consumed publicly, and other towns respect adults enough to not interfere with what they consume.

The temperance movement in Kansas helped shape this state's early history.

When the 21st Amendment repealed federal prohibition, Kansas started to come to grips with alcohol. But there's a long, long way to go before Kansas rises above the level of a puritanical anachronism where alcohol is concerned.

It's no surprise that the K-State Union is also a century behind when it comes to alcohol. Since the 70s, there have been attempts to bring alcohol sales to the Union with no success yet. It seems the Union Governing Board has decided its narrow idea of morality is good enough to force upon everyone else.

Shocking as it may seem to some, the majority of Americans drink alcohol occasionally. On top of that, almost all of them do it responsibly. While drunken-driving fatalities and alcohol-related domestic abuse tales top the local news, there are never stories about the thousands who enjoy a beer after work, have a glass of wine with dinner, or sip a cocktail at a social gathering while harming no one, not even themselves.

Conservative moralists argue quite correctly that most guns don't kill or hurt anyone, yet they don't admit the same is true for drinkers. It is much easier to force their rigid morals on everyone else than to face reality and live and let live.

Most U.S. colleges have profitable alcohol-serving establishments on campus that are fun and safe places for students of legal drinking age to socialize. K-State already has fine recreation areas, chapels and cafeterias, but a bar seems out of the question to the UGB.

It's foolish to think the UGB isn't trying to be in loco parentis long past the point of insult. It's foolish to ignore the fact that drinking responsibly is best-learned in an environment that has as few drinking taboos as possible to rebel against.

Europeans, many of whom drink moderately at most meals, live freer of these taboos and don't suffer the kind of alcohol-related problems Americans do. On the other hand, American communities that try the hardest to sweep drinking under the rug suffer high rates of alcoholism. The same goes for narcotics, pornography and promiscuity.

This phenomenon happens in the rest of Kansas; why wouldn't it be true at K-State? Perhaps that could help explain why K-State is arguably the most notorious Big Eight party school.

All the while, the do-gooders who support the UGB's discrimination against drinking adults and want to save drinkers from themselves would rather pretend everyone at K-State believes the Bible says not to drink at all and abide by this rule. (A night in Aggieville dispels this myth.)

If only K-State students could be so lucky as to go in the Union and order something like what Jesus drank at the last supper!

One justification given for the UGB policy is concern for the Union's reputation with student's parents although about 25 percent of the University's population is comprised of non-traditional students who don't rely on the pockets of mommy and daddy.

Those students who would make K-State a dry school would benefit everyone involved by attending one of the many fine tea-totalling protestant schools where almost no one drinks. Otherwise, the rest of the student body should finally be allowed to drink responsibly in the Union.

The UGB's alcohol policy is a pathetic, long-outdated and ridiculous attempt to force the unrealistic values of an elitist, patronizing few on all K-Staters in order to keep these moralists from facing the realities of K-State in 1994.

It's long past time for the UGB to repeal prohibition.

Photographer should've helped

Dear Editor,

We are writing to object to the completely unprofessional behavior exhibited by the Collegian photographer at the scene of the Tuttle Creek rappelling accident on Tuesday.

In contrast to a more compassionate reporter who stood unobtrusively quite a distance from the scene, the Collegian photographer who arrived before any medical personnel, hovered around snapping unnecessary pictures mere feet from the victim while never once offering to help in any manner whatsoever..

We find the behavior inappropriate for a member of the media and entirely unacceptable for any decent human being in general.

We sincerely hope that in the future, the Collegian will refrain from indulging in such irresponsible and sensationalistic behavior at the expense of a person in need.

Competition ain't tough in Big Eight

Dear Editor,

Tell Jeremy Crabtree to get serious.

Perhaps for a Kansan, "everyone else in the country" is limited to the Midwest — hence his provincial comparison of the Big Eight only to the Big Ten and the PAC 10 — but remind him there's Southeastern Conference football too.

Florida State University had a chance to join the SEC, but opted for the patsy Atlantic Coast Conference, where the competition isn't too stiff.

Texas and Texas A&M had a chance to join the SEC, but opted for the patsy Big Eight, where the competition isn't too stiff.

The Big Eight worthy of more credit than it gets? You should thank Zeus, Jeremy, that most voters in the AP and the coaches' polls are from the Midwest, or the Big Eight would get a heck of a lot less respect. Don't let that 52-19 win over Whatizzit U. last December go to your head, Jeremy — Valdosta (Ga.) High, Robert E. Lee (Montgomery, Ala.) High, or Oak Ridge (Tenn.) High could probably beat Why-oming.

Bicycle patrol suspended until review

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the article in Wednesday's Collegian regarding the temporary detainment of a student by one of our University police officers and the related editorial also appearing in Wednesday's paper.

Yesterday afternoon, I met with persons involved in the incident to begin a review of the facts.

Obviously, the situation escalated well beyond reasonable expectations and the officer overreacted.

Captain Mellgren and I are conducting a thorough review of the manner in which the incident was handled and will take appropriate steps to prevent recurrence when that review has been completed.

I have asked Captain Mellgren to suspend the bicycle patrol until the review has been completed.

But the KSU Police Department will continue enforcing campus safety regulations (including the one prohibiting riding on campus walkways) and conduct law enforcement activities as they have in the past.

If KSU Police officers are to successfully carry out their responsibilities, it is essential for them to avoid becoming unnecessarily adversarial as they interact with various members of the campus community. I will make every effort to ensure that happens.

Residents claim communication problems can't afford the current number of receptionists, Hasan said.

Hasan said many other features, such as a Validine system to run 24 hours a day would be installed at a later date.

The complaint from most residents was the lack of communication on the part of Housing and Dining, Hall Governing Board, and the Putnam Hall staff in general.

"The main problem is the dictation of policies without any input from the residents and also without a knowledge on the part of the residents," Lisa Kay Blume, sophomore in psychology and women's studies, said.

"I found out, personally, less than a week ago," Blume said.

Blume said she found out because she knows a staff member.

Jennifer McGee, senior in elementary education and staff assistant for the third floor of Putnam Hall, said there were mistakes in communication.

"I think the residents needed to and had the right to voice their opinion," McGee said.

Most residents were not aware of the ongoing proposals for security measures in Putnam Hall. HGB, though having been informed by Hasan as early as January 1994, failed to release the information to every resident.

Andrew Fink, Strong Complex director, said his staff had discussions about security measures.

There were rumors floating around Putnam concerning the security measures, but nothing was every made completely evident to all the residents, Blume said.

On January 27, 1994, Diana Robertson, Strong Complex area coordinator, said she was interested in forming a committee of students within the complex to address lock-down measures.

According to Putnam residents and HGB staff, that committee never materialized.

Hasan said Housing and Dining Services did not have the resources to ask the residents to comment on the plans for the new security measures.

After 45 minutes of discussion, the anxious crowd was eager to reach a resolution.

Residents asked why they were not asked for input, especially since they are paying customers of Housing and Dining Services.

One resident thought the Kansas State University Association of Resident Halls should address these concerns and make available information they receive from Housing and Dining Services. Currently, ARH isn't involved in debate.

A majority of the residents at the meeting said they felt further security measures were necessary.

One female resident explained one incident when she encountered three unidentified, obvious-non-resident males walking through her hallway trying every door to see who was home.

However, she said she was with her boyfriend, and the three males left the premises.

It is instances like this that have led Housing and Dining Services to enforce security measures.

Hasan said Housing and Dining Services has a legal responsibility to provide safe housing.

Many colleges and universities across the nation have for many years required a 24-hour lock-down that necessitates residents to use their ID for entrance.

For instance, University of California at Los Angeles, requires the ID entrance system and all guests are required to leave an ID at the desk and sign in and sign out. This system has been in use for more than a decade.

Hasan's security plans for Putnam Hall include this system.

Implementing an access control shell that would allow only residents and guests of residents into Putnam is the main priority of Housing and Dining Services, Hasan said.

Balance between college, home difficult off campus

She said her landlord takes as many safety precautions as he can for the apartment complex.

"It's a small complex, but he has done as much as he could," Brewster said.

Donald O'Connor, landlord of Brewster's complex, said he also ensures safety in his apartments by having rules for keeping the apartments in shape and having fire regulations.

"No grills are allowed on balconies and fire alarms are checked regularly," he said.

He said there are also rules for the upkeep of the apartments.

"Tenants have to shampoo the carpet before they leave, they have a list of things to keep clean and they have to keep the snow shoveled off the sidewalks in the winter," O'Connor said.

Brewster said O'Connor let her and her roommates put a chain on their door as an extra precaution. All of these things help people survive off-campus life safely.

If a problem arises with the apartment itself, O'Connor said a tenant should call the landlord.

BOOK ARTS WORKSHOPS

A series of four, day long, workshops where you will explore book binding techniques, become familiar with the materials of the art, and develop a strong foundation for the continued exploration of the medium. You will leave the workshops with skeleton books, examples of bindings that include instructions, for all the bindings we explore.

Topics include: Basic book binding, Asian book binding, and Non-Adhesive book binding.

The workshops are open to everyone interested. The fee to cover all materials is 15 dollars for students and 20 dollars for non-students.

The dates of the four workshops are: 24 September and 1,15 and 22 October.

Registration will be open from 1 to 15 September.

Contact Karen Schrader at the KSU Art Department, 532-6605, third floor of Willard Hall, room 322.

The workshops will be taught by book artist, Lea Cyr.

CLOUD COUNTY CENTER COMMITS

CONCORDIA — Johnnie Williams, a 6-foot-9 center at Cloud County Community College, has made an oral commitment to play at Kansas State University, community college spokesman said Wednesday.

Williams averaged 9.6 points and 6.8 rebounds in 31 games as Cloud County finished the season with a 19-13 record.

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI

The K-State women's rugby team will kick off its season Sept. 17 against Northeast Missouri State. Coach/player Ladonna Grenz is openly optimistic about the season after finishing 4-7 a year ago.

"Last year, 80 percent of our team were first-year rookies," Grenz said. "This year, we have more experienced players coming back as well as some very athletic recruits.

"I'm damn sure we'll have a winning season this year," she said.

The team's preparation makes that very likely.

While other teams in the area, such as Kansas, haven't even begun to practice yet, K-State's lady ruggers officially began practicing two weeks ago.

Grenz said the extra practice will pay dividends when it comes to game time.

"Being physically fit is a major advantage in rugby," Grenz said.

"So I think the extra practice time, plus the time put in by many of the players this summer, gives us a definite advantage going into this year," she said.

The team will play in tournaments in such places as Wichita, Kansas City, Lawrence and even Little Rock, Ark.

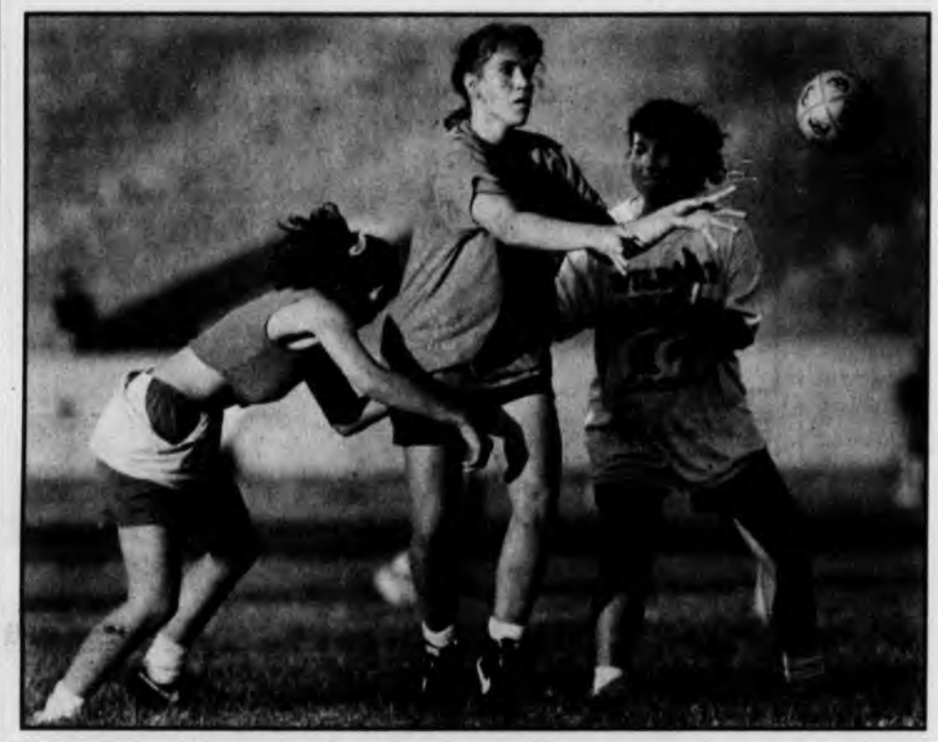
Team captain Becky Burton said while traveling to such places is a great experience, there are plenty of expenses which can be difficult to deal with.

"The major things are tournament fees and travel expenses," Burton said.

"And when we're at home, we have to reimburse referees for their travel as well as feeding the opposing team. It all adds up," she said.

To offset those costs, Burton said that team members participate in various fundraisers, such as car washes, ushering at football games, and even cleaning Bramlage Coliseum.

Sponsors are being sought as well.



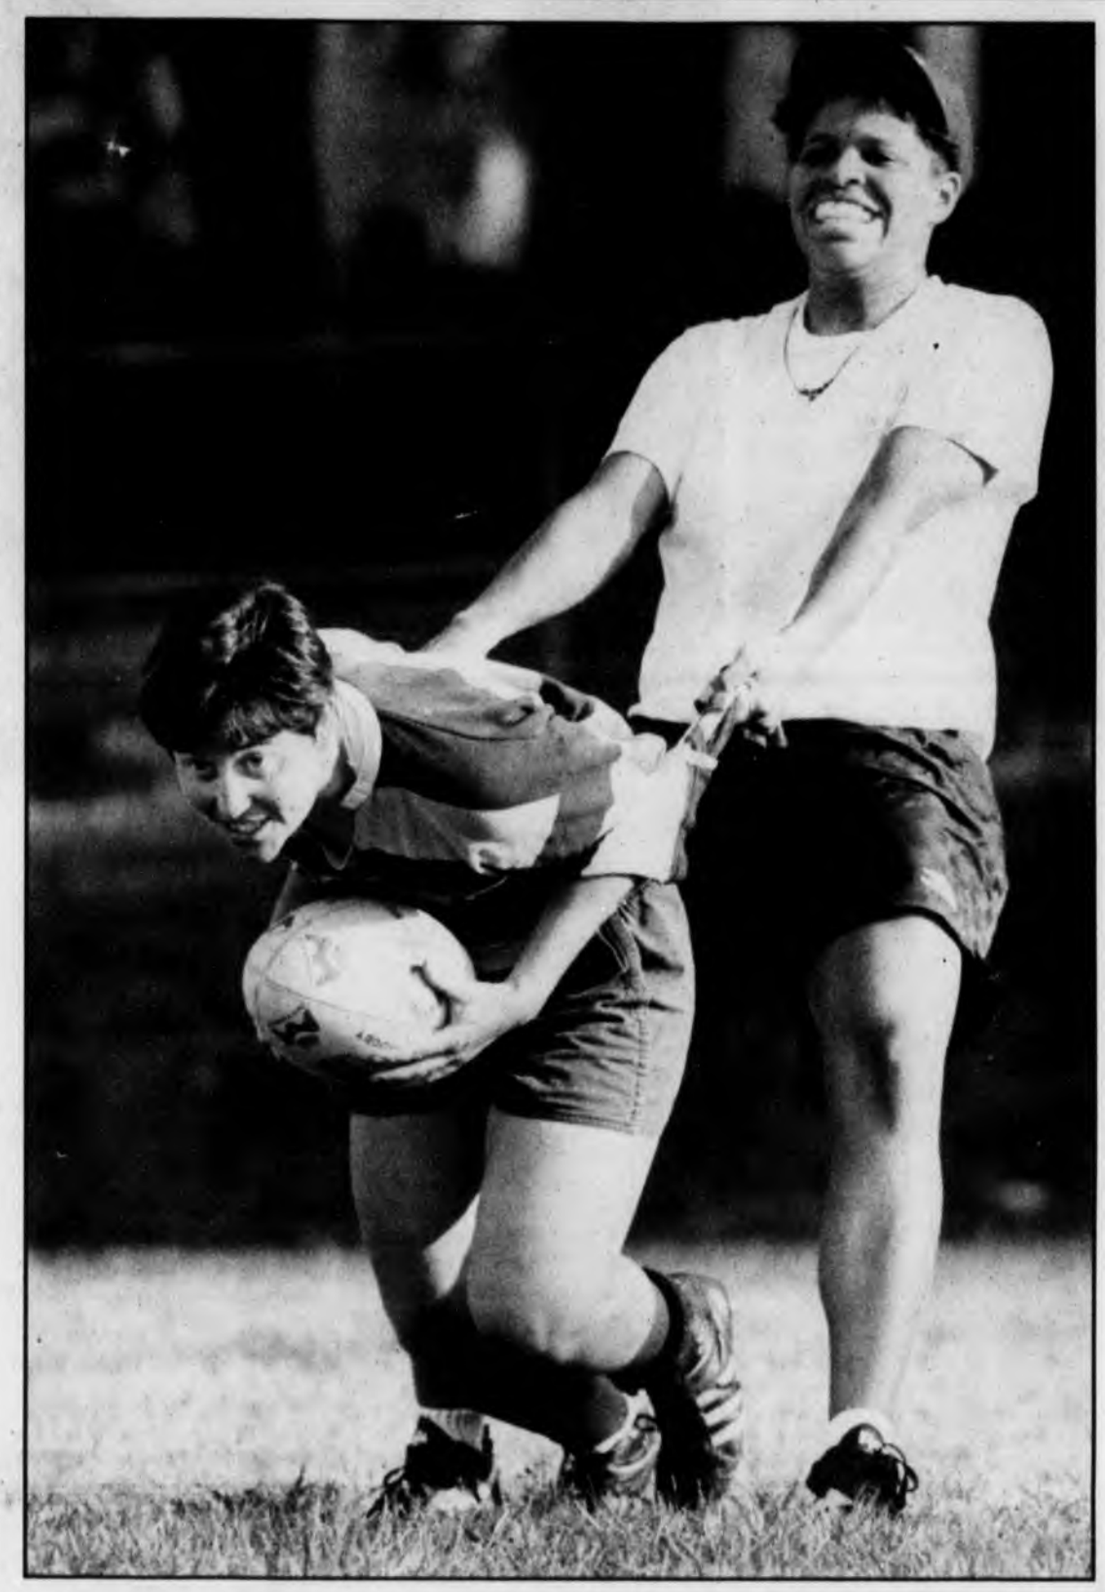
"Right now we're in he process of looking for contributors," she said.

In the meantime, the team continues to practice three days a week Tuesday-Thursday at 5:30 at Memorial Stadium.

Burton said that anyone, regardless of their experience, is welcome to come out.

"We don't expect anyone to have ever played rugby before they got to college," Burton said.

"Anybody is welcome to come and try it," she said.



►Becky Burton gets a little resistence from Laura Walker during Tuesday's practice. The drills were used to build strength and make the athlete stay low.

First-time tailgaters receive helpful hints

Seniors and older students may already have this activity down to perfection.

But to those students who will find themselves attending their first pre-game tailgating party in the KSU Stadium parking lot, here's what you might need to fit in with the regulars.

First of all, a grill is a necessity. There is nothing better than a roasted hot dog or hamburger prior to game time.

JULIE KUHLMAN

Okay, steaks and polish sausages aren't shabby either, but if you're like me, you'll spend an extra couple dollars on condiments. So, it might be more affordable to stick to Oscar Meyer and ground beef.

Beverages are also vital. Coolers containing cold pop and Gatorade will quench that post-burger thirst. And for you heavier drinkers, there's always lemonade or Kool-Aid you could whip up since alcohol is prohibited on K-State premises, right?

Music is pretty popular at tailgating parties as well. I wouldn't recommend taking any high-dollar equipment, though. An old battery-operated cassette player will do just fine. If you have to, tape your favorite compact disc and bring it along.

Some of you might get tired of standing and need a place to sit down as well. Be smart and bring lawn chairs.

Heck, you could even bring a card table and play some cards while you're discussing whose butt the Cats will kick.

Now, to the most crucial part. It probably won't be much fun to tailgate by yourself. So, call your favorite buds and go together. More is definitely merrier in this type of event.

This way you can be really loud. Others will notice and want to join you in being rowdy. Just don't get obnoxious.

Oh yeah, most students tend to bring a pickup instead of a car to tailgate.

This gives more accessibility for storage of your items, more seating room, and it fits the name of the party.

I hope this has given newcomers some pointers to make them feel a little more at home Saturday.

Please don't stay home just because you might feel uneasy in a large parking lot with an even larger amount of people.

Believe me, the experience can be incredible.

Last November, I had the privilege of attending a Kansas City Chiefs pre-game brouhaha at their home turf, Arrowhead Stadium.

The decor was amazing. Banners, grills, coolers and warpaint engulfed the parking lot. And to that spirited bunch from Green Bay who paraded their dressed-up-Packer-selves in the midst of fellow Chiefs fans everywhere, my hat is off to you.

College football games need more of this type of spirit.

So, if you see any Southwestern Louisiana fans dressed up as Ragin' Cajuns, commend them on their bravery.

Better yet, if you see any Willie Wildcat juniors strolling the parking lot, salute them.

Fans, show your enthusiasm and back the Cats at our first home game this Saturday.

Don't leave for the stadium 10 minutes before kickoff and become irritated when you find that there is no room left in the general-admission area.

The parking lot is open to fans three hours before game time. Be there.

Waterski team looking to top region

KRISTA COZAD
Collegian

K-State's water ski team is hitting the lakes in earnest, and it's attempting to be one of the top-two teams in the region.

The team began its season last Sunday with tryouts for potential varsity skiers. Interested students were invited to Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

"Students have the opportunity to crack into the A team," Randy Taylor, faculty adviser, said.

The A team is another name for the varsity skiers, Brian Yutzy, team president, said.

"Anybody who wants to ski can, but we can only have five people in each of the three events," Yutzy said. "Everybody else gets to ski in the B-team skiing."

The goal for the men's team this year is to make it to nationals, Jason Otke, vice president, said. To do this, the team must place in the top-two teams at regional competition.

The region is composed of other Big Eight Conference schools, including KU, Oklahoma State and Iowa State.

The team may also travel to Texas to compete, Shelly Kimble, vice president of the women's team, said.

In past years, the team has done well in the region.

"We don't do too bad," Yutzy said. "We've won the Big Eight before."

Otke said he expects this year's team to place in the top five at regionals, if the team's roster is full.

Yutzy said he hopes the team's roster will be full. About 70 people came out for the informational meeting Aug. 23, but he expects the team to eventually be made up of about 30 to 35 people.

The varsity men's and women's teams are expected to be chosen by Thursday.

He said the team is especially interested in women skiers, because so many of the women who previously skied for K-State have graduated.

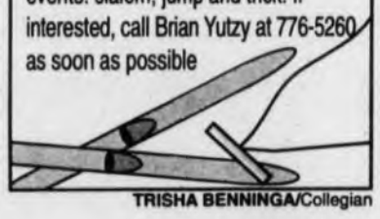
"There seems to be a lot more guys out for the team. There aren't as many women who know how to ski, and I think that a lot of them think they have to be better than they have to be to make the team," Kimble said.

Kimble said she'd like for the women's team to be more competitive.

The team practices at Tuttle Creek in Stockdale Cove to prepare for the six tournaments it will compete in during the year.

Team members practice whenever they can, and they each make out their own practice schedule every week to fit with boat and driver availability.

The team doesn't stop for weather either. Yutzy said the team practices until it's cold, with one of the last fall tournaments taking place in October.



"Sometimes we ski in 50-degree water," Yutzy said.

Practice for the team resumes in the spring.

WATERSKI SCHEDULE

Omaha Tournament	Sept. 3
Wichita Tournament	Sept. 10 and 11
KSU/KU Tournament	Sept. 16 and 17
Regionals	Oct. 1 and 2

These are subject to change. The KSU/KU Tournament is in the works. Most tournaments consist of three events: slalom, jump and trick. If interested, call Brian Yutzy at 776-5260 as soon as possible

▶STRIKE NEGOTIATIONS REMAIN DEADLOCKED

NEW YORK (AP) — The chief negotiator for baseball owners met with federal mediators Wednesday, the 20th day of the players' strike, and he discounted reports that there has been a change in management's position.

"I'd like to put those rumors to rest — at least the ones I've heard — there's been no change whatsoever in the owners' position," Richard Ravitch said after meeting for three hours.

Ravitch's remarks came a day after reports that there had been informal talks between both sides in the strike by players over the owners' attempts to impose a cap on salaries.

▶JAYHAWKS OPEN SEASON AT THE ASTRODOME

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston is starting over, and that makes the Cougars an excellent opening opponent for a Kansas team that never recovered from last year's opening loss to eventual national-champion Florida State.

The Jayhawks, shellshocked last year by a 42-0 loss to Florida State in the Kickoff Classic and shackled by interminable injuries, opens the new season Thursday night in the Astrodome against Houston.

The game pits a veteran Jayhawk team against a Houston team with 10 freshmen either starting or working as backups on defense.

▶PARKS AND RECREATION SEARCHING FOR COACHES

The Department of Parks and Recreation is in search of volunteer coaches for fall kids' sports.

Positions for flag football have already been filled, but there are still openings in volleyball and soccer.

Director Mike Buchanan said while experience is helpful, it's not crucial.

"Certainly it does help to know something about the sport that they're coaching," Buchanan said.

"But I think just as important is that they have the time to commit to the players, and of course they have to like being around kids. That's kind of part of the deal," he said.

IN FOCUS

SEPTEMBER 1, 1994

NO LICENSE REQUIRED

The two-seat Challenger is powered by a two-stroke, 56-horsepower engine and is capable of flying at speeds up to 80 mph.

Flying an ultralite is like flying around in a lawnchair, flight instructor Richard Evans, said.

To satisfy their dream of controlling an airplane, six Manhattan residents have taken ultralite lessons at the Wamego airport as a way to relax, get a rush of adrenaline and get experience with a light airplane.

"Everyone that I've taken up in the air really likes it. It is usually a pleasant and enjoyable experience for them," Evans said.

Evans said an ultralite airplane is defined by the flight association as a light wing load aircraft that weighs no more than 250 pounds, holds no more than five gallons of fuel and travels at a speed no greater than 55 mph.

"It's the absolute true form of stick and rudder, seat-of-your-pants flying that the pilots experienced in the early days. The planes technically look like early planes but they are made of aluminum and all the modern technologies," Evans said.

John Hupe, a Wamego airport board member, said the ultralite plane consists of a wing, tail and engine and does not require a license to operate.

"It's relatively safe and not overly sophisticated. There's no license to speak of for the ultralite. We're trying to keep things real simple for people who want to fly," Hupe said.

Hupe said the airport is available for anyone who wants to use an ultralite airplane.

No one who operates the airport keeps any regular hours, Hupe said.

"We have no control over the airport activities as long as everyone obeys the rules and regulations. When the weather's nice, anyone can go out there and buzz around," he said.

Hupe said the person who instructs the student on the ultralite airplane doesn't have to possess a pilot's license.

"Anyone can teach someone how to fly. It's a recreational type thing. You might compare it to boating where people go out when they want to and have fun," he said.

Evans said although a person doesn't need a license to fly a single-seater ultralite, he recommends that people take ultralite lessons before they attempt to control the airplane.

"Anyone can climb in one and take off, but I don't advise it. The idea of teaching a student about ultralites is teaching them when not to fly. It requires as much judgment as skill to fly one properly," Evans said.

Evans said it is crucial for the student to know when it is safe to fly.

"It has to be in the morning or evening and must be under the right weather conditions because the ultralites are such light structures," he said.

Evans said he owns two ultralite airplanes, charges $600 for 10 lessons and primarily teaches 30- to 50-year-olds who either already own or are thinking about owning an ultralite, or who want to experience flying for the first time.

He said he usually gets the student up in the air on the first day and teaches them the basics of how to control the ultralite.

"I work them pretty hard while they're up there. Every 10 minutes I expect to see improvement. The new students progress so fast and concentrate so hard that after an hour and 15 minutes, they're ready to call it quits," Evans said.

Doug Hoover, Manhattan resident, was scheduled for his first ultralite experience at 4:30 p.m. Wednesday.

"It's my first lesson, so it should be interesting. I don't know what to expect, but I'm pretty sure it'll be exhilarating," Hoover said.

Hoover said he has flown light airplanes and said it's pretty much like driving a car.

"Taking off and landing are the most difficult, but once you're in the air, it's easy," Hoover said.

Hoover said the introduction flight will get his feet wet.

"I first read about them in a magazine and am contemplating owning one, but I don't know if I'll be able to do that at this time. For right now, I'm planning on taking lessons on the weekends or during the evenings after work," he said.

Hoover said he is very excited about the ultralite lessons.

"Richard told me that when you take off, you go straight up and it is better than any roller-coaster ride," Hoover said.

Evans and Hover make one last check before taking off for Hover's 30-minute introduction to ultralight flight.

Insights into MURDER

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Dressed in a black tuxedo with a red bow tie, author Denise Osborne found her way into Varney's Book Store in Aggieville last night.

"This is my book-signing uniform," Osborne said, joking with the crowd.

"This way I always know what to wear," she said.

Osborne, the author of "Murder Offscreen" was in town to visit K-State English classes and sign copies of her book.

Osborne also treated the crowd to a reading from "Murder Offscreen," reading a selection that did not make it into the published edition.

Osborne said that approximately 100 pages were cut from her original manuscript for the book.

The selection she read was a description of the history of the theater where the story's murder occurs.

"I really hated to lose it," she said. "It's the venue for murder."

Osborne has traveled extensively, being born in Oklahoma, growing up in California, attending high school in Japan and living in England.

Her world travels will come out in a series of adventure books set around the globe she hopes to eventually publish.

After getting her bachelor's degree in journalism from the University of Oklahoma, Osborne attended the Sherwood Oaks Experimental College, a professional film school in California.

She has been involved with writing for film and television ever since.

"Writing the screenplay has helped me a lot," she said. "You really learn that every word counts."

Osborne said she was advised to publish a murder mystery to promote her screenwriting career.

She also said she hopes her books will be picked up by producers and eventually make it to the screen.

Working in film has translated well into "Murder Offscreen." As you may be able to guess, the plot centers around the film world.

Osborne said she always thought she would be a writer and had plenty of advice for hopeful writers.

"Be prepared to wait," she said.

Slow start worth the wait

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

I'll tell you right now, the beginning of "Murder Offscreen," by Denise Osborne, is slow. But if you can get through the first few chapters, you'll find a mystery that grabs your imagination and won't let you put the book down.

This is Osborne's first novel, and at the beginning, this is very apparent. The protagonist, Queenie Davilov, is a screenwriter who makes her living as a script supervisor/private investigator for a horror film director.

Through the first six chapters, Osborne seems intent on using every literary tool in the writer's handbook. From hackneyed metaphors ("Like a blast from hell, the wind only exacerbated the heat ...") to clumsy foreshadowing ("But of course, how could she know that another monster waited, preparing to taketh away."), the chapters are lessons on how not to write.

But slogging through the text is worth the wait. Osborne gets caught up in her characters and becomes less concerned about writing the great-American mystery.

As a result, the reader gets involved in the book and begins to care about the characters.

The premise of the novel is that someone murders Queenie's boss, Burke Lymon at the premiere of his movie, "Lucifer's Shadow." Of course Queenie, who just so happens to be a private investigator in her spare time, solves the murder.

But in between these cliches are a variety of plot twists and a deftly written ending. Osborne's foreshadowing becomes less blatant, and there are revelations that will surprise you. It will be hard to figure out who the murderer is, as Osborne keeps you guessing to the very end.

The characterization is handled fairly well. Osborne does a good job of fleshing out even the most minor of characters and Queenie has depths that you would never guess at the beginning.

Osborne has written several screenplays and short films, so her knowledge of the film industry helps this book considerably.

Even though this is her first novel, Osborne obviously has talent. Her writing gets better throughout the course of the novel, and her next book promises to be even better.

K-State seeking live music scene

Pearl Jam, Toad the Wet Sprocket and the Gin Blossoms all have one thing in common.

They all got their start at the Day on the Hill festival in Lawrence, the alternative music capital of the Midwest.

Although the land of the Jayhawks pales in comparison to K-State, we could definitely take a lesson from them. KU believes in live music and has helped local bands rise to national success through their support and passion for live entertainment.

Here in Manhattan, the only way to see a good band is to take a road trip.

AMY ZIEGLER

Things need to change soon or Aggieville will slowly turn into a ghost town and the music scene will rapidly disappear in Manhattan.

In just two short years, Kites Bar & Grille, the place to see people and be seen, bit the dust; DowBow's, one of the last surviving bars with a stage transformed into an aviation-themed bar named Bombers; and Christopher O'Bryans changed to Champions.

Change can be good, but not if you're talking about Aggieville.

Aggieville has always had the long-standing tradition of bars and has been the hot spot for K-State students ever since it was created.

When the drinking age changed to 21, the bars dropped off one by one until only a handful was left and the party town turned into a shopping district.

A few clubs on Moro Street feature live bands, but that's not their feature attraction.

Bands which have compact discs on the market and are known nationally rarely step foot into a town like Manhattan.

Mitch Ulrich, the owner of Vital Vinyl, attempted to pump life into the music scene by opening the Warehouse last year.

After struggling for a few months, the Warehouse fell flat on its face and took the possibility of attracting popular bands to Manhattan down with it.

Contrary to K-State's reputation, 99 percent of the campus isn't into country music but instead has a passion for everything from alternative to metal to rap.

The Warehouse brought some of these acts to Manhattan, but the students didn't show their support. Although it's too late for the Warehouse, hopefully some of the bars in Aggieville will recognize the need for a variety of live music in Manhattan.

Several of the buildings along Moro Street are vacant and are screaming for someone to take them, renovate them and give life back to Aggieville.

I would have loved to have been in college when Aggieville was bursting with bars and music and good times, but since I can't go back in time, I have to work with what I've got.

One way to do this is to look at other bars across the Midwest that have attracted prominent bands and students in like sardines.

The Bottleneck in Lawrence knows the secret to success.

Last year, when I reviewed all the bars in Manhattan, not one of them even came close to the Bottleneck.

I think one thing that has made the Bottleneck one of the best places in Lawrence to hear music is that it features live bands seven nights a week and offers an intense atmosphere to the devoted fans.

We desperately need a bar like the Bottleneck that has more than just drink specials and an occasional local band.

Until I win the lottery or some entrepreneurs decide to open up a bar which regularly features live music, Aggieville will continue in its downward spiral toward extinction.

Reply narrow-minded

Dear Cassandra,

C'mon Cassandra — have a heart! I was dismayed to read your reply to Not Sure in Friday's edition of the Collegian. You're right, he didn't give you much to go on, but your answer is inexcusably heartless.

It is narrow-minded to assume that Not Sure must be the one who "screwed up," just because his girlfriend said he did.

Is he automatically lying to you because he's a man?

Other factors may be involved.

Maybe she found someone else and didn't know how to tell him or wasn't mature enough to be upfront and honest with him.

Signed,
Just One of the Girls

Dear Just One of the Girls,

I appreciate your thoughts and advice for "Not Sure." However, the fact that "Not Sure" is a man has nothing to do with my critical response.

Maybe she did find someone else; maybe her friends were a factor. If this were the case, why would she claim that he screwed up?

At any rate, I think she behaved very badly by just packing up and walking out on him with no explanation.

The possibilities of what happened are endless.

There is a strong possibility that she was an immature brat that left after hearing a vicious rumor.

Maybe "Not Sure" will let us know.

Newsroom chaos brought to big screen with talented cast

"Your whole world can change in 24 hours."

That's the line that opens and closes Ron Howard's latest film, "The Paper." It's also the line that perhaps best describes what the film is about.

Michael Keaton stars as Henry Hackett, the metro editor for the New York Sun, a fictional daily paper.

The film centers around the problems (and there are plenty) that Henry faces in a single, 24-hour period of his life.

Marissa Tomei plays Henry's pregnant wife, Marty, who is constantly pressuring him to decide between his career and his family when she herself can hardly decide.

The main plot of the film revolves around a breaking news story about two prominent businessmen found shot to death in their car. The police immediately arrest two suspects, both black male teen-agers.

However, Keaton and crew soon learn that these two may not be guilty and must face a decision between responsible journalism and saving the paper, which is already in financial trouble.

That is just one of the many storylines peppered throughout this film. It is also one of the film's problems.

Like other Ron Howard films ("Far and Away") this film tries to go in too many directions at once. It moves along at a hectic pace that is almost too hard to keep up with.

That's not to say that these storylines are bad, or that this is a bad movie.

In fact, it's quite good, thanks in no small part to the talented cast.

Keaton and Tomei both turn in better than average performances, and Glenn Close is at her bitchy best as money-hungry editor Alicia Clark.

The tension between Close and Keaton provides some of the best moments in the film.

Robert Duvall turns in a terrific performance as Bernie White, the aging editor of the Sun, who is faced with trying to make peace with his estranged daughter.

Another high point of the film is Randy Quaid, who plays McDougal, a paranoid columnist who is convinced the city parking commissioner is out to get him.

Overall, "The Paper" is an enjoyable film. The actors have a great chemistry when they're in the newsroom.

The dialogue is snappy and the laughs come at a steady pace. The storylines, however, fly by at breakneck speed.

Don't worry if you can't keep up with this film. You can amuse yourself by looking for the many cameos.

Watch for Bob Costas in the men's room.

Money allows UPC to schedule variety of events

MOLLY WEIGEL
Collegian

Union Program Council unveiled its events schedule Wednesday, which includes more than 500 events for the year.

The addition of $70,000 to the previous budget has enabled UPC to book more events than previous years, Patrick Carney, Issues and Ideas Committee chairman, said.

"This year, we are bringing in five or six speakers. Last year, we had one," Carney said.

Several speakers have been booked for the fall semester. Michael Levine, former Drug Enforcement Agency agent, will talk about the U.S. war on drugs, Carney said.

Zev Kedem, who was on Schindler's list and a consultant to the movie, will speak during Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week.

UPC is also bringing musical talent from outside Kansas, Melissa Wells, Eclectic Entertainment Committee chairperson, said.

"We've booked the Drovers from Chicago, the Mommyheads from San Francisco and AutoNo from Colorado Springs," Wells said.

Comedian Daniel Rosen will perform Oct. 14 in Union Station, Wells said.

Rosen has performed on the "Late Show," "Good Morning America" and "Entertainment Tonight."

The biggest show UPC Arts Committee has ever done is scheduled for October, Ann Claussen, program director for UPC, said. The show called Companeras is a nationally touring exhibit from Washington state.

The Outdoor Recreation Committee will use its money to update equipment, coordinate several trips and sponsor an outdoor-awareness day, Arlen Olberding, committee chairman, said.

"This year, we're doing something new. We are sponsoring an outdoor-awareness day on Earth Day 1995. There will be a camp out on campus and an alternative-transportation race," Olberding said.

"We are also looking forward to the Grand Canyon Spring Break trip," he said.

"Also, we will offer more experienced campers and hikers a trip to Moab, Utah," Olberding said.

The Travel Committee has two big trips planned, Stephanie Curry, Travel Committee chairwoman, said.

The Silver Dollar City trip is in October. Also, a Kansas City culture trip is planned. The trip will feature a visit to the Nelson Art Gallery and possibly a showing of Phantom of the Opera, Curry said.

J. Crew is sponsoring a ski trip to Vail after New Year's for 17 universities, including K-State. The trip will feature The Samples in concert, Curry said.

The Special Events Committee is looking forward to something different this year, Christy Drake, special events chairperson, said.

Ocean Spray is sponsoring a football table top tournament, Drake said.

The game consists of NFL trivia. Teams of three can participate (one team member must be a female), she said.

The winning team will go to regionals. If they win there, they go on to nationals in Miami, and if they win that, they get Super Bowl tickets.

The Multicultural Committee is planning a concert in McCain Auditorium, highlighting the group Fusion, Mary Taylor, Multicultural Affairs Committee chairwoman, said.

"For Free Your Mind Week, we are trying to get either Quest or De la Soul to perform," Taylor said.

The Kaleidoscope Committee is bringing back Mystery Science Theatre 3000 Oct. 9, Sarah Hadley, UPC program adviser, said.

"Mystery Science Theatre is free to all students. Also, the first 50 will get T-shirts. The event is sponsored by AT&T, Apple and Visa, so there will be a lot of prizes to give away," she said.

New to Feature Films this year is It's Your Movie Night, Trent Frager, Feature Films Committee chairman, said.

There will be a drawing for one person to win a movie of his or her choice, and the movie will be played in Forum Hall for the winner and 750 friends, Frager said.

UPC is looking forward to the upcoming activities, Brent Coverdale, president of UPC, said.

"We have over 30 events scheduled for September, and we're looking forward to October and November. Then, we will have even more to offer," Coverdale said.

Claussen said she encourages students to get involved.

"Students have more of an edge when they're involved. Being involved in UPC can enhance your skills in leadership, marketing, management and problem-solving," Claussen said.

Kennedy: It's not worth it

Tammie Weeks, manager of Rock-A-Belly Deli, said people must be 21 to enter their bar after 10 p.m., and their bartenders card everyone.

At Fast Eddy's, where a number of minors go to play pool or darts, there is still a potential for underage drinking, Gilman said.

"We are no different than any other bar as far as minors trying to get in and consume alcohol," Gilman said.

"The burden is tremendous on license owners, and minors don't seem to give a damn about my license," Gilman said.

"A minor, no matter what you tell them, will do it anyway.

"Kite's Bar & Grille, an Aggieville icon, has been there since the beginning of time, and now it's gone because minors thought it was their God-given right to drink," Gilman said.

Officers write 15 to 20 MIP tickets per week on average in Aggieville, Angst said.

Angst said he thinks the MIP situation has improved in the past few years.

Bar owners are more responsible and minors have become more aware, he said.

In the end, Kennedy said, "It's not worth it."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

A WINNING YEAR '94-'95

Rec Report

Recreational Services, Kansas State University, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

Watch for our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

Working it Out

Wildcat Workouts:

Wildcat Workouts are off to a great start in the newly renovated gym at the Rec Plex. Aerobic, Step Aerobic and Circuit Training sessions are offered five times per day, Monday through Friday and at 9 a.m. on Saturday morning. Refer to our calendar for specific times.

KSU's Department of Recreational Services was selected to join other institutional members of the National Intramural Recreational Sports Association to implement the Natural High program. The NIRSA Natural High program accentuates the benefits of a positive lifestyle: self-esteem, confidence, respect, responsibility and success. It is an activity oriented program, promoting healthy lifestyle choices. As part of this effort, Wildcat Workouts will offer special monthly events to encourage ongoing involvement in a personal exercise program.

Wildcat Workouts presents:

SPIRIT STEPPING!

Tuesday, September 17, at 5:30 p.m. September's special event, "SPIRIT STEPPING" will be held. Wear purple and white to show your Wildcat spirit and enjoy a great Step Workout to marching band favorites.

Pool Action

Wildcat Waterworks has new instructors, new equipment, new music, and new sessions. Three times on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday a great group gathers for water aerobics. The workout includes warm up, stretching, aerobic conditioning and toning. The new deep water jogging sessions are on Wednesdays. Aqua Joggers (flotation belts) will facilitate a great running workout against the resistance of the water without the typical land impact. Refer to our calendar for specific times.

Kick boards, pull buoys, hand paddles and swim fins are available to Recreational lap swimmers to vary or intensify their workouts. If you are interested in improving your swimming efficiency, participate in our STROKE MECHANICS WORKSHOP: Thursday, September 8, in lanes 1 and 8, 8:30 p.m.-9:30 p.m.

Who's Who at Rec Services

ANGIE ANDERSON is from Jamestown, KS. She is a senior in physical education and health. Angie was previously a building manager at the Rec Complex and is currently a student office assistant in the Rec Services office. Working at the Rec Complex during the expansion project is one of her most memorable experiences at KSU. Angie enjoys both coaching and playing volleyball in her spare time.

GREG NEWHAM is a fifth year senior in milling science from Topeka and is looking forward to graduating in December '94. Greg is beginning his second year as an intramural supervisor and has been the intramural manager for Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity for two years. Greg is an active participant in intramurals and played on winning 3 on 3 Basketball and Volleyball teams last year.

FITNESS FACT

Stretching three or four times a week maintains flexibility and helps prevent injury. For best results: stretch warmed up muscles before and after exercising, hold a stretch for at least 10 seconds and stretch gradually without bouncing.

CONSTRUCTION UPDATE

We began the semester with a renovated small gym--new floor, painted walls, acoustical ceiling, and new lights. We appreciate the many compliments from users.

New floor surfaces were also installed in the top handball/racquetball courts. Courts 15 and 16 have been converted to squash with new back walls (for proper length) to be installed at a later date.

Users will soon experience cool workout conditions with the start up of the new air conditioning system.

Progress continues on the new large gym with anticipated opening later in the semester (we had hoped for October, but it is going to be a little later).

Curb and guttering for the parking lot continues with asphalting planned for later in the semester.

For further information, including pictures of construction, please check the "Construction Update" bulletin board in the Rec Complex main lobby.

You Asked It!

Q: The new lighting and flooring in the small gym are great! The floor feels softer, what was done?

A: The new floor in the small gym is a synthetic surface poured over a 9 mm thick, rubber cushion. This gives the floor more resiliency, traction characteristics similar to wood, and greater impact absorption. The same flooring will be installed in all the gyms. The floors for the new track and aerobics/multipurpose room will be the same surface over a 14 mm cushion for additional resiliency.

To protect your Recreational facility and keep it in first class condition, activity appropriate shoes are required. ALL COURT USERS MUST WEAR ONLY COURT SHOE. Running shoes are allowed on the track, in the weight room and in the cardiovascular room only. Correct shoes will enhance your activity, as well as avoid marking the floors.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Shane Somers, senior in hotel and restaurant management, lip-synchs the words to "Winds of Change" by the Scorpions before the Fanatic Fan contest during the Purple Power Play on Poyntz. Somers won the competition, which includes a trip for two to the K-State-UNLV game in November. The town-wide pep rally will continue around 9:30 tonight with a fireworks display.

Hairy purple legs a crowd favorite

TONYA BOBBITT
Collegian

Shane Somers was voted the Weirdest, Wildest, Wackiest Wildcat Fan Thursday night after drop-kicking stuffed animals into the audience.

From the first, Somers, senior in hotel and restaurant management, seemed to be the crowd's favorite.

He sported a purple skull cap, one purple sock, one white sock and hairy purple legs.

Emcee J.J. Davis introduced him as a "Classy Cat reject."

From the time he tripped upon the stage, he had the crowd going. He started with a "Go Cats" chant and threw candy to the audience.

Then, he kicked stuffed animals over an imaginary field goal into the crowd. The stuffed animals represented some of the teams that K-State plays this season.

As first prize, Somers will go to Las Vegas to see the Wildcats play the University of Nevada-Las Vegas Rebels.

The Weirdest, Wildest, Wackiest, Wildcat Fan Contest was a new addition to this year's Purple Power Play.

The contest was judged on five categories — originality, creativity, costume, spirit and overall performance.

Each contestant was judged on a scale of 1-10 (10 being the highest score) in each category.

The contest was judged by several members of K-State's Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. They were Mike Clark, baseball coach; Brian Agler, women's basketball coach; Paul Asbury, men's basketball coach; Erick Harper, director of sales and advertising; and Steve Bietau, women's tennis coach.

Mitch Emig won second place and a tailgate party for 200 people at a Cats home game.

With a fake country accent and dressed in purple overalls, "Farmer Mitch" bellowed to the crowd.

"I am just a Wildcat fan, singing my song the best I can. I am going to support my Cats by doing my victory dance," Emig sang.

The audience participated by singing with him the second time around.

▶ INVESTMENT

Get-rich-quick plan is a hoax

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Beware of get-rich-quick investment schemes that could sucker you out of hundreds of dollars and land you in jail.

Investigator Richard Herrman of the K-State Police reported that a pyramid scheme may be operating in Manhattan.

He said the Kansas Securities Commission is investigating a similar scheme at the University of Kansas that is in violation of the Kansas Securities Act.

No KU police officials were available for comment at press time.

No individuals have come forward to report a pyramid scheme at K-State, Herrman said, but the department received anonymous reports from people approached by so-called pyramid investors.

Herrman said variations on the pyramid scheme have been in operation for years.

He described the pyramid scheme as being similar to a chain letter.

"You give me $150, and I'll get you in on the pyramid. Then you go out and find three or four people to give you $150, and you pay me a percentage of their money, and so on.

"The money keeps going uphill at a percentage," Herrman said. "Once it gets to the top, the top investor drops out."

By that point, the top investor may have received $1,200 from the original $150, he said.

The problem is that many investors on the bottom will never reach the top, he said.

"With any pyramid, sooner or later, you're going to run out of people, and you've lost your $150," Herrman said.

The trick to selling the pyramid is not to tell potential investors how large it is, he said.

"It depends on if they can be convinced this pyramid has just begun, and that they can get their money," he said. "When, in fact, the pyramid may be running out, and they could lose their money."

Pyramid investors are in violation of the Kansas Securities Act if they are not licensed by the commission, Herrman said.

There are legitimate businesses that do work on a pyramid-type scheme, he said, but they involve selling products and are licensed.

"You have to be bonded in order to handle other people's money," he said.

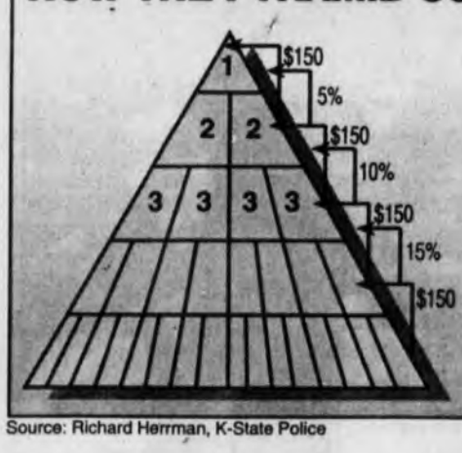
Herrman said most people involved in illegal pyramid schemes do not know it's illegal.

"It's amazing how many people, without really thinking, jump at an opportunity to double or triple their money."

Herrman said college students are particularly vulnerable to pyramid schemes, especially now when they have received their scholarships or financial aid.

"They may think, 'I have enough money now, and if I invest it, I can go skiing over the break.'"

The scheme is reported to be especially active in fraternities, sororities and other communal groups because everyone knows each other, he said.



Herrman said he didn't know what the penalties for participating in a pyramid scheme would be.

"It depends on how it's working and whether it's in violation," he said.

SCAM INFO

If you have any information about a pyramid investment operation or any get-rich-quick scheme, contact the K-State Police at 532-6412.

HOW THE PYRAMID SCHEME WORKS

1. The person at the top finds two people willing to "invest" $150 each in the pyramid.
2. The investors in turn find two more people to invest and pay a percentage to the investors above them.
3. The amount of the percentage paid increases the lower the investors are on the pyramid.

Senate overcharges students

Error discovered during statement preparation

TANWYA ERNST
Collegian

K-State students paid a little more in fees than they realized or bargained for this semester.

A 50-cent overcharge in fees for every full-time student and a 25-cent overcharge in fees for part-time students was discovered during the preparation of a statement on fees Tuesday morning, Clayton Wheeler, Student Senate chairman, said.

"When we got the enrollment figures and fees in, alarms just went off," Wheeler said. "Something got lost or overlooked. It was an honest mistake."

The discrepancy resulted from a miscommunication in Student Senate's paper trail. Last spring, Senate passed legislation to decrease the Student Activity Fee by 50 cents, from $8 to $7.50. Somehow, the drop in the fee never reached the Kansas Board of Regents for approval, and the regents maintained the fees at the old level.

"In the confusion of paperwork to change the activity fee, the lines of communication broke down," Brandon Clark, arts and sciences senator, said. "We're taking steps to make sure that this won't happen again."

A refined process to handle fees has been implemented to prevent this from happening again, said Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president.

"It goes through a couple of levels now," he said. "In the future, it's going to go through several more people to make sure it's accurate."

Fifty cents and 25 cents may not sound like much for one semester. However, the fee will remain at its current level until next fall. The surplus fees will total more than $17,600, not exactly pocket change. The board was reluctant to change the fee for the '95 spring semester, because it considered the overcharge too insignificant for all the paperwork involved.

"The Board of Regents won't accept fee changes of that small of an amount. It'll be solved for next year of 1995 and '96," Wheeler said.

Students can't expect a refund. Cutting checks for refund money would cost double what the total overcharge amounts to, Clark said. However, Senate is looking at options.

Students to fund Senators' retreat

$2,181 trip planned to Camp Wood this month

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Student senators will be leaving for a weekend retreat later this month.

The student body will be funding this trip.

The Student Governing Association voted at its meeting Thursday night to pay $2,181 for its retreat. This retreat will be Sept. 10-11 at Camp Wood.

SGA voted 33-25 in favor of passing the bill. Senators will now pay $5 to cover the cost of promotional T-shirts for the weekend.

Tim Kukula, communications chairman, said student senators donate a large amount of time working for the students.

"They have tapped into our calendars, and now they want to tap into our wallets," Kukula said.

Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator, voted in favor of spending the money because SGA has voted to give other organizations money for similar trips.

"As long as we fund ourselves equally with other groups, I think we have done a good job," Henry said.

Faye Premer, College of Architecture senator, voted against spending money for the retreat. She said $2,000 was a ridiculous amount for Student Senate to pay.

"I felt that students elected us, and they did not expect to pay to train us," Premer said.

Trent LeDoux, College of Agriculture senator, said he voted against the bill because senators were informed about the retreat when they filed for election. Candidates signed a sheet that said there may be costs for a retreat.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said he has found several corporate sponsors to help pay for the retreat.

SGA also allocated $1,530 to the Office of Legal Services to purchase a new edition of Kansas Digest.

Student Senate also appointed people to several positions at Thursday's meeting.

Jennifer Higerd was appointed arts and sciences senator. She received the highest vote total of non-elected arts and sciences students during the election last spring. She replaces David Frese, former student body vice president and student senator, who is no longer enrolled at the University.

Bill Poteet was also approved as director of the FONE Crisis Center.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ FT. RILEY DEPLOYS 551 MORE SOLDIERS TO FIGHT WILDFIRES IN IDAHO

More soldiers from Fort Riley's 1st Infantry Division will be leaving Wednesday to fight wildfires in Idaho.

The 551 soldiers from the 2nd Battalion and 3rd Air Defense Artillery will be extinguishing and mopping up fires near Idaho City, 40 minutes northeast of Boise.

The soldiers will receive firefighting training at the fort and from the National Interagency Fire Center personnel once they reach Idaho.

They will learn fire-suppression safety and how to use fire shelters, Mark Meseke, Fort Riley media relations officer, said.

The soldiers will work in 12-hour shifts and are scheduled to remain in Idaho 30 days, depending on the progress of the firefighting efforts and weather conditions.

The group will join 600 soldiers from Fort Riley who left last week for Idaho.

Capt. Jim Gray, task force representative, said the fires as of Wednesday had consumed about 85,000 acres in the Boise National Forest area, north of Idaho City.

Of the five fires involved, four were the result of lightning strikes, and one is an alleged arson.

▶ NEW ADVISER

Administrator brings awareness to adviser position

TAMARA JORDON
Collegian

K-State continues to diversify its faculty staff with the addition of Freeman Davis to its campus.

Davis is the administrative adviser to the Black Pan-Hellenic Council and part-time voice instructor in the music department.

A dual employment opportunity for Davis and his wife, Olga, assistant professor of speech, brought them to K-State.

Davis

The council governs the black greek organizations on K-State's campus. Davis said his duties include a number of projects that were preassigned to him.

He said he hopes to encourage black greeks to refocus, recapture or capture for the first time, the history, purpose and mission of their greek organizations.

Davis said he is excited and prepared to accomplish the duties set before him.

His position was formerly held by Shirlyn Henry Brown.

Davis is from Dayton, Ohio, and has worked in Lincoln, Neb., for the past ten years. He said the majority of those ten years was dedicated to being a self-employed business consultant.

He said he also worked with the city and government in Lincoln and assisted the vice president of operations in a private corporation. He was also a lecturer at a community college and a board member of the YMCA.

Davis said he had no misconceptions about Manhattan or K-State before arriving.

"Living in the Midwest for 10 years, I couldn't have misconceptions, even if I was told something," he said.

Davis said there is a different awareness in Manhattan.

The cultural awareness of black people is more progressive here than in Lincoln, he said.

"I hope I leave that lack of awareness in Lincoln."

Davis said black students on a predominantly white campus have the responsibility to educate their colleagues on a constant basis.

"Since black students have come to college to be educated, it is an extra and unfair burden to educate others of their ethnicity on a negative basis," Davis said.

▶ CONSTRUCTION

$1.5-million garden planned for campus

LORI CAGLE
Collegian

Bulldozers are clearing the way for the 12 acres of gardens planned to bring a new source of beauty and relaxation to K-State.

Phase one of the gardens is planned for construction this fall.

"The maintenance center has to be installed first," Tom Warner, head of the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreational Resources, said. "After that ,we'd like to see either the ponds at the edge of the Veterinary Medicine building or the gardens off the Dairy Barn done next."

"Funding is what will decide the order things go in," he said.

The entire project will be funded by contribution, Warner said.

Warner said the ponds were estimated by Schwab-Eaton P.A. to cost $600,000, the largest single development in the whole plan.

Warner said he is working with Betty Johnson, constituent development officer for agriculture at the Foundation Center, to market the gardens.

Donations totaling $1.5 million have been collected without any fund-raising efforts. Warner said he plans to use a catalog of sketches of the garden broken down into levels of contribution for the fundraising.

The entire construction and maintenance should run about $7 million and is hoped to be completed by the year 2000, Warner said.

The gardens will become a laboratory for horticulture and landscape architecture students, Chip Winslow, associate professor of landscape architecture, said.

"It is to be a place for students and the community to enjoy," Winslow said.

Winslow took initial plans drawn up by graduate students and revised them into what the Garden Advisory Committee approved.

"I hope to eventually be the one to interpret the design of the garden as it progresses," Winslow said.

He is now working on the catalog of breakdown sketches for the marketing process that will allow Warner to bring in contributors and raise the funds necessary for completion.

The campus gardens will be spread over the 12 acres located east of the Dairy Barn to the south of the veterinary medicine complex.

Winslow said he hopes that students can enjoy the gardens and remember their experiences with them for years to come.

"I've been here for 20 years off and on, and the rose gardens are something that have fond memories for me," Winslow said.

The old rose gardens had to be taken out because of the University expanding, Winslow said.

"I hope to always be a part of the process so I can bring elements of my memories of the rose gardens into these gardens along with the rest of the picture that is in my head and heart of what it should look like," Winslow said.

If the funding comes in as planned, construction involving landscape architecture students could begin in the spring of 1995, Warner said.

"This will teach students to work with the public in a public garden, an experience they will need for their future," he said.

The K-State gardens are not the first project Warner has worked on of this type. He came to K-State from South Dakota University, where he had worked on initiating a garden project there and oversaw its progress the last five years.

Funding will be the determining factor of when the gardens will be completed, but both Warner and Winslow said that with the interest already shown, the plan for the year 2000 looks good.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

More bike paths would solve problems

We are going through construction on campus anyway. Why not put in more bike paths?

If the sidewalks are for pedestrians, and cars are for the roads, then where do the bikes belong?

On the bike paths.

Since the bicyclers have been kicked off the sidewalks, they should be able to ride without pedestrian obstacles.

If bicyclers and the walkers can't share the sidewalks, then they shouldn't share the bike paths.

It's only fair.

But what's not fair is the amount of space devoted to sidewalks compared to the number of bike paths.

Walking from some people's house is not a good alternative to driving, but bicycling is.

However, the campus does not have enough paths to encourage lots of people to ride.

With construction going on everywhere, this would be a perfect time to develop a plan to put in more bike paths.

Right now, there is no way bikers can get through the middle of the campus.

New paths need to allow bikers to move more freely through the campus without bothering pedestrians or endangering themselves on the streets.

By building more bike paths, you would encourage those who drive to school to try bicycling instead.

Fewer people driving means less of a parking problem.

An investment in bike paths would be money well spent.

TOLES

Safety in area not as it appears

How many people know that there were no rapes on campus in 1993?

That's what the Campus Police say in the nifty little handbook that was handed out at this semester's fee payment.

No murders, no sexual battery, no lewd and lascivious behavior.

It's ever neat they distinguish between forcible and non-forcible rapes.

Forcible rape being when the woman gets the crap beaten out of her, as opposed to just being raped.

Sorry, none of those either.

You probably didn't realize this campus was such a safe place. I'm sure all the parents of the incoming freshmen are really relieved.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

One problem though.

What about all the rest of Manhattan?

Monday morning of last week, a woman was raped a few blocks from campus.

Yes folks, it does happen.

Even here in Manhattan.

But due to incidents being misfiled or not reported at all, people don't know it.

So people who have never been away from home feel safe and think that it doesn't happen here.

They leave their doors unlocked, windows open, or walk alone at night.

They aren't stupid. The most they can be accused of is being naive because they weren't given the knowledge essential to protect themselves.

The only sin here is that of omission.

In trying to protect the identity of rape victims, the police are failing to protect the very people who are attacked.

If no one but the rapist, victim and the police knew that this occurred, then the general public won't know they should be on the defensive.

If a description of the rapist were to be given to newspapers and television stations, then maybe he could be caught.

Last summer, the University was found negligent in the sexual assault of a former student in 1990. The plaintiff was awarded $209,100 in damages.

To recap the story, a football player was accused of raping a student while living in Moore Hall in April of 1990. The University had him moved into Marlatt Hall, then allowed him to move into Goodnow Hall during spring intersession.

There, he allegedly attacked another female student.

He pled guilty to the first rape in August of 1990 and in exchange, the second charge of aggravated sexual battery was dropped.

The second victim sued the University for failing to protect her and for not telling the residents of Goodnow that there was someone that was currently being punished for allegedly attacking a fellow student from Moore.

He was punished for almost a whole month.

In April, the rape occurred. He was moved to Marlatt the end of that month and was allowed to move to Goodnow for spring intersession in May.

Why did the University allow someone who had been accused of rape to move into a co-ed residence hall again?

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said everyone had the same access to information as everyone else, so there was no need to warn the residents of Goodnow about the accused rapist.

Wrong.

The semester was at an end. The students were leaving and more were coming in. Some who arrived were not here when the first incident happened.

So here it is, 1994. There has been another incident of rape that occurred just off campus.

Due to a computer glitch, the report was not filed with the rest of the crime reports.

It was an incident that will not make it into the campus crime statistics, because it did not happen on campus.

But I'm sure that parents and students who come up here in January will have the same access to information as everyone else.

Won't they?

▶ PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

Officer treatment rough

Dear Editor,

At 11 a.m. on Tuesday, Aug. 30 I was pulled over by police, handcuffed and transported to the station. First of all, I wasn't driving a $90,000 BMW with $2 million worth of cocaine in the trunk or just returning from a drive-by on a rival gang; I was riding my bicycle to my 11:05 class.

In all fairness to the Collegian, they reported the incident the best they could, but there are still some unanswered questions. People are coming up to me saying, "Well, you must have done something to make them handcuff you!"

Now, as much as I hate to do this, I must take some of the responsibility for the events that transpired that day. My mother raised a comedian, and on Tuesday I told one too many jokes.

I was riding my bike on the sidewalk between Seaton and Holtz halls when I saw a student receiving a ticket for riding his bike on the sidewalk. The officer turned around and saw me. He ordered me to get off the bike or he would write me a ticket, too. I smiled and asked him how he was going to give me a ticket while giving the other student a ticket. I saw him put away his pen and I immediately got off my bike. I am positive he saw me get off my bicycle before mounting his bike. As I walked my bike, several students yelled at me that he was coming.

He pulled directly in front of me and asked to see some ID or we would have to go down to the Riley County Police Station. I smiled again, and said you can't be serious. I told him that I didn't have any ID on me. He paused, and then asked for my name. I smiled and said, "Dick Gregory."

He looked at me, unamused, and said that that wasn't my name. I told him that I was just joking and then gave him my real name. He said we would still have to go down to the station to make a positive ID.

We turned around, and I got back on my bike and proceeded with the officer. He told me to get off the bike immediately. I asked him if he was going to give me another ticket.

He replied that he would, and I dismounted the bike. He then walked over to me and took the handcuffs out. I told him that wouldn't be necessary, and that I wasn't going to try and escape over a $25 ticket.

He told me that I was being uncooperative and that I should be restrained. He handcuffed my left arm with the other cuff facing the wrong direction and attempted to cuff my other arm. I told him that my wrist wouldn't twist like that. He then tried to twist the cuffs on my wrist.

I complained that it was hurting and that he should loosen them before trying again. He ignored me, and kept trying, until he decided it would be best to loosen the cuff. He handcuffed both arms and grabbed my book bag. I asked him about my bike, and he said, "If it's still there when you get back, you can get it then."

The bike fell to the sidewalk and he grabbed my upper arm. I told him that I couldn't walk like that and turned sideways. He grabbed the left cuff and began squeezing to make me turn back around. Up until this point, I had remained relatively calm, but I couldn't see how anything that I had done could garner this type of treatment.

I let him know, in no uncertain terms, that he was hurting my wrist. He squeezed even tighter and pulled upward so that I would have to walk on my tip-toes. Every time I said anything, he would squeeze tighter.

By now, people had started to gather around and watch. Another officer had pulled his car in front of the Union and was walking toward us. I asked the other officer to make him let me go and that I would walk with him. He asked, but got no response. He asked again and this time he let go.

I was taken to the KSU police station and written three tickets. I asked where I was to go to write a complaint about an officer. The officer that detained me said I couldn't do it there, and that I had to take it up with the city. Another officer overheard this and brought me the complaint papers. I was then released, and I discovered that my bike was missing.

I pay $3,729.23 to go to school here. That doesn't include books or supplies, but it does include respect from our University officials. That officer not only forgot that, but also forgot who was paying his salary.

If life on this campus is too relaxed, maybe he should transfer to Los Angeles.

Should be room for bikers and walkers

Dear Editor,

I wish you would extract your heads from the nether regions of your anatomy and take a good long look around before blanketly endorsing new University policies.

Maybe in your daydreams, whether chemically induced or otherwise, it seems "fair" to you to start handing out tickets to people riding a bicycle on a sidewalk. But what has the average biker ever done to you, or anyone else for that matter?

Be perfectly polite, be courteous, yield to pedestrians, ride when there are no pedestrians, and you still get stuck with a fine purely on the assumption of your guilt! This isn't fairness. It is just another application of the good old American nostrum of blame someone else, especially a minority.

Lets face it, many people are afraid to ride a bicycle in the street. Now the University wants to remove bicycles from its walkways.

Message: if you want to hang on to your childhood play toys, you just don't count around here. Why don't you grow up and buy a car!

On any kind of public thoroughfare you want to use, you are going to have to put up with a little bit of rudeness from your fellow travelers. It is true on highways, it's true in hallways, and it is true on sidewalks. If college sidewalks are more hectic than average city paths, it is not because of bikes. Rather, college students are just more rude than the average person.

So you like the idea of fines. Why don't you apply them with real fairness? Fine the people chatting in the middle of a busy walk, obstructing everyone else's way. Fine the five-square packs of sorority sisters that force you off into the grass. How about a $25 fine for kissing in the entrance hall to a University building? Or my favorite, fine people for walking in a marked bicycle lane!

Suggest any of these to the University's regents or the public safety office, and that loud whooshing sound you will hear is the testosterone level dropping through the floor. It's much easier to just clamp down on bicycles; after all, (you guessed it), they don't really count.

So the sidewalks will be safe for your daydreaming. And when you get to the end of your sidewalk, you can climb into your cozy, air-conditioned car, still dreaming. And if you run over a bicyclist, we can all shake our heads and mourn what a terrible waste of human potential. But after all, what business did a bicycle have riding in the streets?

Stop perpetuating stereotypes of black males

ERROL WILLIAMSON

Hello ,I'm a student at Kansas State University with a major in accounting and ... I just happen to be a BLACK MALE!

The black males in America are a dying soul.

Two out of three black males are either in jail or dead. Black-on-black crime is at an all-time high,with gang wars and everything else.

The black male is not at all what the media and television make them out to be.

The black male has so much to offer society as a whole, but is clouded by stereotype... what are we to do?

There are so many aspects about the black male that few know about. For example, and contrary to popular belief, black men do care for and love their families.

Also, not all young black males carry guns everywhere they go ... most of them are very educationally minded.

And just because you may see a large group of young black males does not mean they are in a gang of sorts. Unless they have pocket protectors they are not labeled as scholars. Why is that .... hmmm ...? I wish the next time a black male walks past some little old lady she does not grip her purse for dear life!

But before anyone starts to place the blame on anyone, it is our responsibility. It is not just a problem for the black community.

It's a national problem. The reason the little old lady would grip her purse is because she does not understand the black male as a person, but as just some black guy.

And on the other side of the coin, we, as black males, should stop perpetuating the stereotypes that the bad media puts forth into America's TV sets.

If we act as we wish to be treated, that would be the first step in ending this downward spiral.

If you are someone who has fear of black males, destroy those fears by just saying hello. They won't bite you.

We as a nation should disregard any ill-media hype, because you know as well as I do that the media sometimes tells only half the story.

Even when it comes to non-black males.

They say what will bring them ratings, so don't believe the hype.

Black males, as a whole, have so much to offer this nation and our society, so let them show what they can do before you pre-judge.

You never know what you may learn from just saying "hello."

Remember that one cannot learn if one does not open the book don't let the black male be your closed book.

PEACE , LOVE , AND HARMONY.

Errol Williamson is a sophomore in accounting.

Trust, communication make good roommates

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

This is the last in a four-part series on housing at K-State.

Living with another person can be a difficult experience.

Personality and ways-of-living conflicts surface as roommates adjust to one another and can cause strain.

Advice from others who have been through that adjustment and have made it work may help others find the best way to survive a new roommate.

Jennifer Holley, senior in mechanical engineering, and Brandi Fischer, junior in elementary education, have been roommates for a year and seem to have found the recipe for being successful roommates.

Holley and Fischer met through friends in their residence hall two years ago.

"We roomed together because we thought it would be fun," Fischer said.

They said they each had problems with their previous roommates.

The two lived with a third person last year. They said the biggest problem they encountered was space — more specifically, the lack of it.

"We had to establish where to put everything," Holley said.

One thing Holley and Fischer said helped them survive was doing things together.

"We did all kinds of things together, and that helped us get to know each other better," Holley said.

When two people move in not knowing each other, there is a chance the two won't get along. Holley and Fischer said not to expect to be lifelong friends.

"You can't expect strangers to be best friends. The key is to talk about your feelings," Holley said. "You will understand the person better."

"Nothing says you have to be best friends, but you have to be willing to try," Fischer said.

Holley said respect for the other person's feelings is important.

Like most roommates, Fischer and Holley have had some problems beyond the space issue. They said communication is the key to working out those problems.

"You have to let them know when something is wrong," Fischer said.

Communication acts to prevent problems, Holley said.

"If you want to say something, say it," she said.

She said that most of the problems she and Fischer have experienced stemmed from misunderstandings.

"We tried too hard not to hurt each other's feelings," she explained.

Fischer gave other hints to surviving a new roommate. She said finding someone with similar values is important.

"That makes it easier for you to become good friends," she said.

Holley said being totally honest avoids misunderstandings.

"I have tried to be more totally honest about my feelings," she said.

Compromise is important, Holley said. Listening is also a key to new-roommate survival, Fischer said.

"I've had a problem with assuming things from other people's body language, and it has caused problems in the past," she said.

The pair agreed that trust is important as well.

Fischer and Holley said they set no rules as roommates. They said they believe just talking helps them gain a better understanding of each other, and they go on common courtesy from there. They said it has worked well for them.

Holley said the common-courtesy idea is good for roommates who have known each other.

"We just sit and talk about things," she said. "We don't have rules. We just come to an understanding."

Fischer and Holley agree that it may be better for new roommates who don't know each other to make some guidelines.

If two roommates are having problems surviving, Holley said, they should try to work it out themselves first.

"If that doesn't work, (residence hall) staff is always good," she said.

Fischer said friends also can help.

"That's how I got close to my friends," she said. "I leaned on them a lot."

FOOTBALL TICKETS STILL AVAILABLE

There are still tickets available for Saturday, including general admission tickets for $10 and reserved seating for $18. They can be purchased Saturday at the K-State Union and Manhattan Town Center. They can also be bought at 1 p.m. at the KSU Sports Complex East parking lot until 3:30 p.m.

Tailgating is allowed in the parking lots, but tailgaters are encouraged to set up behind their vehicles and dispose of charcoal in the designated red barrels.

K-State rages into season

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The name of the game for the Southwestern Louisiana Ragin' Cajuns is defense.

The Wildcats open the 1994 campaign against the Cajuns at 6:30 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

The Cajun defense ranked third in the nation last year in stopping the rush, allowing a mere 88.6 yards per game.

The Cajuns forced 39 fumbles, picked off 22 passes and recorded 116 tackles for 528 yards lost.

"They will blitz on about one-third of the snaps," Snyder said. "Maybe that's good, because we want to get these guys field tested."

One player to watch is senior all-America safety Orlanda Thomas. Thomas led the nation in interceptions last season with nine.

"They are going to be an aggressive football team on defense," Snyder said.

The Cajuns shared the Big West Conference championship last season with Utah State.

"I see a lot of things I don't like," Snyder said. "It really is a fine football team," Southwestern Louisiana recorded a 8-3 overall mark last year and 5-1 in the conference.

The Cajun football story sounds a bit like the story of the Cats. In 1992, the Southwestern Louisiana posted a 2-9 mark.

The Cajun offense is led by sophomore quarterback Jake Delhomme, who stepped into a starting role in the second half of the season opener and took all but nine snaps the rest of the season.

In the process, he completed 145 of his 259 passes last season for 1,842 yards and 14 touchdowns.

"He has great leadership ability and toughness.," Snyder said. "That is what allows them to be so high on them."

The Cajuns have the size to protect Delhomme as well, with an average offensive-line weight of 291 pounds.

Another factor Snyder addressed was the difficulties of preparing for the first game.

"You can watch film from last season, but the faces change from season to season," Snyder said. "I don't have a clue what they are doing in practice. We don't have spies and I know they don't, either."

Snyder said he has to prepare the offense and defense and every offensive and defensive situation.

"After five games or so, you can look at what other teams are doing in games," Snyder said.

Although most of the starting positions are settled, some positions on the field are still up in the air.

Most notably, linebacker Mike Ekeler appeared on the depth chart Monday ahead of Percell Gaskins.

"No matter what happens with the situation, I'll be pumped up and ready to go," Ekeler said. "I only get excited 11 times a year, and this is one of them."

The 6:30 p.m. kicoff has also added to the concern over the Cajuns.

However, offensive guard Ross Greenwood said the weather will be cooler and he welcomes the change.

GAME-DAY INFO

Date: Saturday, Sept. 3
Kickoff: 6:30 p.m.
Place: KSU Stadium
The opponent: Southwestern Louisiana Ragin' Cajuns
Last season's record: 8-3 (5-1)

Cajuns to watch:
#42 S Orlanda Thomas
#12 QB Jake Delhomme
#54 LB Patrice Alexander
#48 DE Jeff Mitchell
#20 RB Steve Mocek

"The reason for scheduling the night games is partly because of the ESPN game (vs. Kansas Oct. 6)," Snyder said.

Snyder said practices have also intensified in the week leading up to the game and the players are ready to play someone else besides each other.

"I'm just ready to get out on the field and do what I can do," running back J.J. Smith said.

Cats start new era

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The new era of the K-State women's volleyball team begins tonight.

With new coach Jim Moore at the helm, the Wildcats face their first opponent of the year, Ohio University, at 8 p.m.

Four starters return for Ohio and nine letter winners from a 16-25 team. They were 4-5 and placed sixth in the Sunbelt Conference.

"I literally know nothing about the teams," Moore said. "My main focus is on us right now."

The Cats will then meet Stephen F. Austin at 10 a.m. on Saturday and New Orleans at 6 p.m. to finish out the round-robin tournament format.

Stephen F. Austin was 29-11 last year and returns four starters and six letter winners. They placed second in the Southland Conference with a 7-2 record.

New Orleans recorded an 11-19 mark last year. The Privateers have five starters and nine letter winners returning. They were 5-13 in the Mid-American Conference with a seventh-place finish.

K-State has eight returning letter winners from a team that was 7-25 overall. The Cats have one senior, Kathy Wylie.

Also at stake this weekend is K-State's 16-match losing streak, which began against Drake Oct. 9 last season.

"We're wanting to build confidence and to improve throughout the tournament," Moore said.

Players' benches move across Bramlage floor

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The basketball team is getting closer to students.

Bramlage Coliseum will take on a different look this season, Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage said.

Beginning this season, K-State's bench, the visiting team's bench and the scorer's table will be moved from the west side of Bramlage to the east side in front of the student body.

"There are several reasons for the move," Thomas said. "We had some incidents with disabled persons, and it is something coach (Tom) Asbury wanted to do."

Previously, there wasn't sufficient room for wheelchairs to pass between the press rows and the scorer's table on the west side. The press rows will remain in the same place.

Thomas said disabled persons who need access to the floor can enter Bramlage through the main concourse and take the elevator to the floor.

Another reason for the move, Thomas said, was K-State's image during television coverage.

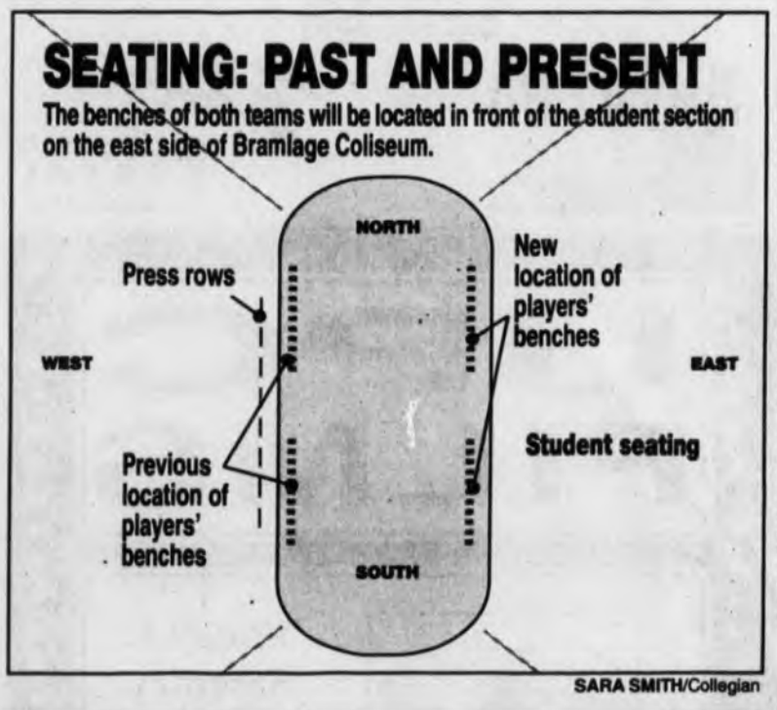
"Before, when the cameras scanned around the huddles, all you could see was the press row," Thomas said. "Now we'll be able to see students going crazy behind the huddles."

The students' floor seats will be removed to allow room for the players' benches.

"Coach Asbury is a pro-student coach," Thomas said.

Jeff Peterson, student body president said the moving of the benches is positive and will add to the home-court advantage at Bramlage.

"We have a new coaching staff and this is a great opportunity for the students to get right behind the players and make a lot of noise," Peterson said.



One problem with the move is stricter security standards to prevent students from throwing debris on the visiting team's players.

One tradition which may stop is the tradition of shaking newspapers and throwing them onto the court before the game after starting line-up introductions.

"We have to be very cautious about showering the visiting players with debris," Thomas said.

SEATING: PAST AND PRESENT

The benches of both teams will be located in front of the student section on the east side of Bramlage Coliseum.

Football pointers given to the women who want to know about the game

Football season is right around the corner, and I'm thrilled.

Maybe it's because I've been deprived of both baseball and George Brett the last three weeks, but I'm dying to be a football freak on the weekends, watching college games on Saturday, the NFL on Sunday and ESPN in between.

But before the season officially begins, I'd like to take this opportunity to educate a particular group of people before they ruin the games for others — women who have no clue about football.

If this sounds like you or someone you love, you may want to clip this out and share it.

This is something that's bothered me ever since my years as high school cheerleading captain for my beloved Pleasantville, Iowa, Trojans.

It never failed. Every Friday night, as I stood on the sidelines intently watching our mighty Trojans and trying to think of an appropriate cheer, one of my well-meaning but clueless cheering buddies would decide to start a defense cheer when we were on offense, or vice versa.

Even today, I see this going on, in the stands at college and high-school games.

With their constant questions about who's got the ball, what's a down, who's playing, etc., many women unknowingly annoy the heck out of their boyfriends or any men they happen to be sitting by.

This is exactly why I've come up with a female-friendly football guide that includes the real definitions of some basic football terms, accompanied by an explanation any woman should understand.

The quarterback — this player is basically the key to any offense. He is responsible for calling many of the team's plays that take place in the game, and he must have a good understanding of the offense, defense, passing, running and counting.

I'll sum this position up in two words — Troy Aikman. If you haven't seen or heard of him, I'd say you're a lost cause.

The center — this player's main job is to hike or hand the football to the quarterback at the beginning of each play. He must have good hands, good ears, and be built like a tank.

NICOLE POELL

This is the guy many of you laugh at because of the funny way he squats over the ball before the handoff. Hey, the quarterback doesn't enjoy the view either, but he's just doing his job.

Guards and tackles — first, the guards. They're positioned on each side of the quarterback, and their primary duty is to guard the QB from the rush of defensive linemen. Tackles are positioned outside the guards, and they usually end up blocking the largest defensive players.

These boys are BIG and have a tendency to scare small children.

Ends — there are two types: tight ends and split ends. Tight ends should be big and be good blockers, while split ends are usually fast runners with good hands.

Just remember, tight end doesn't refer to how the guy's pants fit, and split end has nothing to do with hair.

Halfbacks — most teams designate one halfback as a running back and the other as a flanker.

The running back must be fast, agile and able to catch. The flanker is also referred to as a wide receiver, and he also must be quick and have good hands.

These are the guys who usually run with the ball and catch the ball. If you see a guy running back and forth before each snap, it's probably the flanker. No, he hasn't forgotten where to stand, he's "in motion."

As for the defensive players, just remember that their primary goal is to make the opposing quarterback run for his life on every play.

So please, ladies, for your boyfriend's sake, for your own sake, for the love of the game, learn football.

Monkeys and musicians.

An unlikely combination, but on Sept. 5, the two will be brought together when Sunset Zoo plays host to the Fifth Annual Cool Cats Jazz Festival.

Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director for the Sunset Zoological Park, said the music will kick off at noon with the Mike Metheny Quartet, followed by Wasted Potential at 1 p.m., the Manhattan Jazz Orchestra with James Williams at 2 p.m., the Bill Lee Trio at 3 p.m. and the Jay McShann Quartet at 4 p.m.

Fenstermacher said the festival has grown.

"This year, there will be three major performers," Fenstermacher said. "James Williams is coming from a Chicago jazz festival straight here to perform, and we're really lucky about that. Mike Metheny is from Kansas City and has recorded solo albums, and Jay McShann was nominated for a Grammy award."

For the price of regular zoo admission, $2 for adults and $1 for children ages 5 to 12, the public will be able to watch all five performances as well as have access to all of the regular zoo attractions, Fenstermacher said.

She said there will be Cool Cat face painting for children who would like to look like cheetahs, snow leopards or tigers. She also said big cat posters will be given away to the first 200 children to walk through the gate.

Bill Lee, jazz pianist and executive director of the International Association of Jazz Educators, said the event will be well-suited for all ages.

"For families with children, it's a wonderful opportunity to get them outdoors and let the people try to decipher the musicians from the animals," Lee said.

Lee said it is more important to see jazz live, rather than listen to it on a CD or a cassette.

"The average person whose ears are not trained thinks jazz sounds better live because there's more excitement generated. Jazz is always exciting live because people improvise and there's a greater chance of their making a mistake," Lee said.

"It's just like at an athletic contest — you're never sure who's going to drop the ball," he said.

Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies at K-State, said because of its size, the festival will be a good opportunity for people to personally interact with the performers.

"This festival is not so big that people won't have access to the artists," Wilson said. "Jay McShann is coming. He's a legend. He's also a very nice man, and people can actually go right up to him — he won't shun them away."

Wilson, who performed at the 1991 festival, said everyone will benefit from attending.

"There's something to be gained that you can't put a name on. You become a better person," Wilson said. "It's outside. It's live. Everyone's happy. The monkeys are screaming. The lions are roaring. It's fantastic."

Food for the event will be provided by the zoo's Watering Hole and The Little Apple Brewing Co. Ian West, co-owner of Little Apple, said the brewery's participation in the festival will not stop when the zoo closes.

"We're not only the sole catering vendors, but we're also having an after-blow party here at the Little Apple," West said. "The Mike Metheny Quartet will be playing from 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. People can come straight from the jazz festival at the zoo when it closes at 5 p.m., to the jazz club."

West said the quality of beer, food and atmosphere at Little Apple fits in well with jazz.

"A lot of the other musicians who played at the zoo and people who didn't have the opportunity to play will be coming here. We'll have a major jam session, which should be fun for jazz fans."

DEAR CASSIE,

Throw some chalk at professors

Dear Cassie,

Why is it that most teachers tend to lead students (in their first day of class) to that quiet, infinite space zone where the teachers ask for questions with a pause of about five seconds, and then turn their backs on the students and proceed to chalk away at the chalkboard?

I mean, can you explain the discipline of thought that is supposed to respond in this context?

Signed,

Wondering, Wondering, Wondering...

Dear Wondering,

Some techniques used by professors here at K-State will always remain a mystery. This may be one of them. I don't see much point in asking questions to the students if they aren't going to stick around and hear the answer. Maybe the guy snoring in the front row was a big hint to your professor that he/she wasn't going to get an answer.

The next time a professor asks a question, be the first person to blurt out the answer at the top of your lungs. Throw a chunk of chalk at him. Light her eraser on fire. That ought to catch their attention.

'Killers' gives look at serial-killer psyche

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

You've got to hand it to Oliver Stone. He has taken a fairly simple premise, the escapades of two serial killers, and found a unique way of telling their story.

To the public, "Natural Born Killers" Mickey and Mallory (Woody Harrelson and Juliette Lewis) are legends. To the media, they are ratings. To each other, they are their own private sitcom.

Plagued with horrifying nightmares and memories of their troubled childhoods, the duo embark on a trail of merciless, violent killings. The effect of their cold-blooded killing is something of which they are ignorant, as their world consists of delusions of grandeur.

Stone captures Mickey and Mallory's respective imaginations and warped concepts of reality. Animation and sitcom-like storytelling of their adventures further elaborately illustrate just how messed up these people are. We get inside their heads. "Natural Born Killers" is admirable for these technical elements. It is fresh and thought-provoking filmmaking.

Harrelson, who has been light on acting in the past (I give you "Indecent Proposal" and "The Cowboy Way."), puts all doubts to rest. He becomes the tormented Mickey. It is his strong, frightening performance that is assuredly impressive in the film.

Lewis, having become somewhat typecast as a dim-witted girlfriend to so many screen characters, plays Mallory convincingly, although in so much the same manner she used in "Kalifornia."

Robert Downey Jr. plays a sensationalistic reporter on the search for Mickey and Mallory's inside story. Downey's Australian accent is believable, and his performance is formidable. As Wayne Gale, Downey makes us aware of the media's progressive lack of news judgment.

Tommy Lee Jones co-stars in the film as Dwight McClusky, a slimy prison warden with the compassion of a rock. His acting is standard and nothing tour-de-force, but this is perhaps due to the deliberate stereotyping of his character.

At times, this film, despite some excellent performances, specifically from Harrelson and Downey, screens like a Levi's commercial. It is tiresome watching endless flashes of animation and collages of video.

Stone climbs aboard the popular-culture bandwagon of MTV-style cinematography to make his point. That is also the beauty of the film — its creepy, flashy, MTV-style examination of the psyche of serial killers.

This is exaggerated filmmaking that works. "Natural Born Killers" makes a mockery of American culture by ridiculing those in the public and media who have become infatuated with and begun glamorizing the lives of murderers.

Smatterings

BY ANDREW TOMB

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

Only 50 cents? It could solve all our problems

In light of the recent 50-cent overcharge Student Governing Association blessed the students with this semester, we here at Smatterings decided to come up with a wish list to help our student leaders spend the money in a responsible manner.

■ Erect a memorial statue to the squirrels rumored to have been recently relocated from campus. It could become a huge tourist attraction on par with the world's largest prairie dog and ball of twine.

■ Have student senators stand out in front of the K-State Union distributing cans of pop to the studepts.

■ Sponsor an all-administration bluegrass jam. I hear Bill Muir, assistant to the vice president of institutional advancement, plays a mean banjo.

■ Have Willie Nelson come to campus and play a benefit concert for needy college students. We could call it "Financial Aid."

■ Buy a really big can of bug killer for the bugs infesting Seaton Hall.

■ Seed money for the new K-State Lottery.

■ Donate the money toward construction of the Ed Skoog memorial parking garage.

■ Give it (in nickels and dimes) to the people who write parking tickets so they can feed the meters for those folks who need a little more time.

■ Have SGA start an Amway distributorship. All profits could be siphoned to pave the entire campus.

'So what if I'm blind, the kids gotta go to school'

A legally blind woman was ticketed by Annapolis, Md. police for driving her children to school in a golf cart.

"It's my only transportation," Kathy Harkum said. "I can't take my kids to school or go to the bank or the store without it."

Harkum was cited Monday for driving an unregistered vehicle.

Golf carts can't be registered because they lack rearview mirrors, seat belts, windshields, doors, backup or turn signals, and therefore don't meet safety standards.

Officer Edward Anthony said it wasn't just the fact that Harkum was driving a golf cart.

"I've gotten various complaints from people over the last year. Mostly they're about the way she drives, that she drives the cart recklessly," he said.

Harkum said she drives safely, staying to the side of the road so faster drivers can pass.

Harkum said later in a special Smatterings interview that she has since applied to replace the K-State bicycle patrol with her golf cart.

Harkum was overheard saying she thought she could do a great job, and was excited about the prospect of handcuffing people.

Return of Smattering a la Bobbitt. No, really!

John Bobbitt has 15 days in jail to contemplate an attitude problem after being convicted of beating his former fiancée.

Bobbitt also will have to attend impulse control and Alcoholics Anonymous meetings. He was found guilty of battery Wednesday for striking Kristina Elliott after a night of drinking.

Bobbitt, 27, met Elliott, 21, while in Las Vegas on a publicity tour. The couple and their friend, Todd Biro, were cited for domestic battery after Elliott said she was beaten by the two men July 2. Bobbitt was the only one charged because the district attorney's office said he was the primary aggressor.

Bobbitt did not testify at the two-day trial. He appealed to the judge for leniency Wednesday, saying all the facts had not come out.

Elliott left town Wednesday after testifying and could not be reached for comment.

In a secret, informal conversation with Smatterings that really did not occur, Bobbitt said that he just wanted the women of the world to know that he was availible now and still has the right stuff.

We know, John, we know ...

WEEKEND

Students find many ways to come up with

Quick Cash

Money, money money. It's the name of the game, and the one most often played by students.

It's the beginning of a semester and students' pocket books are in serious pain after paying for tuition, fees, books and football season tickets. Not to mention that it's the first of the month and rent is due, again.

In an attempt to survive, students turn to various ways of obtaining quick cash.

Some of the legal ways include selling compact discs and video tapes.

At Lair Gauche, Larry Potter, owner, buys used compact discs and VHS movies for $3 or $4.

Potter has also set up a buy, sell or trade system for those students who like to change around their collections without big expenses.

"It's a system designed to work and be fun for everybody," Potter said. "No one takes care of mom and dad, grandma and grandpa or students anymore."

Lair Gauche is a second-hand store that buys virtually everything.

Since the store opened two years ago, it has accumulated enough compact discs, movies, rock videos, military clothes and boots, toys and furniture to fill two levels of floor space and shelves.

"Students sell most of their stuff when they are moving, and when they are getting ready to graduate," Leo Henderson, owner of Aggies New To You, said. "But in the last three weeks, we sold 27 sets of couches, mostly to students moving back."

Henderson said students mostly come in toward the weekends.

"What they'll do is put a bunch of CDs together that they don't want, bring them down here to sell, and then they use the money to throw a party," Henderson said. "A lot of the guys do it for drinking money. I'm sure of that."

Henderson offers $2 for each compact disc but said he only takes them in bulks of 10 or more. Purchasing a compact disc ranges from $3 to $6.

"If we have popular items like Led Zepplin, Pink Floyd or Metallica, we'll pay $2.50 because they're faster-moving items," he said.

Henderson said he pays $5 for Levi's 501 jeans, but "they go fast so it's hard to keep them stocked."

Students can earn up to $16 for selling their Levi's 501 jeans at a little yellow trailer parked at Third Street and Fort Riley Boulevard. It is open from 10 to 3 p.m. on Sundays and only buys back the jeans.

Other students go as far as selling their own plasma to earn $15.

Lisa Studnicka, manager of NABI BioMedical Center at 1130 Garden Way, said students provide probably 60 percent of the plasma donated.

There are requirements to be a donor and a small process students go through in order to donate and make the money.

"They have to have proof of local address, be from 125 miles around Manhattan, 18 years old and weigh 110 pounds," Studnicka said. "The whole process takes 1-1/2 hours. We play movies all day long, and some students study while they are in here."

Students can make $30 a week by donating plasma because Studnicka said donations can be made twice in seven days, as long as there are 48 hours between each visit.

Vickie Schmitz, senior in secondary education, is what the staff calls a regular. She said she started giving three years ago and has come here twice a week ever since, including the summer.

"I started because I wanted the cash, and I thought it sounded easy," Schmitz said. "Most of what I make here goes to pay my monthly bills."

Donating plasma has become a habit for Schmitz.

"The quick cash is what keeps you coming back, but after that, it becomes part of a routine," she said. "It's worth it because if I wasn't donating here, I'd be sitting at home watching television."

Greg Rossignol, junior in fine arts, said he uses the money he makes twice a week from donating plasma to purchase art supplies for class.

"I give tattoos as my job, so I don't really need the money," Rossignol said. "Look at my arms," he said, displaying his tattoos. "needles don't bother me. I can earn money but help other people."

Rossignol said he takes his money to the laundromat across the street and gets change for the $15 to fill his change drawer.

"If I keep it in change, I don't spend it," he said. "Last Christmas, I took it in and paid off my credit-card bill. I had $270 in quarters."

Some students don't save the money and instead spend it immediately.

Scott Thomas, senior in secondary education, said he has given on and off for two or three years whenever he needed a little extra money.

"A buddy of mine got me a ticket for the Kansas concert down at the Wareham tonight. That's what I'll use this money for," Thomas said.

It doesn't matter what the reason or need is, students search for different ways to earn quick cash.

One of the INDIGO GIRLS

Manhattan resident travels with band, serves as publicist

> Manager of Streetside Records

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

A Manhattan resident left her job as the manager of Streetside Records for two weeks of vacation this summer, but it wasn't to the Bahamas or to Disneyworld.

It was a road trip across the country with the Georgia queens of folk and acoustical music, the Indigo Girls. But life in Eileen Meyer's shoes has always been one adventure after another.

She earned her undergraduate degree at K-State in 1987 in radio/television, spent three years as an officer at Fort Riley and fought in Operation Desert Storm.

After three years as the manager of Streetside, she was asked to serve as a publicist and go on the road with some of the hottest names in acoustical and folk music.

During her time on the tour, she worked as a publicist and a behind-the-scenes promoter for the Indigo Girls' opening act, Caroline Akein, a Georgia-based folk singer.

Akein asked her to come on the tour after Meyer helped advertise her music across the Midwest.

"It all began when some customers came in one day and asked for the CD by the singer who played with the Indigo Girls in Georgia," Meyer said. "I talked with some of my friends on the computer network and started to track down the artist."

The compact disc by Akein was a hot item at Streetside and frequently would sell out on the shelf, Meyer said.

"Akein asked me to come along because I had sold so many CDs in an area where she had never even played before," she said.

Driving all night, living out of a suitcase and experiencing the energy of a sold-out concert was all part of her two weeks on the road with the bands.

"Every night, the concerts were sold out," Meyer said. "I think it's one of the top tours happening right now, but it's not very widely known because women with guitars never get the press."

Meyer was responsible for making the concert visible in the towns where the Indigo Girls and the opening acts would be performing.

From July 8-13, she worked on securing publicity spots on radio stations and distributing CDs to music stores across Ohio and Michigan. She traveled with the band in Colorado Aug. 11-14.

She didn't ride on the bus with the Indigo Girls, but drove her car from town to town so she could work on spreading the word about the concert before the Indigo Girls and the opening acts arrived.

"It was so exciting going into a new town and getting to see the different sizes of the towns on the entertainment side," Meyer said. "When you walk into a town, they are ready for you and want to help."

She said she now has a new-found respect for musicians.

"It's a lot harder than it looks," she said. "It is phenomenal that they would have enough energy to be up on the stage six nights a week, be away from home for a month and be living out of a suitcase the whole time."

Meyer said it was a wonderful experience to get the opportunity to work with Akein and the Indigo Girls.

"They are some of the most generous and loyal people to their friends and fans that I've had the pleasure of ever meeting," Meyer said.

She said she now has a new view of the music industry after touring with the bands.

"It's gone from cynical to hopeful, especially with artists like Amy (Ray) and Emily (Saliers)," she said. "It's good to know that there are people out there that are doing it for the art and not for the money."

Meyer said Akein gave the Indigo Girls their first big break and is now opening for them.

"Amy and Emily came to Caroline because she was known as the matron of Atlanta music," Meyer said. "She got them into bars to perform before they were even old enough to be in a bar."

Meyer said there are no bad feelings between Akein and the Indigo Girls.

"There's no bitterness because they're friends. They're cool with each other on-stage and react well to each other musically," she said. "It's impressive to watch them."

Meyer said Akein is commonly referred to as the "third Indigo Girl" because she performs with Ray and Saliers on-stage and has written songs for them.

The Indigo Girls, as well as Akein, have an incredible following, Meyer said.

"Some fans buy tickets to every concert and follow them to all the different cities. The fans also give them all kinds of presents like necklaces, books and T-shirts, and the Indigo Girls never throw any of their gifts away," Meyer said. "They love their fans."

Their music is empowering, she said, waving her hands in the air.

"It's very get-up-and-dance, happy dancing music," she said.

Meyer said the Indigo Girls' fans loved Akein and were amazed they hadn't heard of her before.

"She does amazing things with the guitar," she said. "She never puts it down."

Finance committee added to Ag Council

BROOKE GRABER FORT
Collegian

Ag Council is beginning the academic year with a new set of objectives.

President Travis Ellis said the objectives were written at a one-day retreat, which was held at the KSU Foundation.

The new objectives are to have 85-percent attendance at meetings, have the Executive Council visit one club within the College of Agriculture each month, post the minutes after meetings in Waters Hall and to have a printed agenda at the meetings, he said.

Ellis said the council has a retreat at the beginning of each fall semester to set goals and tell new members about the duties of council members.

Shane Mann, junior in agriculture technology, said each club within the College of Agriculture elects one representative to serve on the council.

"Ag Council helps students by bringing all of the clubs together and increasing the awareness of other departments of the College of Agriculture," Shannon Alford, sophomore in agriculture economics, said.

Treasurer Don Beasley said the council is allocated money through Student Governing Association.

The council is going to establish a finance committee that will be in charge of the allocation of money for special projects, Beasley said.

Adviser John Riley said some special projects that the council has are professional speakers and field trips.

Katie Thomas, junior in agricultural journalism, said Ag Careers Day will be Nov. 5.

Ellis said the careers day is a way of recruiting high school and transfer students.

Riley said that 600-700 students normally attend Ag Careers Day.

Ellis said the council tries to schedule the careers day when there is a home football game.

Ellis said the attendance at Careers Day was down last year because there was not a home game.

Thomas said students that attend Ag Careers Day will receive a free lunch and will be seated together during the football game.

Students get to see two departments within the college during the career day, she said.

The next meeting of the Ag Council will be Sept. 15.

Non-greek appointed as adviser

Davis said he is scared of covert racists. "I don't know they are there," he said.

However, Davis said he will spend a moment and share his viewpoints with racists to influence them in some way.

"That is all I can do. Beyond that, I deal with them as human beings."

Davis said his appointment as an adviser to the council is unusual.

"My position works to my advantage. I am not a greek. I have a non-biased influential advisory position, and I will be more broad-minded and open," he said.

Davis said he is no foreigner to students. He has lectured college and high school students about public speaking and entrepreneurships.

"I can share ideas and interact with minorities and non-minorities," he said. "I wear my ethnicity proudly, but not with a chip on my shoulder."

Davis has a bachelor of arts in voice performance from the Julliard School in New York City and said he plans to work with United Black Voices, a gospel group on campus.

Davis said he asks himself three personal questions on a regular basis.

"'Who am I? Why am I here? Where am I going?' These questions are a part of all aspects of my life," he said.

U.S., Cuba fail to reach agreement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — U.S. and Cuban officials reached no agreement Thursday in talks seeking to halt the flood of Cuban rafters trying to reach Florida.

The sides decided to meet again Friday, changing the venue from the U.S. mission to the United Nations to Cuba's mission.

The U.S. side described the talks as serious, professional and businesslike. The Cuban side did not comment immediately.

Although Cuba wanted to broaden the agenda to discuss easing the U.S. economic embargo and other issues, the United States insisted on a limited agenda of migration issues.

Both sides made initial presentations and the United States focused on migration, U.S. law enforcement and returning Cuban criminals now in U.S. jails, David Johnson, a spokesman for the U.S. delegation, said after talks recessed Thursday.

He did not elaborate about the criminals but he apparently referred to the 1,397 Cubans in U.S. prisons and jails, who arrived 14 years ago in the Mariel boatlift that brought 125,000 Cubans to the United States.

Criminals also are said to be among the 19,000 Cubans who fled their homeland last month in an exodus that prompted the talks.

After a working lunch, Johnson said, the United States discussed details of how to reach "a mutual objective ... handling the desire to immigrate in an orderly predictable and dependable process, and stemming the uncontrollable outflow" of refugees.

Cuban diplomats said their government had ordered them not to talk with reporters while the negotiations continued, but delegation leader Ricardo Alarcon appeared on U.S. television.

In an interview on NBC's Today show Thursday, Alarcon again said that ending the 32-year U.S. embargo against Cuba was crucial to ending the exodus.

"A number of Cubans now feel compelled to get out of the country, which is suffering from many external factors ... due to the economic embargo ... If we are seriously going to find a solution, we cannot ignore the specific circumstances in which this so-called exodus is taking place."

A half-dozen Cuban protesters gathered outside the U.S. mission chanting "Liberty" and "The problem with Cuba is Fidel." Security was tight at the 10-story building across from U.N. Headquarters. Concrete barricades were installed years ago to prevent car bombings.

The talks focused on the flight of Cubans in the past month. The exodus began when President Fidel Castro responded to Aug. 5 riots in Havana by suggesting he would no longer stop Cubans trying to leave..

Coast Guard and U.S. Navy ships picked up 2,159 Cubans at sea Wednesday in flimsy rowboats, crude rafts and sailboats. More were being taken on ships Thursday. All will be taken to a camp set up at the Navy's base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba.

Entering the talks, Michael Skol, the chief U.S. delegate, rejected suggestions from Cuba that the discussions look at a wide array of subjects, such as lifting the U.S. economic embargo.

"I've got a briefing book here, and it is on migration issues only. There's nothing here about embargo, about economics, or about anything else," he said.

Cuba contends the refugees are fleeing for economic and not political reasons. U.S. officials blame Cuba's communist policies for its economic hardships.

Alarcon, a former ambassador to the United Nations and a senior policy advisor to Castro, won a fight two years ago to get the U.N. General Assembly to pass a non-binding resolution criticizing an expanded U.S. embargo. Even some U.S. allies joined in repudiating Washington's effort to weaken the Cuban economy.

Phi Kappa Tau
CANNON CREW

The Children's Heart Foundation was established in 1985 to help children and youths who have heart diseases or other conditions which require transplants. The Phi Kappa Tau Cannon Crew is on a mission to help save the lives of those children who need our support. For the third year, every time the Cats score, our cannon on the hill roars to support the children's Heart Foundation. You can help save a child's life by purchasing a CANNON CREW t-shirt at all home football games.

Fund considered for surplus money to spend it just as an activity fee and we don't want to allocate it group by group by group, because it may not reach everybody," Wheeler said.

Legislation is being considered to establish a student-life enrichment account that will be supervised by the Student Governing Association treasurer and the Student Affairs and Social Services committees. All surplus fees would be placed in it. Senate is to take a vote next week.

"Unfortunately, we can't stand outside the Union and refund every student their 50 cents," Wheeler said.

"But we believe that the best way to return the students' money is with this account. Our goal is to take this money and organize a campus-wide effort."

Should the bill pass, Student Senate will be conducting forums and providing suggestion cards as to what should be done with the funds within the next several weeks, Wheeler said.

▶BOOKS SPARK KANSAS BAN ATTEMPTS

WASHINGTON — An advocacy group documented six instances of attempted censorship in Kansas public schools last year, several of them centering on two books dealing with homosexuality.

Arthur Kropp, president of the liberal People for the American Way, said the religious right is behind many of the 462 challenges in 46 states.

Washington-based People for the American Way documented the incidents either through responses to questionnaires or through direct contact with those involved.

In Kansas, objections were raised to the books "Annie On My Mind" by Nancy Garden and "All-American Boys" by Frank Mosca, both of which were donated to school systems to portray homosexuals in a positive light.

Purple Santa wins 3rd

Third-place winner was Doug "the purple Santa" Ackley, assistant controller of cashiering and student loans.

Not only was he dressed in a purple Santa suit, beard and all, his sidekick was a red, plastic reindeer.

With the help of Santa's wire remote controller, the reindeer wobbled across the stage and, later, through the crowd.

Ackley began with a clever joke.

"What does the state of California and the Minute Maid Corporation have in common? They both got O.J. in the can," Ackley said.

He ended by making the crowd guess which bowl the Cats were going to. After a few hints, he threw oranges into the crowd.

"I enjoy being Santa. The kids love it. It's the kids' reactions that I enjoy," Ackley said.

There were mixed feelings about the contest. Many said they enjoyed the new addition, but there were some who said they disliked it and thought it should not have been a part of the Purple Power Play.

Jay Payton, who works at the press box during football and basketball games, said he didn't enjoy the contest, and this year, the rally was noisier than in the past.

"I did not think the contest should have been a part of the Power Play," he said. "I really did not care for it. I was waiting for the band."

However, Antoinette Gant, junior in criminal justice, said she thought the Purple Power Play was a success.

"This was my first time coming, and I think it turned out nicely. I did not think there would be so many people," she said.

Norma Lawrence, secretary at sports information, said she felt this year there were more people and more enthusiasm than in previous years.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

14th District judge to swear in cousin on same bench

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Nancy Parrish remembers Jim Buchele as the older cousin who was more like a big brother and taught her to jitterbug.

Buchele remembers Parrish as the first-born of his favorite aunt, a bright girl who always excelled at everything she did.

Buchele hopes to sometime this fall administer the oath of office as Parrish is sworn in as Shawnee County's 14th District Court judge.

Gov. Joan Finney selected Parrish, who's been state secretary of revenue for the past two years, to fill a new judgeship created by the 1994 Legislature.

Probably more unusual than having two first cousins serving together on the district court bench is the fact both come from such a small town.

They were born and reared in Cedar Vale, a community of 850 people some 30 miles east of Arkansas City in Chautauqua County, near the Oklahoma border.

Their fathers, Julian and Paul Buchele, were partners in a family farming and ranching operation. Both Parrish and Buchele graduated from Cedar Vale High School, earned degrees from K-State and got law degrees from Washburn University.

Both served in the Legislature as Democrats representing Topeka districts.

Buchele, seven years older than Parrish, says he remembers the day — Nov. 9, 1948 — she was born.

"She was her parents' first child, and everyone was very excited," he recalled. "Until she was born, her dad didn't have any kids, so he took me with him a lot."

Parrish's mother, the former Vergie Bryant of Arkansas City, was like a second mother to Buchele, he said.

"She was someone whom I always went to for counsel, particularly in the adolescent years, when you sometimes don't get along too well with your own parents," he said.

"Nancy's mother was a very, very strong woman. It was probably Nancy's mother who was the first Democrat in our family."

Parrish said Buchele was sort of a mentor as he grew up.

"He was really like a big brother. I was the oldest of four girls, and he took on the role of older brother for me and my sisters," she said.

"He taught me how to jitterbug, and he helped us in 4-H."

One of Parrish's sisters, Carol Bonebrake, is an attorney in private practice in Topeka and formerly was a lawyer for the revenue department.

Parrish earned an education degree from K-State and taught for 11 years in the Topeka school system. She married Jim Parrish in 1970, which set in motion a political career she never expected to have.

Jim Parrish was elected to the Kansas House in 1972, succeeding Buchele, who had held that seat since 1965.

Buchele gave it up for an unsuccessful run at a judgeship. He lost to Kay McFarland in a 1972 Shawnee County judge's race, before the county went to the nonpartisan judge-selection system.

McFarland later was appointed to the Supreme Court.

Jim Parrish, also an attorney, was elected to the state senate in 1974, and held that seat until he resigned in January 1980 to take a job in private business. He was state Democratic Party chairman in the late 1980s.

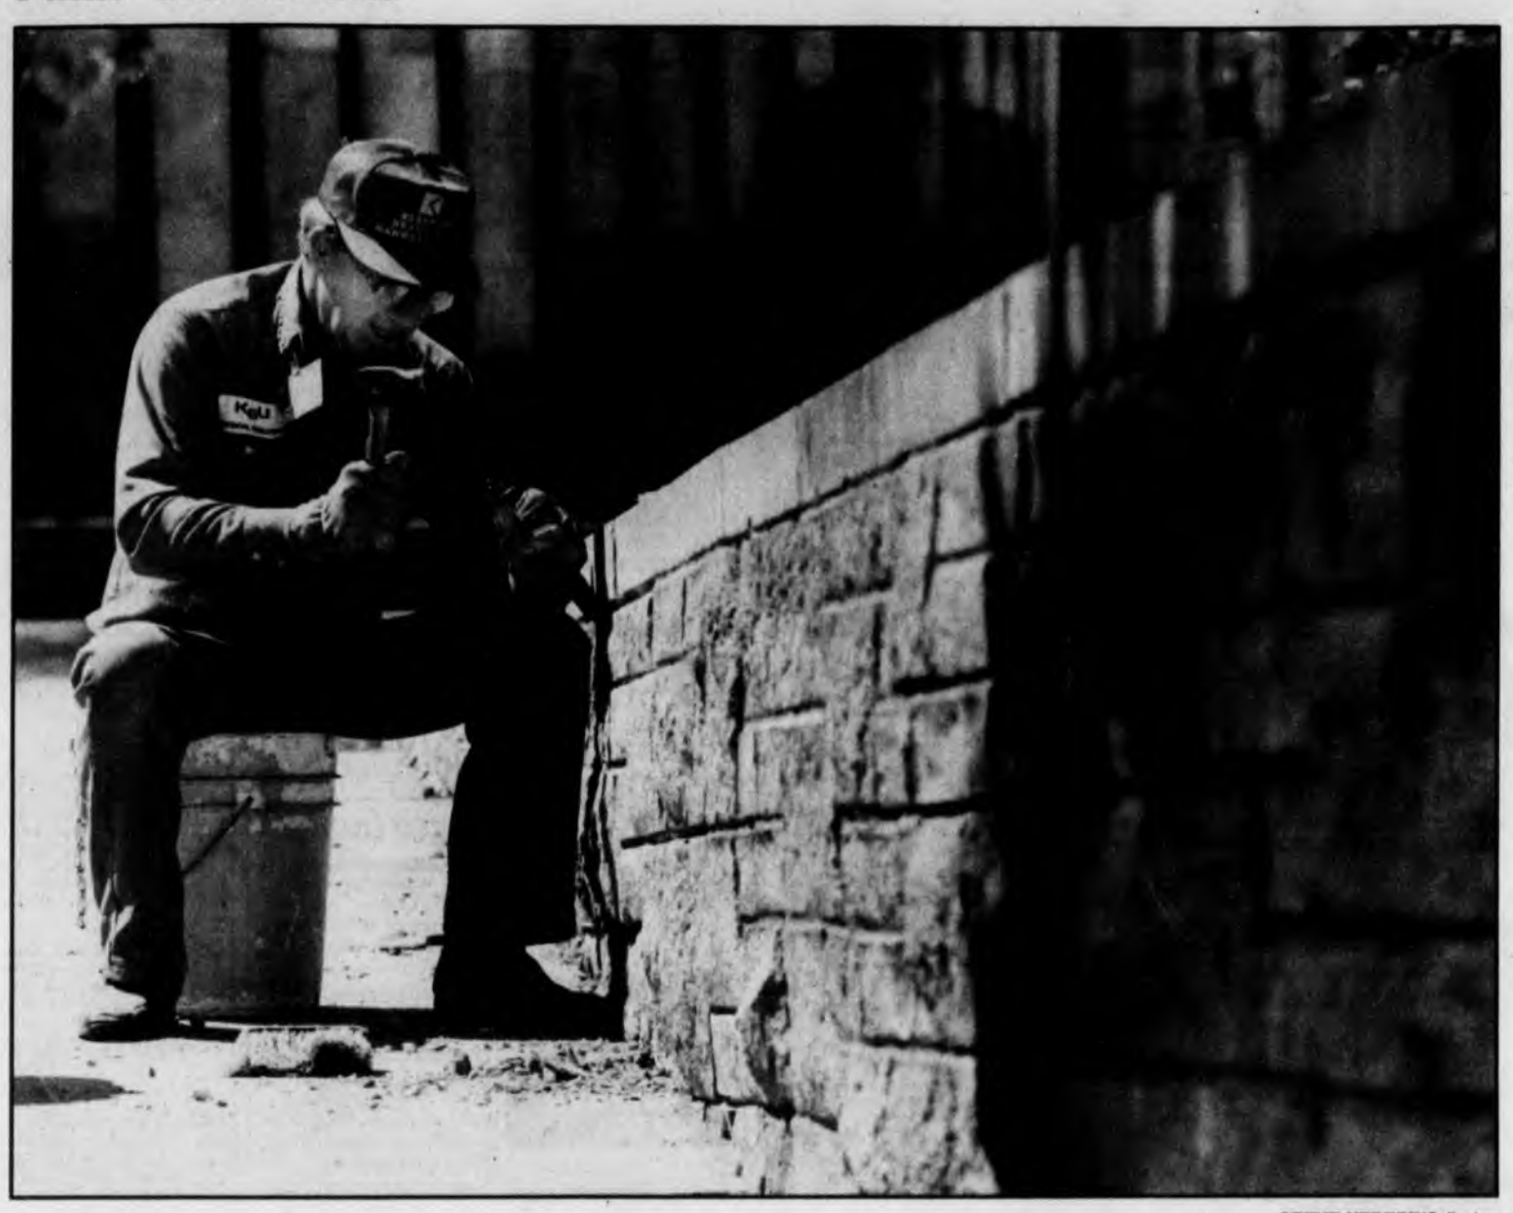
Parrish was named to replace her husband in the Senate for the 1980 session, and then won the seat herself that fall and was re-elected in 1984 and 1988.

She resigned in July 1992 to accept appointment by Finney to the state Board of Tax Appeals. Six weeks later, the governor made her secretary of the Revenue Department.

"They gave me a medal for the shortest tenure ever on the Board of Tax Appeals," she said.

Parrish earned her law degree from Washburn in 1984 and was admitted to the bar in 1985.

"I credit my husband for that," she said. "He encouraged me."



"Really, if you had asked me what I was going to do when I was 20, I'd have said I'd teach the rest of my life," Parrish said.

"My life has taken some real turns, but it's been great. I was more interested in psychology and social services in high school. But I wound up going into education.

"I think I'm certainly a bit in awe of the responsibility a judge has, particularly in the areas I will be assigned.

"Those decisions have a real lasting impact on people's lives."

Student re-admitted after harassment case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SWARTHMORE, Pa. — A Swarthmore College student who was paid by the school to go to college elsewhere after a classmate accused him of harassment will be re-admitted, the vice president said.

Ewart Yearwood said he hasn't decided if he'll attend, his attorney said. Classes started Thursday.

But Alexis Clinansmith, 19, who sued to block him from being readmitted, will stay enrolled, Carolyn Short, her attorney, said.

"We are highly disappointed that the school did not live up to its obligation to enforce its policy in the handbook and to keep the school free of sexually harassing environment," Short said Thursday.

Clinansmith alleged last fall that Yearwood, who was at Swarthmore on a full scholarship, stalked and intimidated her after she repeatedly refused to date him. Yearwood denied the allegations.

A disciplinary committee couldn't decide whether Yearwood had harassed Clinansmith but said he had violated a school order to stay away from her. It recommended that he be suspended.

Meanwhile, the college paid his tuition to attend Boston University, where he spent the spring semester.

Yearwood had a two-hour interview Monday with a special committee at Swarthmore appointed to review his case. It found he had fulfilled all the requirements imposed on him by the college, including special counselling, vice president Harry Gotwals said.

Getting mellow at the Zoo

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

The Cool Cats Jazz Festival was a place for people to bring children, visit with friends and listen to live jazz under the sun.

More than 3,500 people attended the fifth-annual festival at the Sunset Zoo, Don Wixom, zoo director, said.

College students took time out from studying, and Manhattan residents tapped their feet and bobbed their heads in time to the jazz.

Cool Cats Jazz Fest entertains foot-tappin' Wildcats

Proceeds from the event go to the zoo development fund for projects such as the primate conservation center, Angie Fenstermacher, director of marketing and development for the zoo, said.

Another one of the goals of the festival is to educate the community on what jazz is and what goes into jazz, Fenstermacher said.

One of the biggest advantages for the public was the great price, she said.

Admission was $2 for adults and $1 for children between the ages of 4 and 12.

"I'd say that even if you aren't a jazz fan, you can't pass this up," Fenstermacher said.

Linda Uthoff, artistic director for the Columbian Theatre and Art Center in Wamego, said she thought the price was very cheap for the entertainment quality.

In the past, the festival has featured one headliner. This year the zoo was able to get three headliners, James Williams, Mike Metheny and Jay McShann, Fenstermacher said.

Enthusiastic applause greeted the ensembles whether they took the stage in the Pavilion or the Wildlife Theatre.

"I thought they (the crowd) were very supportive and enthusiastic," Mike Metheny of the Mike Metheny Quartet said.

He said they bought his CDs, and he appreciated their support.

During his show, Metheny made a plug for his compact disc, which he sold after his set.

"We're going to play a couple of songs off my most recent CD," he said, and asked the audience to be sure and purchase one if they were interested.

"It's a humiliating experience, but I'm a starving jazz artist," Metheny said.

James Williams played with the Manhattan Jazz Orchestra. Williams is an internationally known keyboardist with more than 10 albums to his name.

"Williams blew in from the Chicago Jazz Festival today. Next week, he'll be recording with Ray Charles," Wixom said.

Wasted Potential and the Bill Lee Trio followed live animal shows in the Wildlife Theater. Playing among the animals at the zoo didn't faze the musicians, though.

"We know the animals got you here, but now that we got you, we're going to keep you," Michael Timothy Brown, cellist for Wasted Potential, said before the show in the Wildlife Theatre.

Live jazz music is thriving in Manhattan, and much of the credit goes to the Little Apple Brewing Co., Charles Faulk, Manhattan resident, said.

"I just moved from Des Moines, and I've never heard such playing," he said.

The strong International Association of Jazz Educators base in Manhattan also contributes to the predominance of jazz in Manhattan, but it doesn't explain the number of jazz musicians, Faulk said.

Dick Wright from the Lawrence public radio station KANU-FM 91.9 put on an educational program on the greats in jazz history and jazz performers at 10:30 a.m., Fenstermacher said.

Wright gathered reel footage of jazz performers and put it on video. The films ran in the Education Center from noon to 4 p.m., she said.

Wasted Potential and the Bill Lee Trio have their own following in Manhattan because they play at the Little Apple Brewing Co., she said.

"I think it's helped our attendance," Fenstermacher said.

The Little Apple Brewing Co. sponsored a Cool Cats Afterglow party. Mike Metheny performed on stage at 6:30 p.m.

▶ PARKING PERMITS

Parking services tracks stolen permits

DAVE KATZER
Collegian

Since the beginning of the semester, 28 student and faculty/staff parking permits have been reported lost or stolen.

Six student permits and one faculty/staff permit have been reported stolen in the first two weeks of class, said Laurie Harrison, communication specialist of the K-State Police.

If you discover your permit is missing, you should contact the parking services first, Dave Amaro, application programmer for the parking services, said.

"We handle it from there. We'll call the officer down to do a report and get all the information from the individual," Amaro said.

Parking services also keeps all the stolen or lost permit numbers in the hand-held ticket-writers that parking officers use, Amaro said.

If one of the lost or stolen permit numbers is run through the computer, the parking officer will be made aware of it immediately, he said.

The vehicle is then impounded, either by wheellock or towing.

When a permit is stolen, instead of just misplaced, the student has to fill out a burglary/theft form in case of possible damage to the vehicle and because breaking into a car is a felony, University detective Richard Herrman said.

If there was no entry to the vehicle, the charge would be possession of stolen property, he said.

Herrman said stolen permits turn up occasionally, but most of the time the accused claim to have found the permit in a parking lot.

"Once the suspect is questioned, the case is turned

Policy offers rape victims alternatives

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

The recent rape of a K-State student has brought sexual violence to the forefront of discussions and newspaper pages on campus.

Safety and awareness, not sensationalism, should be stressed.

"Let everybody have a heightened awareness. That's fine," Susan Scott, assistant dean of student life, said. "You can't have enough safety."

But Scott also said students can have a false sense of security because of information printed about rape. A rape occurring in one location does not mean it is limited to that area.

Rape knows no boundaries, be they time, place, age or the background of the victim, Scott said.

Sexual violence is neither contemporary nor rare. Every minute, 1.3 women are raped, according to statistics from the 1992 National Women's Study. One in four college women have either been raped or suffered attempted rape.

"Is rape about sex, or is it about violence? It's about both," Judy Davis, director of K-State's Women's Resource Center, said.

"Unfortunately, in this culture, sex and violence are all bound up together. Sexual violence is a problem. It's not new," Davis said. "What is news is not sexual violence but our willingness to see it and the way people treat it."

Recognizing sexual violence means providing victims with support and the option to take action against their assailants.

The University formed a task force in 1988 to develop a sexual violence policy.

The policy went into effect in November 1989, making K-State one of the first universities in the nation to have such a policy, Davis said.

The policy was established to provide victims with an alternative to reporting rape to police, she said.

It spells out the University's definition of force, what role the University plays, the acts that the policy can cover, the process of adjudication and the possibility of appeal.

Victims are encouraged by the policy to inform the appropriate law enforcement agency.

However, the likelihood of these reports is low. Only 16 percent of rapes are reported to police,

■ See SEXUAL Page 3

SEXUAL VIOLENCE POLICY

The acts described in the sexual violence policy are prohibited only when they are forced on another person. An act is forced if the victim refuses or if the victim does not verbally or otherwise indicate refusal but:

- is overcome by force or fear;
- is unconscious or physically powerless;
- is incapable of refusing because of mental deficiency or disease; or
- is incapable of refusing because of the effects of alcohol, narcotics, drugs or other substances.

The following acts are covered by this policy, whether attempted or completed:

- Any penetration, however slight, of the female sex organ by a finger, the male sex organ or any object;
- Oral or anal copulation or any penetration, however slight, of the anal opening by any body part or object;
- Touching another person with any body part, substance or object in any sexual context or in a sexual way or to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of the offender or another;
- Disrobing oneself, disrobing another or causing another to disrobe in a sexual context or a sexual way or to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of the offender or another;
- Causing another person to see, hear or become aware of sexual activity or sexually sensitive bodily parts if the intention of the offender is to arouse or satisfy sexual desires of the offender or if the acts would arouse fear in the victim.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ CONSTRUCTION RESTRICTS USE OF CITY PARK UNTIL LATE DECEMBER

Walking through the City Park, visitors have found it to be a sticky, mucky situation.

Construction on the drainage behind Miller Field, located in the City Park, began in early August.

Full use of the park will be possible in late December or early January, however, seeding will begin on Sept. 10, Richard Allen, park planner for Manhattan Parks and Recreation, said.

Construction goal is to have the entire park drain to one central area and alleviate flooding, he said.

"People will not be able to use the ball field, but the walking trail will not be closed," Allen said.

Julie Polson and Theresa Barr, K-State alumna, walk around the park together for exercise on a regular basis and said the construction does not bother them.

"I've had no problem with it, at all," Polson, a secretary in the Department of Counseling and Education Psychology, said. "We walk around the construction. It is worth walking around just to get out here and enjoy the park."

Holes in the construction area are marked with ribbon to warn park visitors, Bob Rogers, vice president of Larson Construction Inc., said. However, he said, the area of the park out of use due to construction is minute.

"I doubt the construction covers 15 percent of the park," Rogers said.

After completion of the new drainage system, the ball field will be in the same place, Allen said.

Other parks available for use include Warner and CiCo Parks.

▶ STUDENTS TO HAVE NONVIOLENT PROTEST OF $25 BIKE-RIDING FINE

If you have a beef with the enforcement of K-State's bike policies and regulations, you can take part in a nonviolent protest tonight.

The hosts of KSDB-FM 91.9's public affairs show, "A Purple Affair," are promoting a safe, non-violent protest at 7 p.m. in the quadrangle behind Willard Hall.

Stephen Seely, "A Purple Affair" co-host, said the idea for the protest came Wednesday night from a caller angry about the $25 fine for riding bikes on the sidewalk and the harsh treatment of a student by a bike patrolman.

"It wasn't really our idea, but we announced it that night," Seely, senior in psychology and pre-law, said.

Seely said the show received about 20 other calls from angry students who said they would support the protest. Protesters should ride their bikes tonight, he said.

"We will go on a little escorted tour of campus with me as the nonviolent protest safety leader," Seely said. "Ride on the grass, because they can't arrest you for riding on the grass."

Seely said "A Purple Affair" was supporting the protest because of the way the University has been taking advantage of students and to support riding bicycles as a solution to the parking problem.

"A Purple Affair," hosted by Stephen Seely, Eric Aucker and Audrey Taggart, airs from 10 to 11 p.m. every Monday through Thursday.

▶ 5-WEEK-OLD FIRE JUMPS RIVER, DESTROYS 2 TURN-OF-THE-CENTURY CABINS

BOISE, Idaho — Firefighters dug in along a back-country creek in central Idaho on Monday after a forest fire destroyed two cabins and jumped the North Fork of the Boise River.

The Rabbit Creek Fire has burned across 98,000 acres of forest about 50 miles northeast of Boise. Fire bosses hoped to contain it on Wednesday.The cabins destroyed by the five-week-old fire were built at the turn of the century during the region's mining boom.

Some 20 miles to the west, the Star Gulch Fire was declared contained Sunday after it swept across nearly 31,000 acres of timber and brush in just over two weeks, destroying one house. Investigators suspect it was caused by humans but have made no arrests.

The Rabbit Creek fire was among nine blazes still out of control in Idaho. Those blazes have charred nearly 400,000 acres and were being fought by 6,500 firefighters and soldiers. In the Payette National Forest south of the main Salmon River, nearly half of those firefighters were still battling three fires with no hope of stopping them before the first heavy snowfall.

▶ QUINTUPLETS REMAIN IN HOSPITAL; CHRISTMAS HOMECOMING ANTICIPATED

MANHATTAN — The parents of four surviving quintuplets born in Topeka this summer are hopeful the babies will be allowed to come home by Christmas.

But Shawn and Joan Morris said during a weekend interview with radio station KJCK-AM/FM in Junction City that doctors don't know when the infants will be ready to leave the hospital.

The quints were born in mid-July at Stormont Vail Medical Center in Topeka. The only boy, Evan, died on July 30.

Three of the quints, Holly, Kasey and Mallory, are listed in serious condition, while Jordan remains critical. Joan Morris, a teacher at Jefferson Elementary School at Fort Riley, stays with the babies at the hospital while her husband continues to do auto body work.

The Manhattan couple said they have insurance but are concerned about a host of other bills. They're also uncertain where they'll live once their four daughters are allowed to go home and what kind of car they 'll use to shuttle their brood.

Sexual assault policy sensitive to victims

according to the 1992 National Women's Study.

"If they don't want to report it to the police, I'm not going to force them to," Davis said.

Reporting to police may be inconceivable to the victim, particularly if the attacker is an acquaintance, which is a great possibility. Eighty-four percent of rapes are committed by someone the victim knows, according to the study.

"There is enormous pressure to keep their mouth shut, especially for women who complain against their peers. It's much, much riskier to name your peers," Davis said.

Thus, the alternative provided by the sexual violence policy was established to provide as painless a procedure as possible and protect the rights of the students involved, Davis said.

Students can file both a police report and a University complaint.

If the case goes to the criminal courts, Davis said, the University can initiate preliminary hearings but can't pursue any action until criminal proceedings are completed.

Sanctions can be imposed if the University deems it necessary or possible after the criminal trial, Scott said.

Students who decide on the University alternative must contact Judy Davis at the Women's Resource Center, or the deans in the student life office, Scott said.

Once contact has been made with Davis or one of the deans, students can review their options. If they opt for the adjudication process, the next step is to write a complaint. The complaint will then be sent to the Dean of Student Life Office.

According to the policy, a review panel will be established next, consisting of the Dean of Student Life or designee, a faculty or staff member and two students currently serving in the judicial branch of the Student Governing Association.

Members selected will not have knowledge of the case or a person involved that would bias them.

First an interview is held with the complainant to obtain a thorough understanding of the complaint.

"It's in a confidential closed meeting," Davis said. "To talk about the intimate details of sexual assault is hard. It's awful. This is much, much more humane than a criminal trial proceeding. The victim never has to face the attacker. It's a gentle and respectful process."

The panel then determines whether the case falls within the jurisdiction of the University.

The University has jurisdiction if the act was committed on its property and at University-sponsored events, according to the policy.

Jurisdiction considerations also include the parties involved. Either both must be students or the attacker must be a student and the victim a guest of the University for the University to be able to take action against the assailant.

"If the rapist is not a student, we can't get him. But if he wanted to go to K-State later, he might have a problem," Davis said.

Throughout the review the complainant and the accused will be fully informed and have the opportunity to present their sides.

If the panel does not determine that a policy violation occurred, then the policy states that both the complainant and accused will receive letters stating the steps that have been taken in the review process and an explanation of the outcome of the review.

However, if the panel determines that there is enough evidence to show that one of the acts violating the policy occurred, then the person whom the complaint was filed against will be called in, as well as other people who can corroborate both sides of the story.

The University can then impose sanctions. The type of sanction depends on the behavior.

"Sanctions can probably be just whatever is imaginable — from moving them out of a dorm to throwing them out of school," Dianne Urban, assistant dean of student life and student attorney, said.

"The University obviously can't inflict corporal punishment, put them in jail or sentence them to the death penalty," Urban said.

The policy hasn't been tested to the point of dismissal, Scott said, but it is a very real possibility.

"Certainly it is the intent of those sanctions to impose dismissal if warranted," she said.

As with any other judicial proceeding on campus, the accused maintains the right to appeal. The initial appeal will be made to the Student Tribunal and any further appeal will be made to the president of the University, Jon Wefald.

The policy is fair to the accused and sensitive to the person who reported an attack, Scott said.

The policy is not without its glitches, however.

Because of miscommunications concerning the policy, the University was found negligent in the sexual assault of a former student.

Shana Nycole Nero was awarded $156,825 in damages by the University.

Nero was sexually assaulted in June 1990 by another student, Ramon Davenport, in Goodnow Hall. Davenport had been charged with the rape of another student, Jennifer Nicholson, on April 28, 1990.

Davenport had not been dismissed from the University because Nicholson hadn't filed a written or verbal complaint with the dean of student life office.

If she had, the University could have investigated the incident further or waited until Davenport had been convicted of the class B felony and expelled from the University.

When Nero filed the complaint, the University recognized it as the first formal complaint, but Davenport was allowed to remain in school until his felony conviction.

Scott declined to comment when asked about specifics of the case because of pending future actions.

"I would love to answer that, but actions are still pending," Scott said.

The University has filed for a motion to grant a new trial or to amend the judgment, Jennifer Kassebaum, University attorney, said. There will be a hearing on the motion at 10 a.m. today in the Riley County Courthouse.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Locked-door policies need residents' OK

Policies concerning safety in the residence halls need to have approval from the residents. If not, they will not work.

Drastic changes in the residence halls' door-locking policies are occurring at an outrageous rate.

For security purposes, Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services, said locking the doors in resident halls would ensure that only residents and guests enter the buildings.

The goal, he said, would be to eventually have all residence halls with a 24-hour locked-door policy. However, the residence halls are a product offered to a customer. And the customers are not happy.

The validine system is a locked-door policy, which students must use a current ID to get into the building.

Although, as Hasan said, the security system will not work if students continue to prop the door open.

Instead, the doors become an unnecessary expense if the students do not comply with the rules. Without the cooperation of residents, the validine system becomes dependent upon the system that is not actually doing its job.

Therefore, to please the customer and maximize security, the residents should help decide what hours the doors will be locked.

One student suggested forming a student-advisory board.

Another option may be to use each hall governing board to set minimum hours the doors may be locked. The residents could vote for any deviations in the hours.

Safety comes with cooperation.

TOLES

Some lives turn because of 'Days'

Last week on "Days of Our Lives," Alan kidnapped Carrie, tied her to a chair and, with a knife to her throat, told her about his abusive childhood.

John, after an afternoon frolic with Kristen, discovered he had been a priest prior to being brainwashed by Stefano (Kristen's adoptive father).

We learned of Peter's plot to send Laura back to the sanitarium for another 18 years. On top of all this excitement, Celeste implanted more into Gina/Hope's memory, so Bo thinks her battle with amnesia, which is going around like the plague in soap-land — "Another World" has a victim, too, is coming to an end.

That many terrible things really couldn't happen to a nicer bunch of semi-related individuals.

OK, if after that opener, you are still with me, then you are one of three types of people: (1) you, too, are open about your soap-opera vice, (2) you are a closet case day-time TV fanatic, or (3) you are curious enough to care.

If you fit into the third category, then look over your right shoulder, your left, count to three and then, after deciding that no one is watching you, fold the paper like you are working today's Cryptoquip. Good. You should be in the clear. No one will suspect that you are spending your time reading about — gasp — soap operas.

Hello, and welcome to the world of day-time television. It is a world full of diet advertisements and broken-wedding vows. A world which desires to parallel our own, but has obvious limitations.

Yes, even though I will admit my soap addiction has motivated me to finally learn to set the timer on my VCR, I will grant the plot line is often, at its best, far-fetched.

But heck, making fun of soaps is half the fun of becoming addicted to them.

As you may have guessed, my soap of choice is "Days of Our Lives." Why do I feel it is necessary to pollute my mind with such poor acting, poorer plot lines, unrealistic settings and wardrobes? I don't know. I just know after a hard day on campus, watching my soap makes me, well, feel better.

I can feel the eyes rolling now. I know, this all sounds like straight cheese. But wait, does it really hurt us to take a little time for ourselves to just sit back, do something frivolous and silly for one hour during all the days of our lives?

For one 45-minute segment of my day (the hour-long episode can be watched in three-fourths of that time when you fast forward through the commercials), I can totally forget about that campus cop who failed to ticket the guy who nearly ran me off of the sidewalk with his 10-speed, tomorrow's two-hour essay test or the wheel-lock on my car.

I can escape and dive into the anti-world of Salem, and I am a happier person for it. It is as good for releasing tension as a tall, cool Pepsi.

Hey, I am not alone. "Days" is the most popular soap in the 18-24 age group. When the stupid grand jury hearings for the O.J. Simpson trial forced NBC to preempt a week's worth of soaps, the network received so many calls they played two episodes during prime time.

Besides forcing me to learn to program my VCR, I have found my knowledge in Salem family history to be beneficial as a ground-breaker when making friends.

You'd be surprised as to whom has an idea what is going on. Anyone can be, or could live with, a soap fan: grandmothers, executives in pinstripes, your dentist. Male or female, it doesn't matter. Soaps don't discriminate (just ask my dad).

When you discover that you share this bond with another living, breathing, thinking human-being, you feel, well, bound to that person for life. You are not alone in your madness, and you will always have something in common to talk about.

"Are you sure she didn't used to be a he?"

Ah, day-time stress release at its finest.

An educated electorate gives direction for politicians

The Young Democrats and College Republicans plan to join forces to increase voter participation in the upcoming November elections.

In a political culture that is often run by mindless partisanship rather than reasoned debate, this bipartisan effort is a breath of fresh air.

The task the two organizations hope to work together on is getting students registered to vote. During the 1992 elections, exit-poll data revealed that only 25 percent of people between the ages of 18-24 voted, the lowest voting rate of any age group.

Unfortunately, most students could care less. This "I don't care" attitude is rooted in the "I have my opinion, you have your opinion, and that's all" principle that is so common among students.

When truth is relative to your own tastes, there's no reason to try to find the right policy that is objectively best for all of us.

Yet the truth remains that our generation's political apathy hurts us all. When an entire age group fails to exercise its political power by not voting, politicians will take note and kindly give us the shaft.

For example, a provision of the Clinton-Gephardt-Lenin health care plan calls for a flat insurance rate that would decrease rates for older citizens and raise rates for people under 30. Also, runaway government spending will hurt our generation the most in the long run.

Voting, however, isn't enough. To hope to make any positive changes in public policy, voters must be informed. Sadly, this breed of voters is the rarest of all.

Many people who become interested in politics and don't want to think become a liberal or conservative — because all of their decisions are already made. If after contemplating the issues from different angles, your positions fall into either camp, fine.

Sometimes uninformed voting can be more damaging than not voting at all.

What Democrats won't admit is that they often benefit from uninformed voting. Why? Because Democrats, especially the Clinton administration, tend to appeal to emotion rather than common sense. To the uninformed voter, the party that promises the most free stuff, like universal health care coverage and social welfare programs, sounds the most appealing.

Yet this rhetoric, along with most liberal policies, is only skin deep. One only has to look at the failure of Lyndon Johnson's liberal Great Society program to take note of the bankruptcy of liberalism.

How passionately a person believes in these programs of false compassion is irrelevant. The truth is, they don't work. The government cannot change on the outside what people can only change on the inside.

On the other side of the political spectrum, conservative's chants of getting tough on crime, building more prisons and longer sentences hasn't affected crime, except to give more criminals better housing. Yet the chanting continues.

When is the public going to figure it out? Politicians will tell us what we want to hear, not enact the best policies, until we know better.

The voting public, the masters of the electorate, has to stop rewarding dishonest politicians by not re-electing them.

If we want the president and Congress to be responsible and have a sense of purpose and direction, then we the people need to be responsible and have a sense of purpose and direction.

As long as two and two equals four, politicians will follow the will of the people.

Following the popular will makes politicians popular and becoming more popular gets them elected. It is the people, therefore, who need to agree on a core set of values and beliefs. It is the people who should clearly communicate a will.

The Young Democrats and College Republicans are taking an important step in registering voters together. Hopefully, they can educate voters together, too. Both clubs plan to host several candidate forums that should accomplish this.

Informed voting is critical to the perpetuation of a democratic society. Random, mindless voting leads to mindless policies.

This November, students should vote for the candidate who supports the policies that are right, correct and the best, not for yourself, but for the country as a whole.

John Hart is a senior in political science.

Don't blame the officer

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the Collegian Editorial Board's opinion on the suspension of a Kansas State police officer.

All of a sudden, the man who was detained is in the spotlight. It happens all too often in America today, the downgrading of authority. Police officers are no longer respected figures in society. Instead, officers are the targets of rap music, movies and especially the press.

The rule of bicycles staying off of the sidewalk was made quite clear. If someone wants to disobey this law, they should be required to pay the penalty. In the same case, if they want to humiliate the police officer, then this disrespectful man should be dealt with accordingly.

I sincerely hope that people will help the authorities to do their sworn job, "to protect and serve." The officer did not commit the crime here, people. Stop making it seem that way.

With your opinion of the officer being dealt with instead of the bike, does this apply to the killer being dealt with instead of the gun?

Respect is earned, not deserved

Dear Editor,

I feel I must respond to a particular letter written by B.C. Camp II.

Many will defend the K-State Police on this issue. They won't defend the police this time because they maintain no respect for them.

This man knew that riding on the sidewalk was wrong. Whether or not one believes this rule is right makes no difference, it is still wrong. Mr. Camp broke the rules and he got caught.

What a misconception! One does not simply buy respect from others, one earns it. Perhaps, if Mr. Camp had offered the officers a bit of respect in the first place, regardless of how his mother raised him, the officer would not have assumed such force.

Some women understand football

Dear Editor,

In the Friday, Sept. 2, 1994 edition, there was an column written to teach women about football. It stated that women asking questions annoyed the men around them.

First of all, I've heard men ask plenty of questions I could answer. Secondly, it is not annoying if they are trying to better understand the game.

I am offended not by their questions. It does however, bother me that a woman implies women as a whole do not know football. How many men would be offended about a column teaching them how to do laundry?

I think most would because it is stereotypical and patronizing. Well, so was this column. So, please everyone, stop implying that women don't know a defensive end from a free safety.

▶ POLICE

Officer's actions were reasonable

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the two articles published on Aug. 31, 1994. Both of the articles dealt with the bicyclists who were stopped and issued citations.

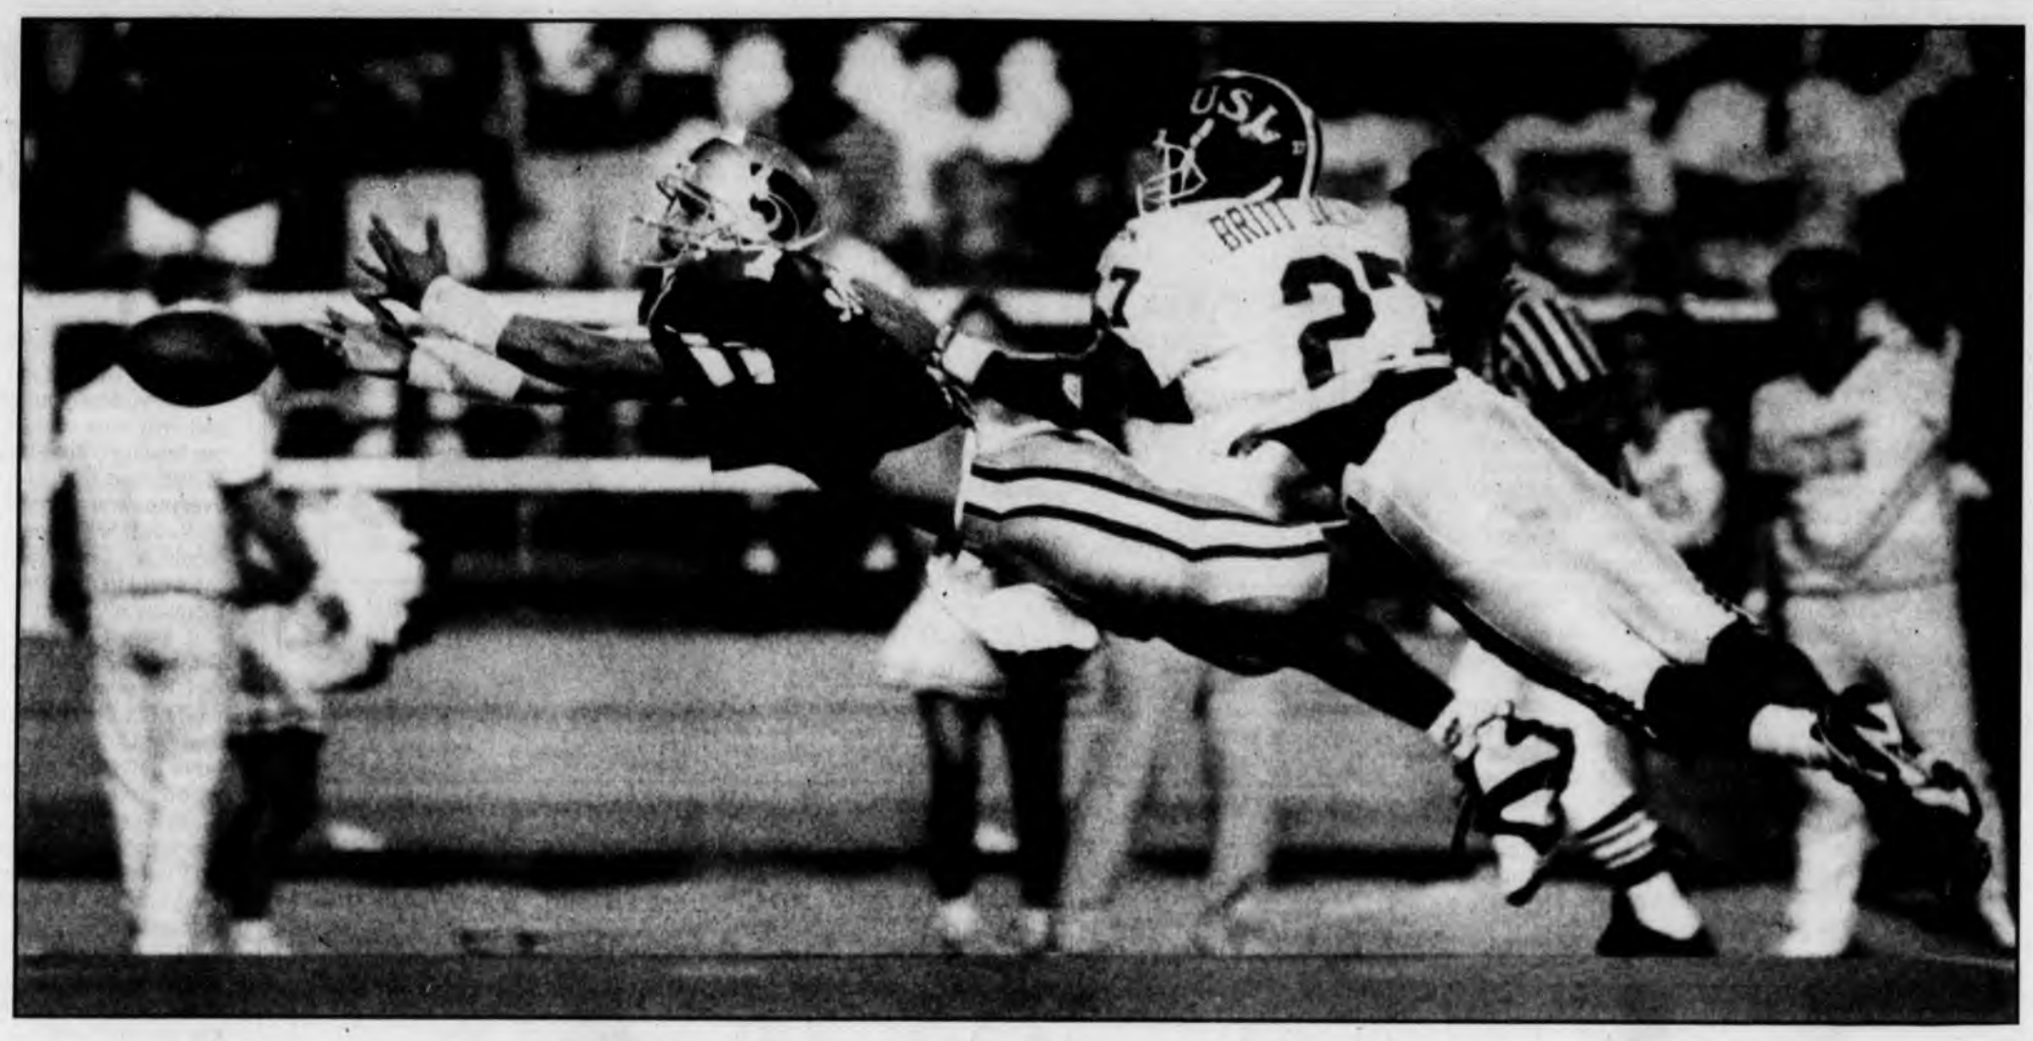
The author of the articles stated that one individual was taken into custody simply because he had no identification. At this point, I would like to introduce a law to everybody, especially the author(s) of the two articles.

According to KSA 22-2401, Terry v. Ohio 392 U.S. 1 (1968) an officer can request an individual to provide his or her "name, address and an explanation of his [her] actions... if that" officer reasonably suspects that a person is committing, has committed or is about to commit a crime."

From what little information the author actually gives us, I believe that riding a bicycle on the sidewalk is in fact illegal (a crime). In addition, this same law gives the officer the right to detain an individual for a quick investigation into the "facts" provided.

Second, I would like to address the "handcuffing" issue. For this, I will be quoting from my department's Officers' Manual of Policy and Procedure. On page 26, Chapter 3 number 21, it is stated that "all prisoners being transported will be handcuffed."

There are no exceptions. As I stated before, this is from my department's manual. However, I believe it to be very similar, if not identical, to that of other law enforcement agencies.



As I part, let me leave the Collegian Editorial Board with one final thought. You say that after all..."the police are dealing with college students..." etc. Are we the same students whom, you, the Collegian, reports about — committing battery, sexual assaults, rapes and thefts. I know I cannot understand either why the police would think we are anything other than law-abiding citizens.

Cajun' miscues help Cats

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The Wildcats kicked off the 1994 football season in familiar fashion.

The 34-6 victory over Southwestern Louisiana on Saturday at KSU Stadium seemed similar to K-State's 34-10 victory over New Mexico State in the first game of last season.

"It was almost reminiscent of a year ago against New Mexico State," Coach Bill Snyder said.

As is typical in first games, K-State scored for the first time with the help of a turnover.

The score was set up when Ragin' Cajun center Sam Heinen snapped the ball over quarterback Jake Delhomme's head in the shot-gun formation.

After the ball had changed hands several times and rolled 36 yards, strong safety Chuck Marlowe recovered the ball for K-State.

Two plays later, wide receiver Tyson Schwieger caught the first of his two touchdown passes from quarterback Chad May to secure the first score of the season. The drive went 13 yards and consumed only 43 seconds making the score 7-0.

"If we play like that, we won't beat anybody on our schedule," Southwestern Louisiana coach Nelson Stokley said about his team's six turnovers during the game.

Additionally, the Cajuns committed six penalties for 32 yards in the first quarter.

Last season, K-State benefited from five penalties for 32 yards against New Mexico State in the first quarter.

"It's obvious we did some good things, but we also didn't play as well as we would have liked to," Snyder said. "I thought we got a little sloppy."

The second score was made easy for the Cats as well when Joe Gordon recovered a fumble on the ensuing kickoff on the 17-yard line.

K-State drove only 10 yards on its second scoring drive, which was capped off by Martin Gramatica's 23-yard field goal giving K-State a ten-point lead.

"We didn't have to go too far on some of our drives," Snyder said.

Another miscue by Cajun punter Mike Jones started the Cats off on another short drive.

Jones dropped the long snap, picked up the ball and punted it only 17 yards.

K-State drove 33 yards for the touchdown on five plays, topped off by Dederick Kelly on a one-yard plunge.

It was Kelly's first touchdown of his career.

The Cajuns were ticketed for three off-sides penalties during the drive, which made the score 17-0.

"Our defense played too well to give up 34 points," Stokley said.

Southwestern Louisiana notched its only score of the game on a 14-play, 80-yard drive that chewed up seven minutes and 26 seconds off the clock. Ten of those plays were running plays.

The extra point was blocked by linebacker Percell Gaskins, making the score 17-6 at halftime.

K-State led New Mexico State 10-6 at halftime after the Aggies scored in the second quarter.

"We had some concerns about the offensive line, but they blocked well," Stokley said.

The Cajuns continued their success on the ground in the beginning of the second half until strong safety Clyde Johnson picked off Delhomme's pass.

K-State did not capitalize on the turnover, but later in the third quarter, the Cats had another score set up by a blocked punt.

Marlowe broke through the line, blocked Jones' punt and returned the ball seven yards to the Cajun 25-yard line.

"It caught me off guard," Marlowe said. "I saw the ball and just stuck my hand up. It was just a reflex reaction."

After an off-sides penalty and two incomplete passes, May hit tight end Brian Lojka over the middle for a 28-yard gain setting up J.J. Smith's one-yard touchdown run to extend K-State's lead, 24-7.

"We had to take time to figure out what our assignments were, and then we came out and did a pretty good job in the second half," Smith said.

May connected with Schwieger in the fourth quarter on a 38-yard touchdown strike. The play topped off an 81-yard drive and put the Cats in front 31-7.

"I was having a real bad week," Schwieger said, "but we watched some films and their defensive backs were fast, but didn't tackle soundly, and I got free for the score."

The Cats rounded out the scoring on Gramatica's 25-yard field. It was his second of the game.

Gramatica, a freshman from Argentina, was perfect on the night, hitting all three of his extra points and field goals of 23 and 25 yards.

Schwieger, Brown contribute to victory

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

One of the biggest question marks concerning K-State coming into this season's home opener against Southwestern Louisiana was, can anybody replace last year's top receiver Andre Coleman?

That question was answered with a resounding yes, as Tyson Schwieger and Ron Brown combined for 132 receiving yards and two touchdowns in the Wildcats 34-6 victory at KSU Stadium on Saturday.

Schwieger finished with five catches for 76 yards, but most importantly he had two touchdown receptions.

His first touchdown grab came on the Cats' first offensive drive. That's when quarterback Chad May hit him on short post route.

After he caught the ball around the seven yard line, he out juked a Ragin' Cajun defender and scampered into the end zone.

"That was a good one," Schwieger said. "The defensive backs were just sitting back on our routes all night. I put an out move on him, and then I went to a quick post. We watched some films and their defensive backs were fast, but they didn't tackle soundly and I got free for the score."

Later in the fourth quarter, Schwieger capped a 81-yard K-State drive with a 38-yard touchdown reception.

"It was an option route," Schwieger said. "Chad and I made the read and decided to go with the post over the middle. The defender was right there with me, and he almost got me."

Schwieger said he wanted to perform well in the game because he said he didn't have a good week in practice.

"I dropped a lot of passes in practice this week," Schwieger said. "I just let one pass slip through my fingertips earlier in the game that would have been a touchdown.

"There are some things that we need to work on before I'm satisfied."

K-State coach Bill Snyder said he expected a good performance from Schwieger.

"I wasn't surprised one bit with his performance," Snyder said. "He is a steady receiver, and he is also very deceptive."

Then there is Brown, who had 56 receiving yards on five receptions. But, most importantly, he proved that he has the ability to turn short passes into long gainers.

Brown turned in receptions for 24, 11, seven, seven, and six yards. The 24 yard gain came when May dropped back and found Brown crossing the middle.

"He is a dangerous receiver with his speed," Snyder said. "He has so much speed and quickness. I was very pleased with how he played."

Brown said his speed is what he relies on the most.

"When you look at me, I'm not very big," Brown said. "I depend on my speed. I'm not surprised on how I played. I've got confidence in myself, and I just stepped up.

"I look to be catching even more passes in the next game."

Even with his success, Brown said he has several things that he needs to improve on.

"I missed several blocks," Brown said. "That's one thing that I will need to work on before the next game."

Brown and Schwieger's performance were also important because K-State was without starting receiver Mitch Running.

Running was sidelined with a torn ligament in his thumb, but he could return for the game against Rice, Snyder said.

Cats break old streak, begin new one

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State women's volleyball team has started a different kind of streak.

After ending last year with a 16-match losing streak, the Wildcats won this weekend's tournament with a 3-0 record.

In their first match of the season, K-State took on the Ohio Bearcats.

The Wildcats got off to an auspicious start by taking a 4-0 advantage in the first game. However, they gave up seven straight points and lost the game 11-15.

After starting out trailing 3-7 and 2-5 in the next two games, the Wildcats clawed back in both to win 15-13 and 15-6.

Ohio then dominated the fourth game, 15-6, which sent the match to a fifth and deciding game with rally scoring.

The Cats jumped out to a quick 3-0 lead. The Cats relied on Yolanda Young who had an assisted block and three kills in the game, including a scorcher to finish off the game, 15-8.

"It was a long time coming," Jill Dugan, middle blocker, said. "We knew deep down that we were going to win.

"You could tell in the fifth game that we were going to do it," she said.

Shannen Braden, setter for the Bearcats, commented on K-State.

"They play a very quick game at times and they have some very nice players," she said.

Young led the Cats with 19 kills followed by Debbie Miller with 12 and Kate DeClerk with 11. Jill Dugan and Kathryn Wylie had four service aces and Miller provided three solo blocks.

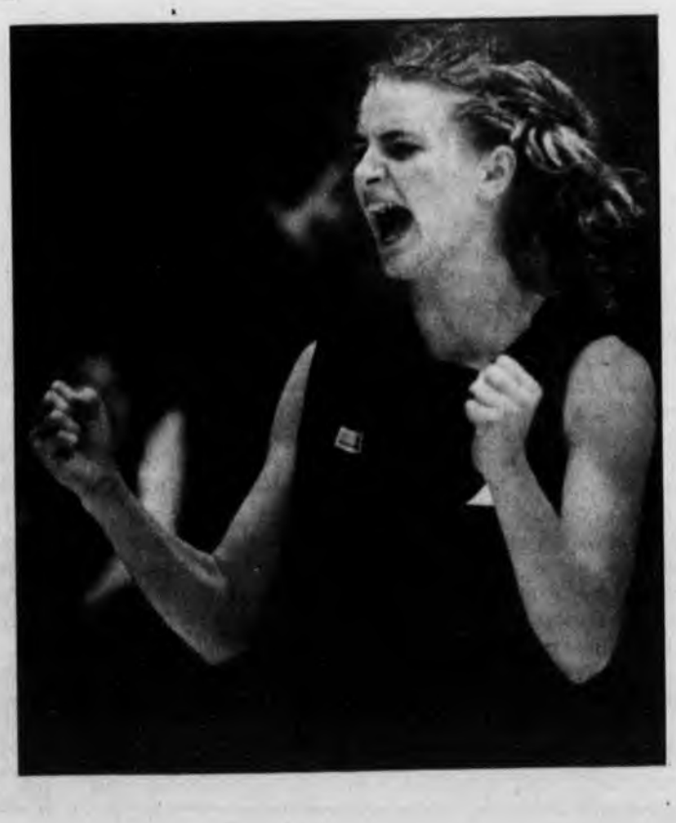
Saturday, K-State took on Stephen F. Austin.

K-State picked up where it left off the night before and swept the Ladyjacks, 15-11, 15-6 and 15-11.

Young led the Cats in kills with 15 while Suzanne Hagge came off the bench for 10. Jill Dugan had three solo blocks and five assisted. Chi Dau had 32 assists.

In the final game, K-State took on New Orleans. The Cats needed a victory to go undefeated and win the tournament. That is exactly what they did.

After three tight games where the Cats gathered two wins, 15-12, 12-15 and 16-14. They won the final game, 15-5, to finish off the tournament.



Not all of K-State's stats were sparkling, however.

The Cats had a tournament high, 50 service errors in their 12 games.

"We have so much to improve on," Coach Jim Moore said. "We did some silly things, but when we got out of control we seemed to regain it quickly, so I'm pleased from that standpoint."

Moore went on to explain how his team was able to overcome their problems.

"We won because we battled," he said. "We played the game."

Jill Dugan, middle blocker, celebrates a point during the KSU Invitational Friday. The Wildcats placed first in the round-robin tournament with a 3-0 record.

Violent acts American as apple pie

ANDREW TOMB

Violence is cool.

It sells albums, movie tickets and beer.

The violence business in America is booming, and will soon replace Levi's 501s and Pepsi as our leading cultural export.

We send it all over the world, just to remind everyone who's in charge.

Remember when Lyndon Johnson told us he would not send American boys halfway around the world to do a job Asian boys should be doing themselves?

I wasn't exactly born yet, but I heard about it.

LBJ was a liar. The world is a dangerous place and sending American boys halfway around the world to destroy communism and protect oil has become commonplace.

Violence is all over the mediums of film, television and music.

It also happens to be all over our streets, in our homes and even in the classroom.

So who's pointing the finger at whom?

Directors and rap stars all claim they are only reporters of what is really happening in the world, while parents like to blame the mass media culture for their children's behavior.

Ollie Stone's "Natural Born Killers" creates this same argument.

Pompous reporter Wayne Gale, played by Robert Downey Jr., would like to have us believe that the villain is dependent, and thus created by the media, while psychopathic Micky, in his speech near the film's end, takes the position of the naturalist, stating he was a "natural born killer."

Stone's showboating, fast-paced, "MTV-style" filmaking only clouds the issue

In Stone's revisionist fantasy-land, all of the high-tech tricks make us into zombies, worshiping the moving image.

In Stone's world, mass media is a lot like torture. If you watch enough, it'll brainwash you into confessing you started the Chicago fires.

It seems pretty fickle to assume Hollywood has the power to mobilize legions of youth against the powers of church, school, parents and state.

If this was true, you'd think the CIA would have sent MTV to Haiti by now, and the commies would have been dying to let us sell them our culture.

We could give free HBO subscriptions to members of the PRI in Mexico.

We could send gangsta-rap compact discs by the boatload to Somalia, and watch them crumble to the beat of Ice Cube and Easy-E.

The best part about all this is we could make piles of cash at the same time because, with the proper ad campaign, they will pay for the things that will cause their demise.

Why limit the conspiracy to foreign lands?

Yep, it's true. Hollywood has been plotting for years against the family, education and the inner city. I think Sinatra actually started the Watts Riots.

As the story goes, Cain slew Abel, and it was all downhill from there.

People have pretty much been screwing one another over since the beginning of time.

We've become masters of hiding the pain of those less fortunate through the institutions of the suburban convenience culture.

Parents, preachers and politicians have no business acting shocked when this culture, like every other one created by man starts to crumble.

Did we really think we could do it any better?

Andrew Tomb is a senior in political science.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, KS. 66506.

Confused reader: 'I need my space'

Dear Cassandra,

I have a problem I need your help with. This summer, I started seeing a guy one of my friends introduced me to.

At first, things were going all right, but I've lost interest. He's already told me he loves me, and he's even talked about moving up here.

I'm just not ready to get serious yet — I'd rather be out with my friends. I know I need to be honest, but what is the most delicate way to let him down?

Signed,

Looking For a Way Out

Dear Looking For a Way Out,

Unfortunately, there's no easy way to let someone know you don't want to see them anymore when they have already professed their undying love to you.

You hit the nail on the head when you said you needed be honest. Just tell him exactly what you told me. Tell him you're not ready for him to move here.

If you still want to date around and have fun with your friends, do it. You have the rest of your life to be married. As long as you're honest with him, you have nothing to feel bad about.

L.A. Ramblers groove to originals, familiar favorite tunes

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER
Collegian

Who plays their own brand of groovin' folk pop as well as the Grateful Dead, the Byrds, the Rolling Stones, Chuck Berry and the Velvet Underground, and plays pretty darn well at that? The L.A. Ramblers. They played almost for three hours at Snookie's Bar Thursday night as part of KMKF-FM 101.5's Welcome Back Concert series.

The Ramblers have been around for about 10 years, having started as a Dead cover band. Those roots still show through in their original tunes, some of which are available on their latest release, "Lost in Nogales," and in their choices of live covers.

Judging from their reactions, some members of the audience were familiar with a few of these tunes. "Saw You Running" was familiar and was greatly helped by a brisker tempo than the studio version. Songs like this - clear vocals and transparent guitars against spare keyboards - typify the L.A. Ramblers at their best.

The first set was just really good. [illegible] probably a little more than [illegible] Stephanie Turner, whose voice is one of the most memorable around.

In typical Manhattan fashion, the audience jumped up to dance to the cover tune that started the second set, the Dead's "Never Stop" and didn't quit dancing for over an hour.

This set was more lively, if not confusing, as lead guitarist Charles Wallrop managed to mutate his styles between Duane Allman, Carlos Santana and Jimmy Page, all in a few songs.

Bassist Joe Comparato did a very impressive Bob Weir on Dead covers "Samson and Delilah" and "Love Light." The show ended with the VU's "Can't Take It Any More More."

No doubt in an effort to appeal to the hard rock crowd, songs with no need at all for guitar solos were interrupted by several minutes of blindingly skilled improvisation on the part of Waldrop. He plays very well, but sometimes one wonders why.

Similarly, drummer Sven Neusbaum tends to overplay.

Fills seem to come from nowhere, for no reason, from this fellow. During guitar solos he often tried to bring songs to a dynamic climax with drums and guitar leads going haywire not unlike old Soundgarden.

Besides, it's hard for the people in the pit trying to dance when the beat suddenly flies out the window.

It's easy for a six-member band to be overpowering, but the L.A. Ramblers usually are amazingly and skillfully tasteful. They would be better off to err on the side of subtlety if they are to continue to grow in popularity and as a unit.

CLASSIFIED DIRECTORY

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Violence, gun control on the rise

ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's back-to-school time, which means new clothes, new classes and — in these violent times — more metal detectors, surveillance cameras, gun-sniffing dogs, book-bag bans, and locker searches to keep kids from toting guns.

Seventy percent of the nation's 50 largest school districts have installed metal scanners to detect firearms, up from 25 percent two years ago, according to the National School Safety Center. But preventative measures are also becoming the norm in suburban and rural areas.

"There is no school district now that is immune, whether you're rural, suburban or city," said Peter Blauvelt of the National Association of School Safety and Law Enforcement Officers.

No national figures exist to underscore the depth of gun-related killings in schools, although a study is due in January by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Just as it tracks outbreaks of flu, the CDC is tracking the rate of death in schools from guns. And preliminary numbers show 102 homicides and suicides in and around schools in the past two years — a number that suggests an epidemic.

"An epidemic is what public health officials use whenever there is an unprecedented increase in the rate of death. Clearly, the increase in rates of firearm-related injury and death in and around schools warrants calling it an epidemic," said Patrick Kachur, an epidemiologist in the CDC's Division of Violence Prevention.

"It's clear to most people the problem is significant and it's on the increase."

In a 1993 survey by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., more than one in 10 teachers and one in four students reported they had been victims of violence in or around school.

Thirteen percent of the students said they had brought a weapon to school at least once.

Educators are fighting back, not only with equipment, but with programs such as peer intervention and conflict resolution to prevent disagreements from turning deadly.

Such programs are now being used, for example, in Upper Perkiomen High School outside Philadelphia. In 1993, a tenth grader pulled a 9mm Ruger from his book bag and killed a classmate during first period biology class because, as he told police, "he punches me and kicks me and makes me look like an ass."

Conflict-resolution programs are also in place at the Margaret Leary Elementary School in Butte, Mont. Last April, an 11-year-old boy was killed in the schoolyard by a 10-year-old classmate, who fired a gun at another youth following an argument.

"It used to be you'd go to school and have a fist fight. Now you have gun fight," said Ronald Stephens of the National School Safety Center in Westlake Village, Calif. "A large part of the country has just had it with kids bringing guns to school."

More schools adopted tougher policies for the new school year after Congress passed legislation in March requiring them to address the issue of guns or risk losing federal money.

Consequences costly for altered parking permits over to the county attorney who makes the ultimate decision as to whether to prosecute or not," Herrman said.

It is a $50 fine for displaying a false, stolen or altered permit and a $20 fee for the wheellock removal, he said.

Parking services do search for stolen permits, Amaro said.

"We have two or three officers that will go out and try to find stolen permits when they have time," Amaro said. "Other than that, they will only be found if they are in violation and the number is run through the computer."

Amaro said he doesn't see a drastic rise in stolen or lost permits in comparison to earlier years.

"The numbers are about the same as we had last year," Amaro said. "At the beginning of the semester, there seems to be a big influx of lost and stolen permits because people misplace them."

Motions heard; assault case reviewed

University attorneys filed motions for a new trial and to reduce damages awarded to a former K-State student who was sexually assualted in a residence hall in 1990. The trial, which awarded her the damages, was in June.

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

K-State attorneys argued two motions Tuesday in an attempt to reduce or throw out a $209,100 judgement awarded to a former student who was sexually assualted in a residence hall.

The Riley County District Court heard two motions from University attorneys Richard Seaton and Jennifer Kassebaum asking for a new trial or an amendment to the June 25 judgment awarded to Shana Nycole Nero.

Nero was sexually assaulted in June 1990 in Goodnow Hall.

Nero was found to share 25 percent of the fault for damages she incurred after her assault by a student, Ramon Davenport, who had been charged with raping another student in April 1990 in Moore Hall.

As a result, Nero's portion of the damages was reduced to $156,825.

Kassebaum said that the award was not warranted by the evidence presented at trial and was unprecedented in Riley County.

The jury awarded Nero $1,000 in counseling expenses incurred to date; $15,600 in future counseling expenses; $10,000 in mental pain and suffering to date; $2,500 in future mental pain and suffering, $30,000 for disability including loss of enjoyment of life to date and $150,000 in future disability and loss of enjoyment of life.

The University filed affidavits July 29 from jurors testifying as to their reasoning when fixing the award.

Nero's attorneys from the firm of Myers, Pottroff and Ball also filed juror affidavits, but the court sustained a motion from the University to have them stricken because they were filed past deadline.

Kassebaum said the University was requesting a new trial on the grounds that the jury's verdict or decision in part or in whole was contrary to the evidence.

"K-State is not asserting any jury misconduct," Kassebaum said. "The motion for a new trial is based on evidence, or lack thereof, to justify the jury award."

Kassebaum said the $15,600 award for future counseling was not merited according to testimony from the plaintiff's expert witness.

Richard Swink, a licensed clinical psychologist from Edmund, Okla., testified that treatment would cost about $9,000 to $10,000 for two years, depending on where Nero received it, Kassebaum said.

She also said the $1,000 award for counseling to date was not supported by the evidence and asked to have it reduced to $200.

Kassebaum said the $150,000

▶ CAMPUS POLICIES

KU discipline placed in hands of police, courts

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

This is the first in a seven-part series on the sexual-assault policies at Big Eight schools.

In order to prevent interference with state and local laws concerning sexual assault, the University of Kansas has a very generic definition of it, said Danny Kaiser, assistant dean of student life at KU.

"We don't use any other definition system than threatening the physical health of another person. That can cover sexual assault or just plain assault," Kaiser said.

sexual VIOLENCE policy

KU does not have any concrete policy on sexual assault but instead encourages victims to contact the local police department, he said.

KU keeps an informal record of the sexual assault, said Barbara Ballard, director of the Emily Taylor Women's Resource Center at KU.

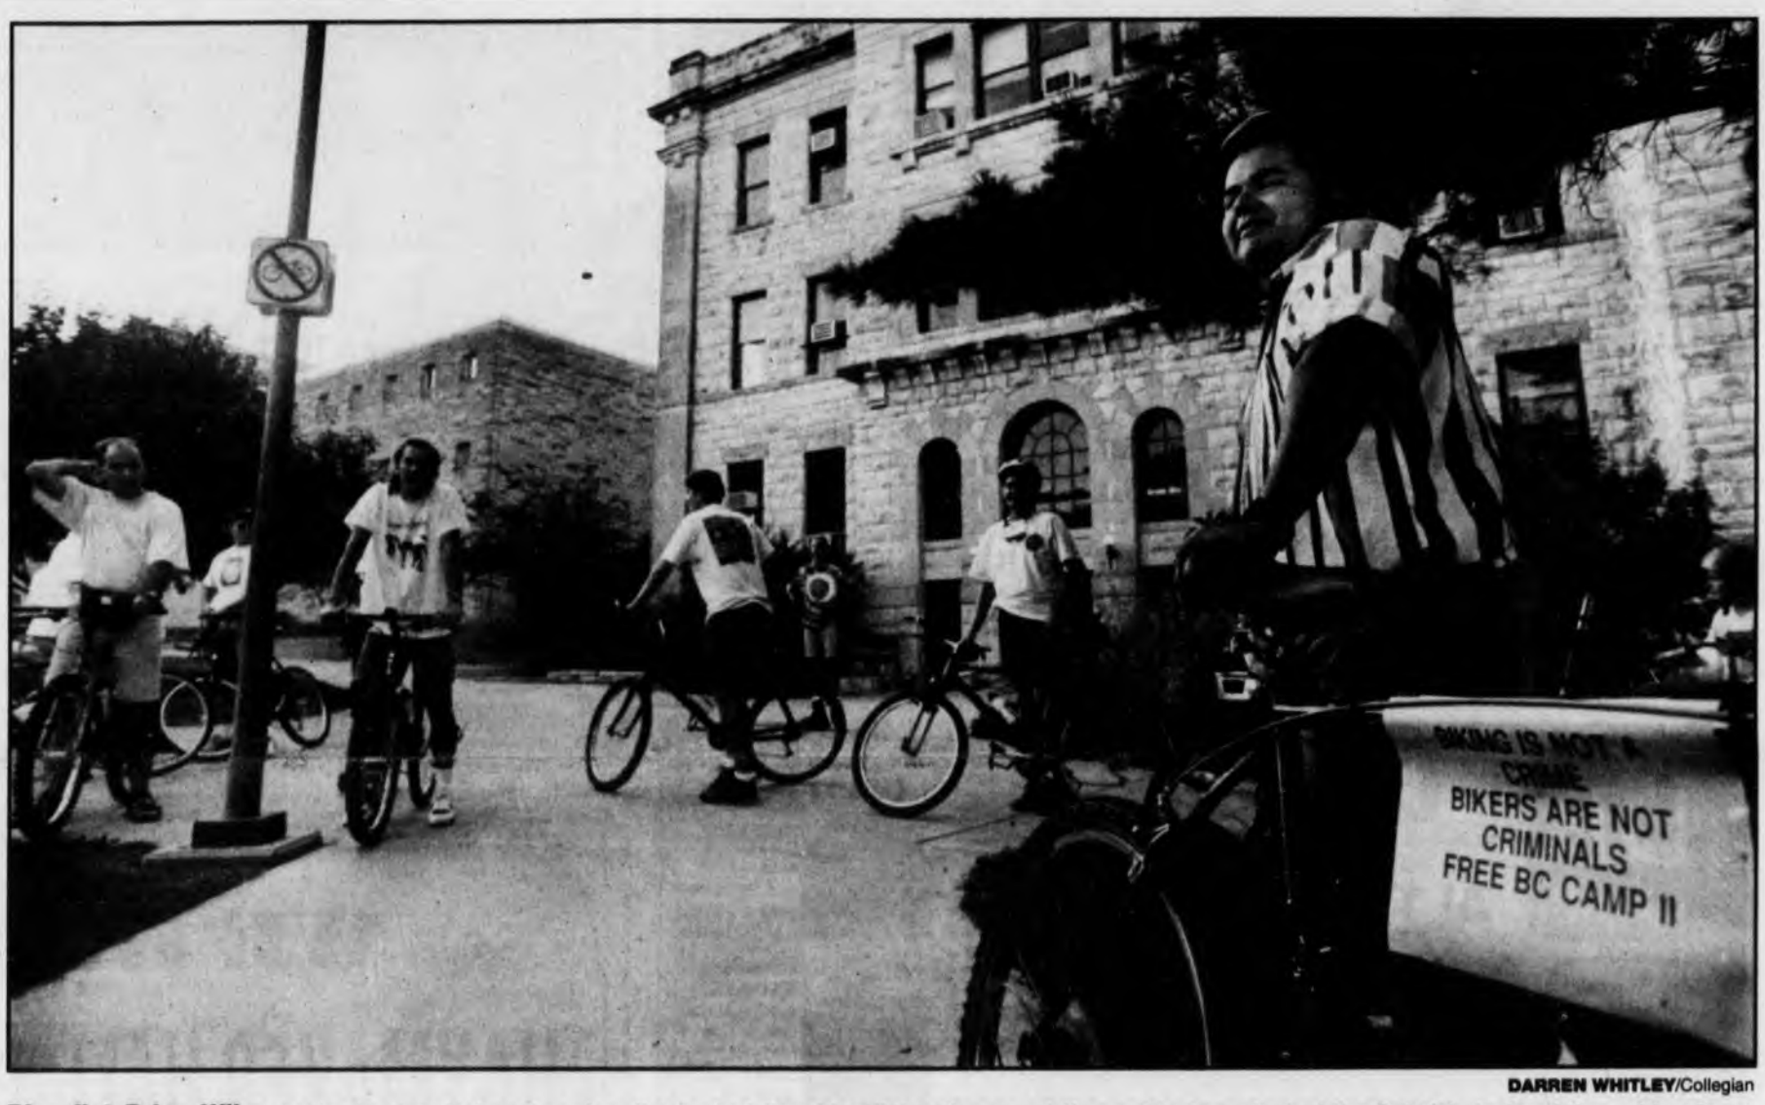
"The police and courts have top priority over anything that we would like to do, so we cannot enforce a policy that deals with such a serious crime," Ballard said.

As for a policy concerning the discipline of a student who is convicted of a sexual assault, that is not clear cut either. Punishments can range from warnings to expulsion, Kaiser said.

"Traditionally, discipline is not what universities do best," he said. "Education is what we do best."

Even if victims choose not to report the crimes to the police, they will most likely need some sort of support or counseling, Ballard said.

"We have a support system, and we make sure they have the necessary counseling. We educate and talk about the sexual assault in terms of a crime," she said.



There were three sexual assaults reported on the KU campus in the spring 1994 semester, said Officer Cindy Alice, community education officer for the KU Police Department.

"All three of those were acquaintance rape situations where the victim knew the suspect," Alice said.

Although those were the only three rapes reported, there were probably several more that weren't reported, she said.

What the KU women's resource center has been focusing on since the sexual assaults is date and acquaintance rape, Ballard said.

"Sometimes people are very confused as to what rape is in a dating situation," she said.

Bicyclist Brian Wika, senior in electrical engineering, listens to fellow bicyclists after completing a ride in protest of the $25 tickets for riding a bicycle on campus sidewalks. About 25 bicyclists attended, riding their bicycles on the campus sidewalks Tuesday evening in front of Waters Hall.

Riders pedal to protest $25 bike fines

Bikers say pedestrians partly to blame for accidents

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Bicyclists gathered in front of Waters Hall at 7 p.m. Tuesday to protest the regulation that prohibits bike riding on the campus sidewalks and the $25 fine.

After the protesters gathered, they began a 10-minute tour around campus sidewalks. The tour was led by Ryan Hale, junior in biology.

"I think we need to welcome those who have alternative forms of transportation," Hale said.

"Every bicyclist means one more empty space in the parking lots."

Hale said he believes that bicyclists should walk their bikes in crowded areas on campus.

"Bicyclists and pedestrians need to be considerate of each other," he said.

"I also think that most of the bikers on campus try to be responsible about their bike riding."

Hale said he also thinks the fine for riding a bike on campus sidewalks is too high.

"The ticket amount is totally ludicrous. The punishment does not fit the crime," he said.

Robert Remington, senior in psychology, said he disagrees with the law because it causes inconvenience for the bicyclists.

"It's quicker just to ride your bike right up to the building," Remington said.

Pedestrians getting hit by bicyclists are not completely the fault of the the bikers, he said.

"Those are isolated incidents, and many were cases of a few wild pedestrians," Remington said.

Anson Renshaw, fifth-year senior in interior architecture, said he never saw the necessity for the law.

"I've been here for five years, and I have never had a problem with running into people," Renshaw said.

He said he hoped the protest would help to bring a student voice in changing the law.

"Hopefully it will drum up support. Maybe the students will get to vote on the issue," he said.

The idea to protest the biking regulations started when a caller on the KSDB-FM 91.9 talk show, "A Purple Affair," suggested it.

Stephen Seely, co-host of the show, said that the protest was about more than just the $25 fine for riding a bike on sidewalks.

"We feel like the police are taking unfair advantage of the students by fining and even arresting them in some cases," Seely said.

Seely was unable to be at the protest because he had a class, but asked Hale to lead it for him.

Capt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police had little to say about the protest because it is not illegal to ride a bike on campus sidewalks after 5:30 p.m.

"People have a right to protest. We won't do anything special," Mellgren said. "We'll just monitor it and make sure it doesn't get out of hand."

▶ CITY COMMISSION

Residents have power in annexation

Commissioners voted 4-1 in favor of the annexation of the Sargent addition north of Manhattan. The vote was a result of water and sewer problems experienced by some residents in the addition.

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

The City Commission took the first step in annexing more than 80 acres of property north of Manhattan during Tuesday's meeting at City Hall.

Commissioners voted 4-1 in favor of the annexation of the Sargent addition, located southwest of the intersection of Browning and Marlatt avenues. Commissioner Edith Stunkel opposed the measure.

The vote was a result of water and sewer problems experienced by some residents in the addition.

A petition had been signed by 55 percent of Sargent addition property owners requesting annexation by the city.

Even though the commission approved this first reading, it is the land owners that now have the power to make annexation a reality. They still have to approve separate water and sewer petitions.

"What we're doing this evening is giving you the ability to come back and make those other decisions, because I have no interest in grabbing a neighborhood that doesn't want to be in the city of Manhattan," Commissioner Roger Maughmer said.

Jerry Petty, director of community development, said starting today his staff will be working with the owners to come up with everything needed for the petitions. He said his staff will do everything but go out to get the petitions signed.

Tuesday's meeting was standing room only because of residents and owners who gathered to voice their concerns.

United States, Cuba negotiations haven't solved refugee problem

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — After four days of talks, U.S. and Cuban diplomats have made no apparent progress toward a negotiated settlement that would end the flood of refugees fleeing Cuba by sea.

More talks were scheduled today after the two sides met for one hour Monday. U.S. spokesman David Johnson said the delegations had not decided when or where today's meeting would be conducted.

The United States had offered to take more Cubans, perhaps up to 20,000 people a year, if President Fidel Castro promises to stop them from fleeing to the United States.

More than 30,000 Cubans have set sail on rafts and boats this year, most of them in the past month. The United States is holding more than 22,000 rafters at the Guantanamo Bay Naval Base in Cuba.

About 200 people gathered outside the Cuban U.N. mission during the talks to protest Cuba's communist regime and urge the Clinton administration to resist Castro's demands.

Cuba's chief delegate, Ricardo Alarcon, has said the refugee crisis cannot be solved unless the United States agrees to talk about lifting its 32-year-old economic embargo against Cuba.

The United States insists migration is separate and refuses to discuss lifting the embargo before Castro implements democratic reforms.

About 2,700 Cubans are expected to get U.S. immigration visas this year. By Monday evening, the Coast Guard had picked up 980 more Cubans at sea.

▶ PUBLIC BUS SYSTEM CLOSING EMINENT IF $600 IN FUNDING IS NOT OBTAINED

CONCORDIA (AP) — Unless the North Central Kansas Express can raise $600 this month, it may have to halt service after Sept. 30.

As the state's only tax-supported public bus system, the Express was designed to provide low-cost public transportation along a 70-mile stretch of U.S. Highway 81 from Belleville south to Salina.

"When we started, we had some nice donations, and that ran us through until now," Myra Landis, board chairman, said.

Established 15 months ago, the Express is a federally-sponsored pilot project that needs $600 a month to match funding provided through the Kansas Department of Transportation, Judie Deal, Express coordinator, said.

The 10-passenger van makes one round trip each weekday between Belleville and Salina, with stops at several communities along U.S. 81. Bus ridership averages no more than three people a day, Deal said.

"Ridership is not real heavy," Deal said. "Nobody thought it would be. The problem is that the people who are riding are hung out to dry without this service."

About 75 percent of the passengers are traveling for medical purposes, either to seek treatment at a distant hospital or to consult a physician in another community.

Commuters are charged a maximum fare of $10 for a round-trip ticket between the route's two most distant points.

▶ SKI-MASKED ROBBERS PULL BIGGEST HEIST IN JEWELRY STORE'S HISTORY

NEW YORK (AP) — Two masked robbers bound four guards at Tiffany & Co. with duct tape, snatched about $1.25 million worth of jewelry and disappeared into the darkness.

It was the costliest theft ever in Tiffany's 157-year history.

"They were very, very professional," police Capt. Sal Blando said.

Police were investigating whether Sunday's robbery was an inside job, Blando said.

It took the robbers just an hour to outwit the unarmed guards, select about 300 items from display cases, including watches, bracelets and rings, then grab the store's security videotapes and take off.

The ski-masked robbers got inside the Manhattan store by pulling a gun on a guard arriving for his midnight shift and ordering him to tell co-workers that they were his cousins and needed to use the bathroom, police said.

Once the robbers fled, one of the guards worked himself free and called police.

The safe holding the store's most valuable pieces was left alone, Blando said.

▶ EX-CONVICT, TEEN-AGER APPREHENDED AFTER 3-STATE KILLING SPREE

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — An ex-convict and a teen-ager who allegedly made their way across the country by killing people and stealing their cars were captured by police Tuesday as they slept under a bridge, weapons at their side.

Acting on a tip from a Santa Fe man who had given the suspects a ride Monday night, eight state police officers wielding 20-shot assault weapons arrested the pair in a concrete culvert in the high desert country just outside Santa Fe.

Eric A. Elliot, 16, and Lewis E. Gilbert, 22, both of Newcomerstown, Ohio, are suspected of killing four people in Ohio, Missouri and Oklahoma and using each victim's car to get to their next crime.

"The nightmare is over," said Bob Hawk, spokesman for the FBI office in Cleveland.

The men were scheduled to appear in court Tuesday on federal charges of unlawful flight from prosecution.

The men were found about 9:30 a.m. Tuesday sleeping on blankets near a dry gully. Two high-powered rifles, a shotgun and a handgun were found nearby. One of the weapons was between the two men.

State police Lt. Garry Walsmith said police quietly approached the bridge and shouted for the pair to surrender and put their hands up.

The two sat up immediately but didn't raise their hands before officers rushed in with guns drawn.

The pair said nothing during the arrest, Walsmith said.

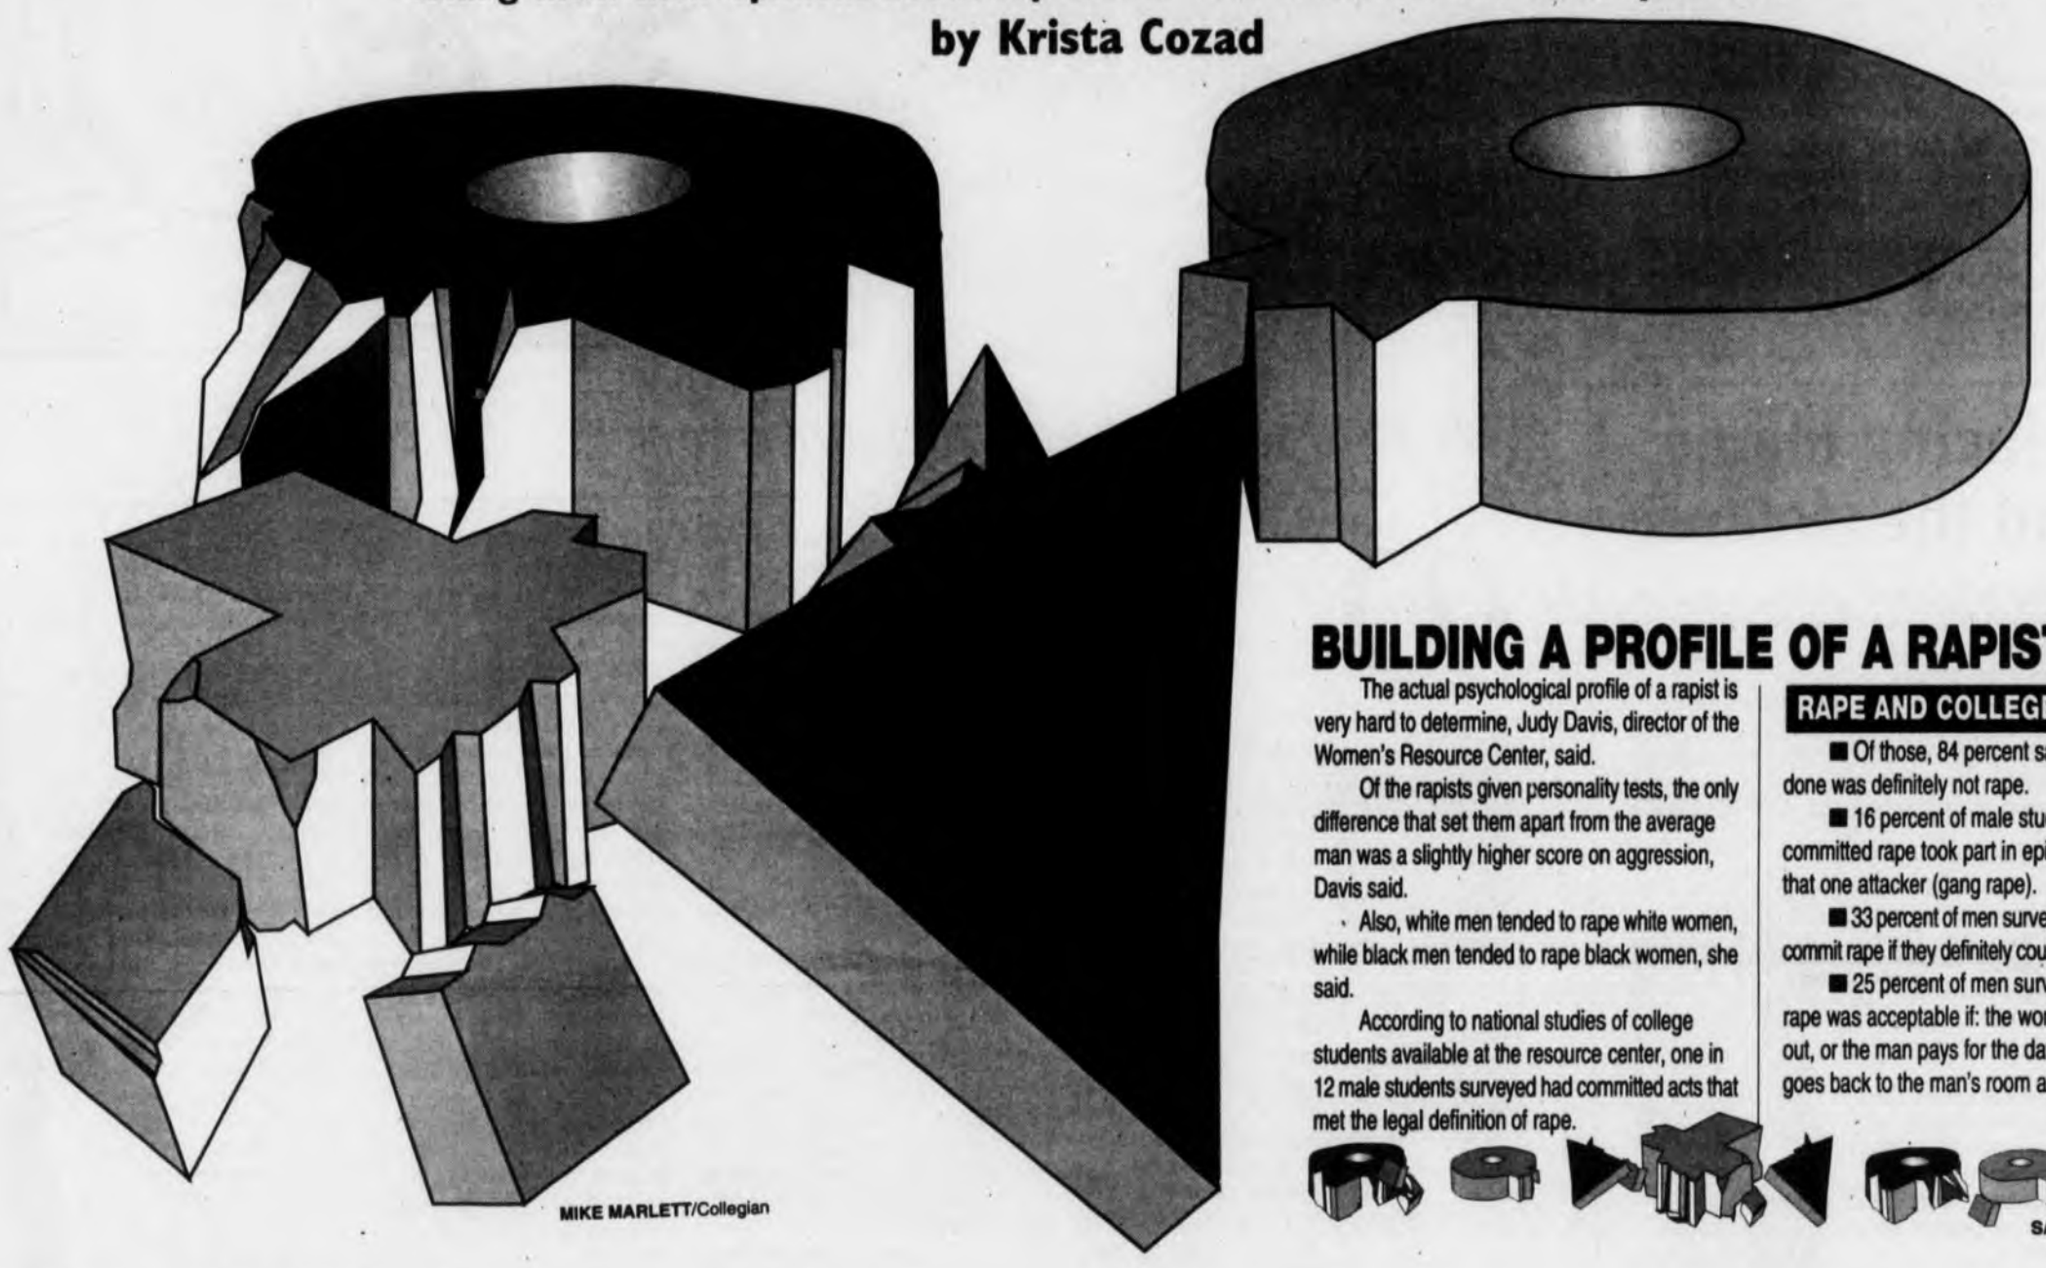
Life



According to national studies of college students available at the Women's Resource Center, one in 12 male students surveyed had committed acts that met the legal definition of rape.

Fourty-four percent of rapists said they committed rape because it's the easiest crime to get away with; 42 percent said it was the most intimidating crime for a victim; and 3 percent said it was because of sexual desire.
The statistics above were taken from a study of 69 convicted rapists in Topeka, called "A Talk with Rapists."

The other side of rape

The stories of women who are raped are covered in detail.
We discuss prevention, escort services, self-defense and safety. Stories are targeted to make women aware.
Often, the man's point of view is forgotten.
The Kansas State Collegian randomly surveyed 10 male K-State students, asking them their opinions about rape. Each man was asked the same questions.

BUILDING A PROFILE OF A RAPIST

The actual psychological profile of a rapist is very hard to determine, Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said.

Of the rapists given personality tests, the only difference that set them apart from the average man was a slightly higher score on aggression, Davis said.

Also, white men tended to rape white women, while black men tended to rape black women, she said.

According to national studies of college students available at the resource center, one in 12 male students surveyed had committed acts that met the legal definition of rape.

RAPE AND COLLEGE MALES

■ Of those, 84 percent said what they had done was definitely not rape.

■ 16 percent of male students who had committed rape took part in episodes with more that one attacker (gang rape).

■ 33 percent of men surveyed said they would commit rape if they definitely could escape detection.

■ 25 percent of men surveyed believed that rape was acceptable if: the woman asks the man out, or the man pays for the date or the woman goes back to the man's room after the date.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

Q. When I say the words "rape" and "rapist," what do you think of, and how does it make you feel?

▼ "I think it's totally wrong — completely. I don't know where their value system is. There's no point in it really."
— Steven West, freshman in civil engineering

▼ "I don't think it's the girl's fault, even if she acts promiscuous. She still doesn't deserve to be raped."
— Christopher Szeliga, junior in architecture

▼ "Rape is a pretty strong word. I feel rapists are criminals. It's a violent crime, and they should be punished instead of just getting off. Like on date rape. Rape is rape. I think laws are too lenient. You see it all the time. People rape girls and nothing happens to them."
— Chad Chandler, junior in pre-vet/animal science

▼ "I think he has no respect for women. He was probably brought up in a bad way. I think his morals are messed up."
— Rinav (Reno) Mehta, junior in civil and environmental engineering

Q. Have you ever known of, or been friends with, someone who was raped? How did you feel when you found out, and did your relationship with that person change as a result of the rape?

▼ "Yes, I have. One of my close friends was raped, and if I'd have ever found out who it was, I probably would've got myself in trouble. It definitely changed our relationship a lot. She didn't want to be touched. She was withdrawn. She just didn't like human touch anymore, in general. It's like she needed space. She shied away."
— Ryan Hurlbutt, senior in marketing

▼ "Yes. It really made me frustrated to think about what she was going through. It really pissed me off. She did prosecute — she is prosecuting. The doctor wasn't real great about it, from what I heard. It was tough for me, too. You really don't think about what you're going to say to them when something like that happens to them. It's just really frustrating, especially for a guy. She really didn't treat me any different, and she knows I'd never do anything like that to hurt her. She could talk to me."
— David Denning, sophomore in pre-law

▼ "Yes. I was pissed at the guy who did it. I knew him. It was my girlfriend who was raped by her old boyfriend. She had to go to the hospital, but she didn't press charges. She was embarrassed and all. I wish she would have. It kind of affected our relationship. She'd get scared if we wrestled around and stuff and I held her down. It was hard."
— Christopher Szeliga

Q. If you ever hear people talking about rape, how do you respond? What if they're joking about it?

▼ "If people are joking about it, I frown. I take it seriously. But I think it is blown out of proportion sometimes. There are both sides, and people need to stand up for both sides."
— Nathan Sharfi, senior in drawing and ceramics

▼ "Sometimes we talk about rape and get in discussions. And sometimes guys minimize it. I think most guys think it's a big deal. Yeah, but sometimes we joke about it."
— Chad Chandler

▼ "I'd kind of like to be aware of what's going on around me, but it's not any of my business, really. It's a topic I really wouldn't want to know about."
— Steven West, freshman in civil engineering

Q. If someone close to you were raped, such as your sister or your mom, how would you handle it?

▼ "I'd be so outraged. I'd probably go out and kill the guy. I mean, it's a hard question. You want to do what's right for the family, but you'd also want to kill the guy. That's a hard question."
— Chris Bischof, sophomore in architecture

▼ "I would try to calm them down. I would have them report to the police and tell them it's important to find them and put them behind bars. I'd rather not take it into my own hands."
— Wade Xiong, senior in electrical engineering

Q. If one of your good friends had sexually assaulted or raped someone and was bragging about it, what would you do, and would you turn him in?

▼ "I don't think they'd be my friend anymore. I think all of us (his friends) see it the same way. Yeah, I think I'd turn him in. I'd turn in a friend if they did it."
— David Denning

▼ "If she was one of my friends, I'd definitely turn him in. But if I didn't know him, God. God. That's a very hard question. I'd feel bad if I didn't. If I knew he did it, and the girl was hurt, I'd feel like an asshole if I didn't. Yeah, I'd turn him in. I couldn't handle living with it and not turning him in. "
— Jason Fornshell

▼ "I'd turn them in because as a respectable citizen, I have to turn him in. And it's good for him. If you do the crime, you gotta do the time, and nex[illegible]me they'll think about it."
— Wade Xiong

▼ "I wouldn't. I'd probably go to him and confront him. I'd let him give his side of the story. I wouldn't go so far as to turn him in myself, but I'd be very straightforward. I don't like to talk behind people's backs. He's going to lose a lot of respect. "
— Nathan Sharfi

▼ "That would definitely change my image of them and would probably end our friendship. I'd talk to him first. If they had no intent of turning themselves in, then I'd turn them in."
— Rinav Mehta

▼ "I wouldn't turn them in. I'd talk to them, but I wouldn't just go to the authorities. I'd talk to them and try to make them feel real bad so they'd turn themselves in."
— Christopher Szeliga

▼ "I'd be mad at them, but I probably wouldn't turn them in unless it was someone I knew (who was raped) or a girl I was friends with. But there's a big but there. 'It's not right unless one of your friends does it,' is what it kinda sounds like, huh?"

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Sexual-assault policy should be fair to all.

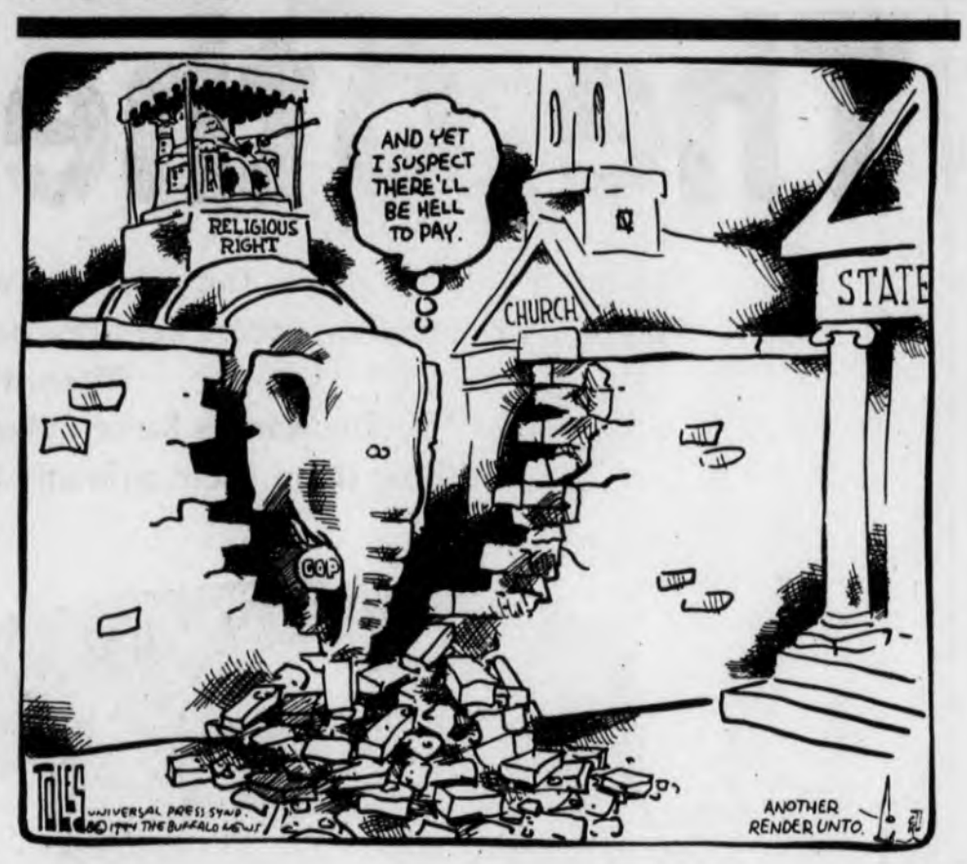
Students beware. K-State's sexual-violence policies treat students like a roller coaster.

These policies have run a twisted track over the past few years.

In June, the University was found negligent in the sexual assault of a former student. Shana Nycole Nero was assaulted by Ramon Davenport in June 1990. Davenport had been arrested for rape in April 1990 and had been placed in the residence hall where Nero was living. The policy failed to warn students, including Nero, that they were living with a person arrested for rape.

In September 1992, Mark Mazour, a student at the time, was arrested on one count of rape and sodomy. The case was later dropped by Riley County attorney Bill Kennedy because of contradictory evidence and the fact that both parties had been drinking.

The University took matters into its own hands and imposed sanctions that Mazour had to follow to stay in school. Mazour later filed a lawsuit against K-State, claiming the sexual violence policy was unconstitutional, unenforceable and the chairperson of the committee that passed the sanction was biased.



Nero won her case because the jury believed that the sexual violence policy fell short of serving the students.

After each of these cases, K-State has redirected its sexual-violence policies.

Why does amending the sexual-violence policy have to be reactionary?

K-State needs a solid, consistent sexual-violence policy that works, and the students should have some degree of input. Representatives of all student groups should work with administrators to find the best possible policy that provides services to the victims and penalties to perpetrators.

TOLES

Stop placing blame, just end the violence

A body was found in the woods near Higginsville, Mo, and Tim DeGraffenreid, a 17-year-old from Blue Springs, Mo., was charged with first-degree murder. The prosecutor said he will seek the death penalty.

Apparently, the car the youth and two others went to a party in, broke down, and Richard Drummond stopped to help. He allowed the three into his car and was not found until eight days later.

Perhaps even more appalling, the trio went on to their party.

There, DeGraffenreid and his companions parted company, and he went into hiding in an area motel, where he and some other friends partied for another week.

The festivities were paid for by the burglary of a nearby house.

What is it that can bring a person to kill another?

I'm not talking about self-defense, and I'm not talking about those who are so removed from reality they don't understand their own actions.

What can possibly happen to someone to make that person shoot another in cold blood?

You don't want to meet the person who can answer that question.

Randy Sandifer probably could have answered it.

The 11-year-old from Chicago had at least eight felony arrests, beginning with armed robbery at age 9.

Most recently, he was sought for the murder of a 14-year-old girl who lived next door.

But Sandifer's criminal days are over. Authorities believe the last slaying brought too much attention, so fellow gang members shot Robert twice in the head and left him under a viaduct on the south side of Chicago.

And Randy was not the only south side youth under investigation for murder.

Another 11-year-old was recently arrested in Chicago for the murder of an elderly woman who was beaten to death with her own cane.

Enough. At some point, as a society, we must cry out that we've had enough.

But we don't, because we think we aren't responsible. If it isn't in our schools, it isn't our children who are getting killed. We just turn to the football scores and the Far Side.

We blame Reaganomics. We blame social programs. We blame the National Rifle Association for defending gun dealers, or we blame the American Civil Liberties Union for taking prayer out of schools. We blame Oliver Stone movies and tabloid television.

Wake up, America. Blame O.J.; it won't do any good. Fault is irrelevant, and the longer we fight about it, the more children will die.

The rise in gang membership among all population groups, the increase in teen-age drug use and alcoholism, the rising drop-out rates are all indicative of the failure of society as a whole to care for its children.

And Bill Bennett and Jesse Jackson can argue all they want about causes, but neither will solve the problem until children become a priority in our nation.

We need to use our money to build schools and community centers, not prisons and bombers.

Even midnight basketball would help. We need a youth lobby (perhaps made up of parents) with as much influence as the elderly or labor or business or defense.

And before we get any of that, we need to encourage parents to care for their children.

A symptom of our increasingly driven society, parents' involvement in their childrens' activities at school and in the community is rapidly declining.

And if we don't begin to address these problems?

Bosnia and Northern Ireland will serve as our examples. Violence has become so commonplace, and the hatreds so ingrained, that the cycle may never end.

Though the IRA has declared and adhered to a cease-fire, the government still refuses to negotiate.

What type of society can refuse to even talk peace?

You don't want to live in that society. But if you aren't willing to take some responsibility for the world around you, you may have no choice.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

A letter to someone who survived a rape ...

Dear Anonymous,

Please excuse the way I have begun this letter. I don't know your name. As a matter of fact, I really don't know that much about you at all, like where you live or what your major is or where you're from. I don't even know how old you are.

I am writing to you because of what I do know about you. Two weeks ago, a man broke into your apartment while you were sleeping and your roommate was out. He woke you up, threatened to kill you and then he raped you.

I don't want to cause you any more pain by scraping a wound just beginning to heal, but knowing this one intimate detail of your life tells me so much about you, I want others to understand.

It doesn't matter how it happened, the fact that you survived the rape at all tells me how very smart and brave you are. Far too many women are killed or seriously maimed in a sexual attack. However you did it, you used your brains and your spirit, and you got out of a very bad situation without being killed. That's one gutsy act that has already defeated the cowardly son-of-a-bitch who assaulted you.

You called the police and reported it, which also proves you've got an incredible amount of courage. It would have been so easy to do as others have done: shower and change clothes, telling no one, thinking that not reporting would make it all magically go away.

I know it couldn't have been easy to go through the questioning and the medical examinations, but you must have known it was the only way to catch the freak. If you hadn't, he might have come back to you, or worse — done it to some other woman.

Your responsibility could have ended there, but you didn't stop with that. Four days later, you called the paper to make sure everyone else knew about what happened to you. It makes me feel like you were thinking of me and every other unsuspecting person on this campus when you did that.

Anonymous, I know that man violated your sense of security and privacy. I know he frightened and confused you. But, even in the face of this situation, you have responded with a dignity, an intelligence and a sense of responsibility that has me in admiration of your courage.

I am sorry for you. As a person who has helped several friends through the emotional ravages of sexual assault, I know the long road you, your family and your friends face.

It will be a challenge to learn how to trust and to learn how to live your life beyond the narrow confines of this incident.

I wrote to tell you, I know you'll make it through. Whatever happens, whether they catch the guy or not, you'll be all right. I strongly urge you to contact Susan Scott, the Women's Resource Center or University Counseling Services, if you have not already, to provide you with some extra emotional support. It will also give you the chance to be in contact with others in the same situation.

You don't have to go through the healing alone. If you ever need a voice of encouragement, take out this column and know, I and countless others on this campus, are right behind you.

Erin Mansur-Smith is a senior in pre-law, English and theater.

▶ HOUSING

Give residents the whole story

Dear Editor,

As president of Marlatt Hall and a long-term resident, I have the right to express my opinions of the Department of Housing and Dining Services. After reading the article of Putnam's new policies, I feel I must agree with Lisa Kay Blume's statement that there is a problem of "dictation of policies without input from the residents."

The Department of Housing and Dining does not have a good track record of letting their customers know exactly what the future holds for the places they live.

It also appears that there is no concern on their part of what residents think. Because of the lack of communication, the only way the residents of Marlatt Hall hear of new ideas is through the spread of rumors.

I believe that Housing is not making policies to inconvenience the residents, but the appearance of Housing's lack of concern frustrates residents when it comes time to implement the policies.

It is because of the lack of communication and reasoning behind the new policies that residents are adamant when it comes time to remove a freedom they have enjoyed since the buildings opened.

For example, Housing would like to lock the wing doors on Marlatt Hall 24 hours a day. Why? Because other universities require it.

Instead, show the customers the bottom line. Prove to us that locking the doors will save $10,000 in insurance premiums each year and/or the other ways it is benefiting the residents.

I believe it is the Hall Governing Board's responsibility to inform the residents of actions that the department is going to take. I also believe that HGBs and residents should be able to influence the policies handed down from the Pittman Building.

Hall Governing Boards are there to do more than just involve residents with other people within the University. They are also present to determine how the facilities in and around the hall are to be used.

▶ PARKING

Less important problems answered

Dear Editor,

I am writing in reference to the recently approved additions to the K-State Union.

Why does the K-State administration continue to push unnecessary improvements when there is a far more pressing problem: parking. I have just missed yet another class because I could not find a parking space. I drive through parking lot after parking lot only to find two, three, four, even five people waiting at the end of each row; waiting for the off chance that a spot will open up before the close of the business day.

Why does K-State keep avoiding the parking problem? Perhaps the members of the administration have reserved parking, so student parking is not very high on their priority list.

If K-State is going to raise tuition $25, why shouldn't we spend that money on the most pressing problem that students face: parking.

▶ POLICE

Officer just doing his job

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the Aug. 31 article, "Sidewalk Cyclist Fined, Handcuffed." I am tired of the public and liberal press constantly criticizing police action.

There are too many inconsistencies between Mr. Camp's and Officer Fenton's stories. Officer Fenton had no reason to alter the details concerning this incident. Fenton had every right to take the action he did.

Mr. Camp and Mr. Hubbard, on the other hand, had every reason to make sure that this incident is well-publicized because they want us to believe there is a major problem with the relationship between the campus police and the students.

If you have ever been involved with the police, you tend to sensationalize the experience. Mr. Camp was not being treated harshly because he was handcuffed. Handcuffing an individual is a safety measure taken by police to protect themselves.

Also, there are no left and right distinctions made on a pair of handcuffs. About the bikes, from the picture on the front page, Mr. Hubbard was not in the patrol car. Mr. Hubbard could easily have secured the bikes and then gone to the police station. The public will try and get the police in trouble for anything.

The editorial written by the Collegian Editorial Board also made me sick. A word of advice to K-State students: do not agree with this minority of people who by chance run the school newspaper. That editorial was so blown out of proportion, it was almost funny.

Mr. Camp was not treated like a "hard-core criminal" and he was not "paraded in front of campus like he was trying to shoot the president." I am almost to the point where I just skip the opinion page.

K-State given time to fix early mistakes

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

After a taste of victory over the Ragin' Cajuns, K-State football focuses on its next foe, the Rice Owls.

However, will a week away from the battlefield slow the team's momentum?

During a weekly press conference at Vanier Football Complex Tuesday, Bill Snyder said the break shouldn't sour the players' rhythm.

"There's always some concern with an off week," Snyder said. "But it shouldn't hurt us."

Snyder said the week will be beneficial for the players after their first game.

"We'll try to give them some time off during the latter part of the week," he said.

Although the Cats did win handily Saturday, Snyder said it wasn't a game that left nothing to be improved on.

"We made a lot of mistakes we need to improve on," Snyder said. "We'll create more high-intensity drills and scrimmages earlier in the week to give them more game-type situations to help in improving."

Communication is also an area that is cause for concern, Snyder said.

"There were some breakdowns to stop a couple drives, signals confused and other things we need to iron out," Snyder said.

"Our communication within the club needs to improve. This week gives us a chance to do that."

He said it will also give new players some time to look at what they need to work on.

"This gives them some time off to get their nose on what they need to do individually," he said. "This is especially beneficial to the new players after feeling all those first-game jitters Saturday."

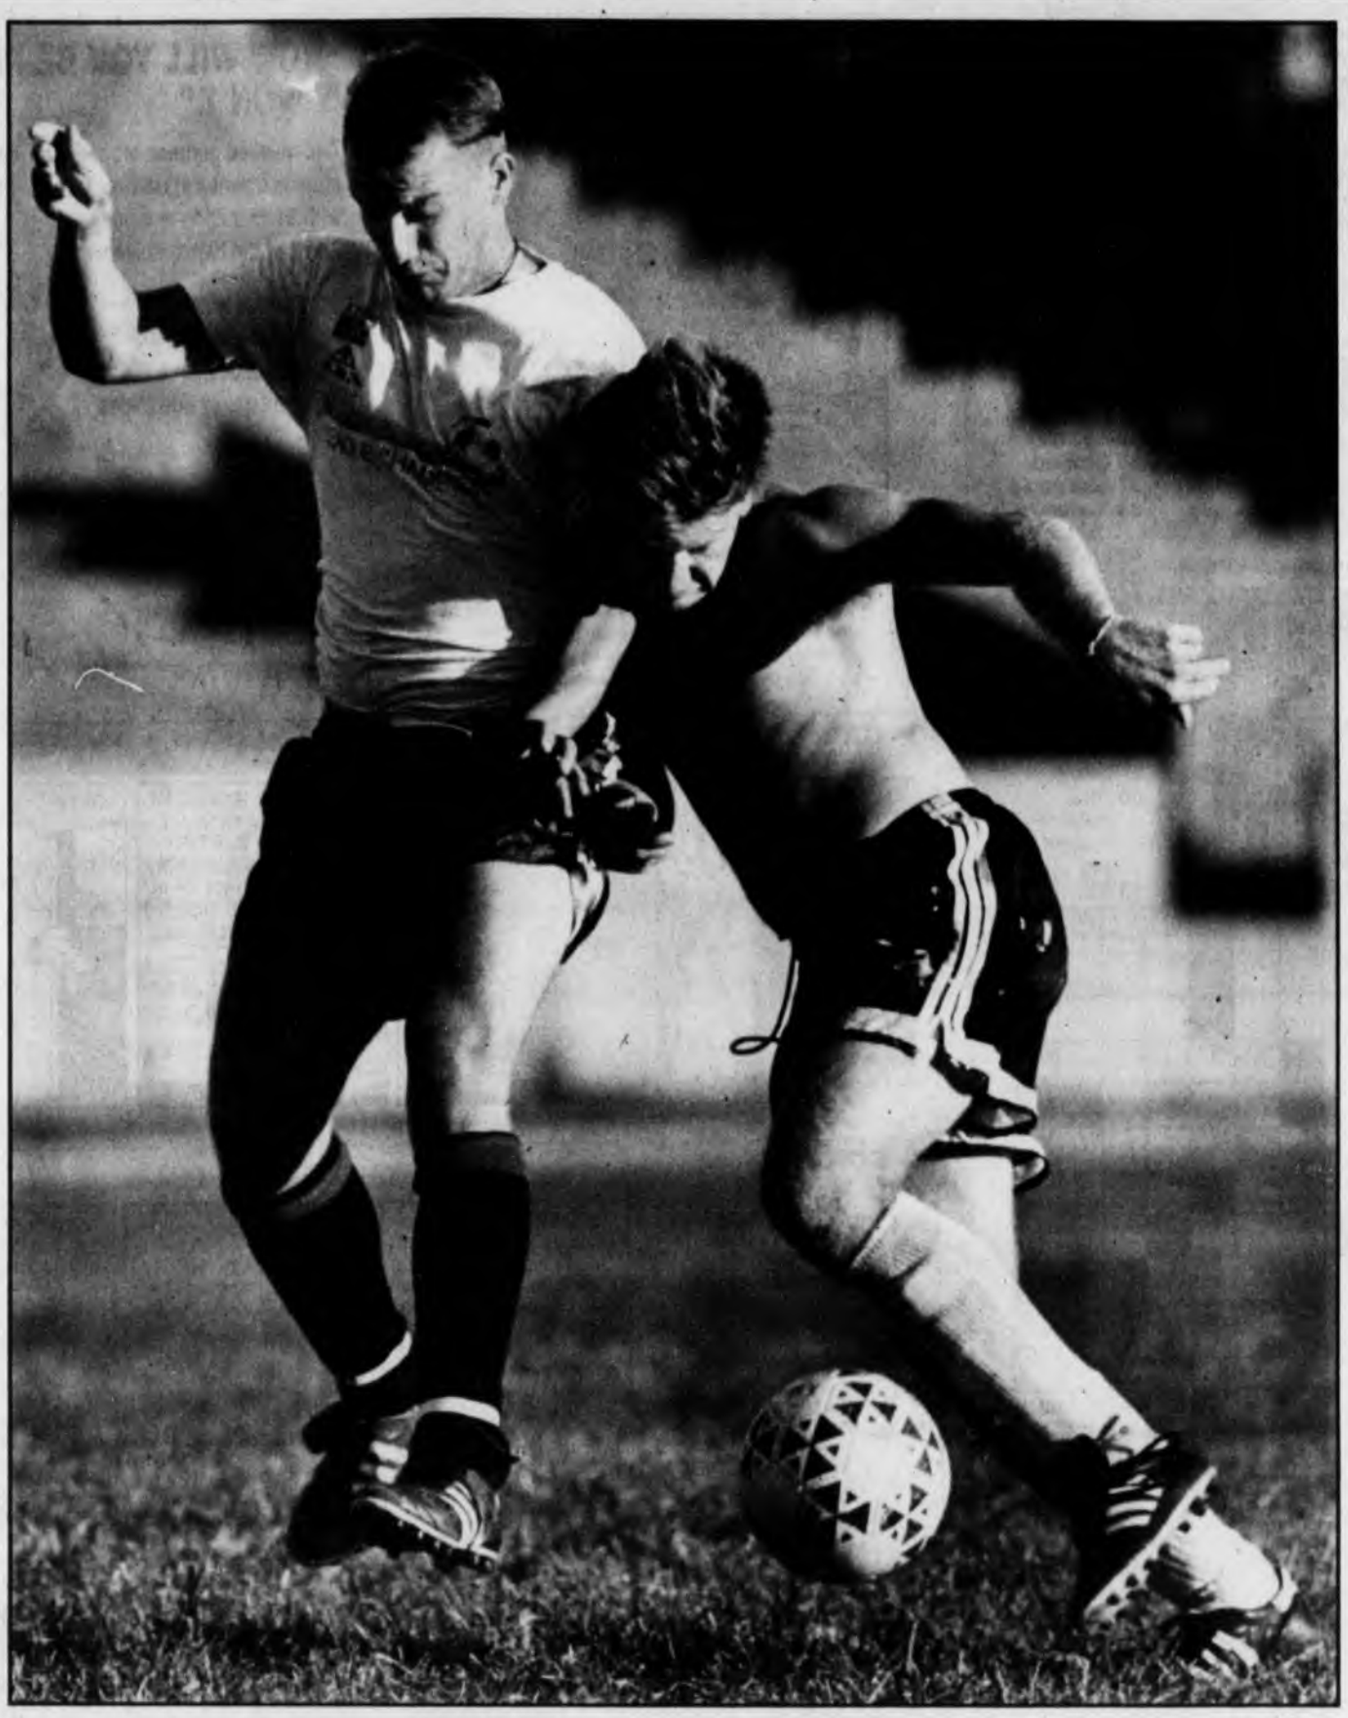
One freshman who didn't seem to show those jitters was kicker Martin Gramatica, who turned down a football scholarship to Notre Dame to play with the Cats.

Gramatica hit two field goals of 23 and 25 yards and connected on all three of his extra-point attempts.

"The first kick was the hardest with all the fans screaming," Gramatica said. "After that, it was like high school."

Another relatively new face on the field was punter Eric Hardy, who said he didn't have a bad day for his first outing in two years.

Hardy, who was redshirted at K-State in 1992, hasn't seen playing time since his days at Coffeyville Community College in 1991.



Last season, Hardy backed up punter Chad Romano, who started all 12 games.

"I was comfortable with Saturday's performance, but there is a lot I need to work on," Hardy said.

Although Snyder said he was happy with Hardy and Gramatica's performances on Saturday, they may not be in the No. 1 spot every week.

"We keep the kicker's position very competitive, just as we do any other position," Snyder said. "This brings out the best in players."

Hardy said he wouldn't have it any other way.

Student-athletes receive education

Scholarships offer athletes a chance to study and compete

JAMIE BUSH
Collegian

Athletic scholarships have always been debated and talked about, no matter what they are given for.

The word scholarship is defined by Webster's Dictionary as "money awarded to a student to help pay for further education."

Now, for an athlete competing in a varsity sport at K-State, it gives them a chance to receive a free or partially paid education, while still being able to participate in a sport they enjoy.

Every varsity sport at K-State has at least some scholarship money to offer to its potential student-athletes.

However, determining the amount awarded and in what quantities is often a long and complicated process.

"We sponsor the maximum amount of scholarships available," Mary Ann Andrews, NCAA regulations officer for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said.

The athletic programs at K-State are all limited by the NCAA in the amount of scholarships they are allowed to give.

However, the way scholarships are split up and divided among the student-athletes is where the discrepancy comes into play.

"K-State athletics is divided into two different sections in the way they are allowed to distribute their scholarship money," Andrews said.

First of all, there is what is called the "head count" sports, which is somewhat explanatory by its name.

These sports are allowed to give full-grant scholarships, which include tuition and fees, books, and room and board.

Each sport is allowed to give a certain amount of scholarships according to the number of student-athletes they have on the active roster.

According to this system, women's volleyball is allowed 12 scholarships; women's basketball can have 15; men's basketball is allowed 13, and football can have 85.

The second method of granting scholarship money is what is called an "equivalancy sport," which includes baseball, men's and women's cross-country and track and field, and men's and women's golf.

"According to NCAA regulations these equivalancy sports can provide one student-athlete, for example, with a 50 percent scholarship, and another student-athlete with 50 percent, as long as the total percentage given does not exceed a prescribed percentage assigned to the sport by the NCAA, " Andrews said.

These sports may also award full-grant scholarships as long as funds are available within the sports scholarship budget.

For example, baseball is allowed to give 11.7 equivalancy scholarships; men's cross country and track and field can give 12.6; women's cross country and track and field are allowed 16; men's golf can give 4.5, and women's golf has six scholarships.

Cross country coach Terry Drake said he feels the lack of scholarships available often holds back the success of the programs at K-State.

"I think on the men's side, it hurts us to support a full team," Drake said.

"It is forcing teams to specialize in the distance events or throwing events, and for us trying to support a full team, it is very hard to compete," he said.

The lack of scholarships may present a problem, but there are some positive things that come out of being able to give at least a few scholarships. That is something Drake said he feels is crucial.

"I think in the women's side it has opened the doors up for more women to be able to compete at the Division I level, as well as at the national level," Drake said.

▶ DEADLINE APPROACHING AS TWO SIDES MAKE LITTLE PROGRESS

NEW YORK — With two days left until the deadline for canceling the season, acting commissioner Bud Selig met with labor secretary Robert Reich, who was far from optimistic about the season continuing.

Reich said he didn't detect any movement in the owners' position, and the two sides are still very far apart.

Selig wouldn't comment on what was said. He wouldn't predict whether negotiations would resume before Friday's tentative deadline.

▶ RICE SURPASSES BROWN ON ALL-TIME TOUCHDOWN LIST

SAN FRANCISCO — Jerry Rice, perhaps the greatest receiver in football history, caught a pair of scoring passes and ran in a 23-yard reverse to become the NFL's career touchdown leader with 127.

The San Francisco 49ers receiver broke the record set by Cleveland Browns fullback Jim Brown in the 1950s and '60s.

Weekend filled with great games

Thank goodness K-State doesn't play football this weekend.

That may sound strange, but I would rather be watching the tube and watching half a day's worth of other college football than paying attention to a K-State game.

The weekend starts Thursday when the Nebraska Cornhuskers take on the Texas Tech Red Raiders in Lubbock, Texas, on ESPN.

The game, which starts at 7 p.m., features the No. 1-rated Cornhuskers, led by Heisman candidate Tommie Frazier. In last season's game, Nebraska was trailing 20-21 after three quarters before winning 50-27.

The Prime Network kicks off Saturday at 11 a.m. with a yawner unless you like one team dominating another — No. 4 Florida State at Maryland.

ESPN gets their triple-header started 30 minutes later with No. 25 Stanford at Northwestern.

Not a very interesting game, but if you have a hangover from the night before, you can sleep through this game.

The second game is the game of the day — No. 5 Michigan at No. 3 Notre Dame. This series is one of the top rivalries in the country because the winner becomes the immediate favorite to become national champion.

Last weekend, the Wolverines cruised by Boston College, while the Fighting Irish handled Northwestern. NBC (or NDN, the Notre Dame Network,) will televise the game at 1:30 p.m.

If there is more than one television set or if you aren't a loyal follower of either Michigan or Notre Dame, ABC will have regional coverage of three games starting at 2:30 p.m.

The best game of the three features No. 13 Southern California at No. 8 Penn State.

A win by the USC Trojans would make them the top team in the West. A win by the Nittany Lions would give them momentum going into the Big Ten Conference campaign.

BRIAN ANDERSON

Other games included are Louisville at No. 17 Texas and Kentucky at No. 2 Florida.

Florida lost its No. 1 ranking to Nebraska this week despite clobbering New Mexico State 70-21 last Saturday.

Now, if you have a radio that can pick up stations from Oklahoma, you may be able to listen to the No. 17 Sooners take on No. 15 Texas A&M at 4 p.m.

The game would be on television, but the Aggies are on probation and aren't allowed to be televised.

At 6 p.m., ESPN has No. 19 Tennessee at No. 22 Georgia.

Tennessee is coming off a 25-22 loss to UCLA, while Georgia's quarterback and Heisman candidate Eric Zeier threw for more than 450 yards in last week's win at South Carolina.

If you get tired of watching games on the set, drive down to Lawrence for the Michigan State-University of Kansas contest.

This game is a good test for both squads, and will be a good indication how good the Jayhawks will be.

If you get back to Manhattan, and you still want more football to watch, you can catch the end of the Miami Hurricanes-Arizona State Sun Devils game.

By the time you get back, the Hurricanes should have the contest in control. If you don't go to Lawrence, the game will start at 9:30 p.m.

Better not go to Aggieville and party. Catch a couple hours of sleep and fork over $500 for nose-bleed seats at Arrowhead Stadium for the San Francisco 49ers-Kansas City Chiefs game.

For those who stay in town, the battle starts at noon on Fox.

There it is, your personal guide for football for the weekend.

No need to watch the U.S. Open or cry over baseball games that aren't going to be played. It's football season.

REVIEW

'Drowning' gambles with viewers

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

To say that "Drowning by Numbers" is a weird movie is an understatement. This movie goes slightly beyond weird and into the realm of the bizarre.

This British film stars Joan Plowright as one of three women, all named Cissie, who drown their husbands for various reasons.

But this film is not so much about murder as it is about games. Games of all sorts play a large role in "Drowning by Numbers."

There are card games, children's games and even games with sheep mentioned throughout the course of the movie.

This movie is sort of a celebration of game playing. And there's more than just one kind of game being played.

The games that get the most attention here are the relationship games that people play with each other.

The women all play games with their husbands, before killing them, of course. They also play games with Madgett, the coroner, in getting him to help cover up the murders.

The three Cissies are ingenious when it comes to manipulating men, especially Madgett, and they only show the slightest remorse about killing their husbands.

"Drowning by Numbers" is a dark comedy acted with decidedly British wit. The humor is very dry and very subtle.

Sometimes the movie seems less like a movie and more like a painting.

There are tables full of weird objects in the foreground and strange people wandering through the background for apparently no reason.

The characters are, to say the least, intriguing, and the acting is well done.

One character that particularly sticks out is Smut, Madgett's son, who is obsessed with death, bugs and circumcision.

Smut, though not a central character, contributes to some of the stranger scenes in the movie.

Writer and director Peter Greenaway keeps the viewer constantly intrigued with recurring shots of bugs, people playing games and a strange little girl jumping rope and discussing games with Smut.

If that isn't enough to keep your eyes glued to the screen, try searching for the numbers one through 100. They have been carefully, and sometimes not so carefully, placed throughout the film.

Overall, "Drowning by Numbers" is a highly entertaining film that will no doubt hold the attention of anyone who likes to play games, enjoys the British sense of humor or is just into murder.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Hispanics left out of media melting pot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Even as television has improved its portrayal of black people, it increasingly has ignored Hispanic people and depicted them negatively, a new study concludes.

Hispanics are less visible in prime time than they were in the 1950s, the Center for Media and Public Affairs said in a report commissioned by a national Hispanic advocacy group.

While accounting for 9 percent of the U.S. population, Latinos comprised 1 percent of all characters portrayed during the 1992 television season.

The study was to be presented at a news conference Wednesday by Lichter and the National Council of La Raza, a civil rights group representing more than 100 Hispanic community organizations. The council commissioned the report and has criticized both entertainment and news media for their portrayal of Hispanics.

The center, which studies the media, concluded that Hispanics have been cast in negative roles proportionately more than both blacks and Anglo-Americans.

A breakdown of characters from 1992 found that 16 percent of the Hispanic characters committed crimes, compared to 4 percent each for blacks and Anglo-Americans. Hispanics were portrayed negatively 18 percent of the time, compared to 8 percent for Anglo-Americans and 6 percent for blacks.

Minorities remain more likely to be portrayed as working-class or poor, the study also found. In 1992, 28 percent of Hispanic characters were depicted as poor, compared to 24 percent of blacks and 18 percent of whites.

La Raza is seeking to emulate the successes that black civil-rights organizations have had in demanding more representation on television, Lisa Navarette, representative, said.

"There is no question that bigotry or racism certainly plays a role in this, but I think it has more to do with ignorance," she said.

K-State looking to reduce award, re-try case award for future loss of enjoyment of life was excessive based on Swink's testimony.

"The plaintiff's expert testified that she could enjoy and relate well to her children," Kassebaum said.

"Clearly, the award was wholly out of proportion to the evidence."

Kassebaum cited precedents that supported a $100,000 cap for non-economic damages and said that the jury had included loss of earning capacity when assessing damages.

"There was no evidence at trial regarding loss of earning capacity," she said.

Scott Hesse, representing Nero, said the jury hammered out a verdict based on the common sense of the jurors.

"K-State is attacking the evidence to get the result from the court that the jury would not give them," Hesse said.

"Don't take the message away that these people were sending to the bureaucrats in Anderson Hall," he said.

He said there was plenty of evidence that Nero had been traumatized by the sexual assault of Davenport, a 220-pound football player.

"As to enjoyment of life, what she went through, being attacked by Mr. Davenport, affected her enjoyment of life and will affect her in the future," he said.

Furthermore, after the attack, Nero withdrew from K-State, where she was enrolled in the pre-law program, and lost a chance at an education and possibly a profession, Hesse said.

"K-State was her college," he said. "K-State denied her an opportunity to get that higher education.

"She was attacked, and this denied her that opportunity," Hesse said.

Hesse said loss of a chance is compensable, but Kassebaum argued that during the trial, counsel for Nero made no claim for those damages.

To conclude, Kassebaum asked for the award to be reduced to $70,200.

"We suggest these figures are more appropriate," she said.

The motions will be decided by Judge Harlan Graham and communicated to the parties by memorandum.

Water, sewage concerns affect city annexation issue and sewer problems, or they were worried about the expenses that would be incurred.

The meeting gave residents and owners a chance to express their thoughts about the possible annexation.

"We are concerned about those who are having water and sewer problems," Don Kropf, Sargent addition resident, said. "But I have to say I'm also concerned for those people in our addition who are retired, who have fixed incomes and may lose their homes because of the high cost."

John Steffen, Sargent addition resident, said he favors being part of the city because he thinks in the long run it will be beneficial to everyone that lives there.

Before the vote was taken, Stunkel voiced her concern about the annexation proposal. She said that before Tuesday's meeting she was ready to approve it.

"Now having heard the public hearing, I can't support it because it feels like a predatory act to me," she said. "I think there are a lot of things the neighborhood needs to sort out among itself without having the city hanging over it."

PREVIEW FOR SEPT. 8-10

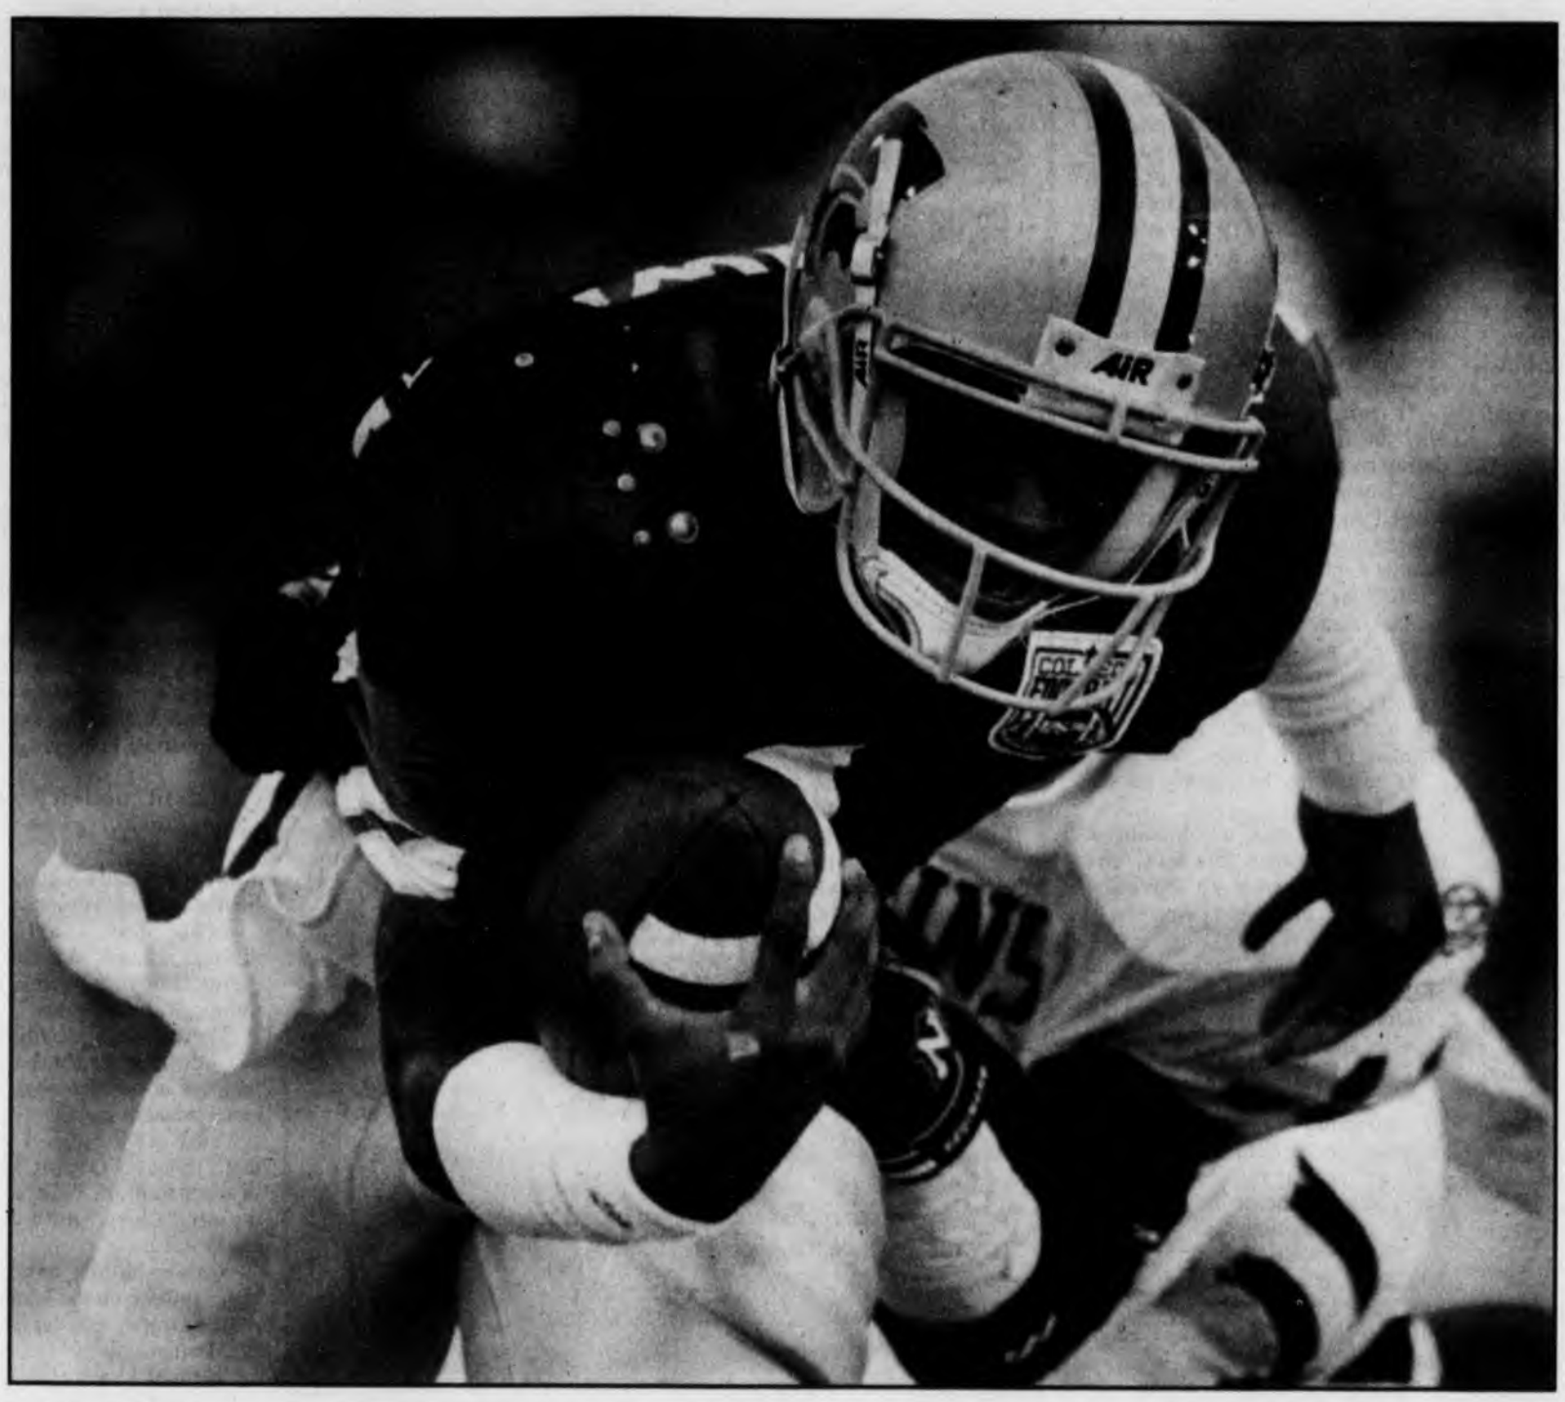
Nebraska at Texas Tech

When: Thursday, Sept. 8
Where: Jones Stadium (50,500)
About the Cornhuskers: The Big Red Machine is the No. 1 team in the country. They are led by Heisman canidate Tommie Frazier and tailback Lawrence Phillips.The offensive line is solid as usual for coach Tom Osborne.
About the Red Raiders: Last season, the Raiders finished with a 6-6 record, and they lost to Oklahoma in the John Hancock Bowl. This season, they return 13 starters, and their top returners are linebackers.

Oklahoma at Texas A&M

When: Saturday, Sept. 10
Where: Kyle Field (70,210)
About the Sooners: Oklahoma escaped with a victory last week in Syracuse. The Sooners opened up a 24-0 lead before allowing the Orangemen to make a comeback. Quarterback Garrick McGee made his debut.
About the Aggies: The Aggies opened their season with a victory over Lousiana State, and they are currently ranked No. 16 in the Associated Press Poll. The Aggies have Corey Pullig returning, along with fullback Cliff Groce.

Michigan State at Kansas



When: Saturday, Sept. 10
Where: Memorial Stadium (50,250)
About the Spartans: This will be the season opener for the Spartans. Last season, Michigan State finished 6-6, but they beat Kansas 31-14 in East Lansing, Mich. This season, the Spartans return 14 starters, and they are led by receiver Mill Coleman.
About the Jayhawks: The Jayhawks won their first game against Houston easily. This game will be KU's home opener, and they scheduled the game at 7:00 p.m. to get more fans in the stands. The Jayhawks are led by running back June Henley, and quarterback Asheki Preston.

Missouri at Illinois

When: Saturday, Sept. 10
Where: Memorial Stadium (70,904)
About the Tigers: The Tigers began their season under new coach Larry Smith with a loss to Tulsa. The Tigers are hoping to rebound with quarterback Jeff Handy leading the charge. Linebacker Derryl Major is considered one of the best linebackers in the Big Eight.
About the Illini: Illinois lost its first game against Washington State. Their linebackers are considered to be the best in the nation. Johnny Johnson he led the team to a 5-6 record last season.

Iowa State at Iowa

When: Saturday, Sept. 10
Where: Kinnick Stadium (70,397)
About the Cyclones: Iowa State opened its season with a loss to Northern Iowa. They are led by returning quarterback Todd Doxzon and defensive lineman Troy Peterson.
About the Hawkeyes: Iowa had an up and down season last year. They were competitive in Big Ten Conferene play, but they lost several non-conference games. Linebacker John Hartlieb is the leader on the Hawkeyes' defense.

K-State receiver Tyson Schwieger breaks through a Southwestern Louisiana defender, en route to one of his two touchdown receptions. Schwieger finished five receptions for 76 yards.

USL turnovers lead to K-State victory

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Coach Bill Snyder has always stressed that turnovers can win or lose football games.

His point could be seen clearly Saturday as K-State converted six Southwestern Louisiana turnovers into a 34-6 victory at KSU Stadium.

The Cajun's first turnover came when center Sam Heinen snapped the ball over quarterback Jake Delhomme's head.

The football rolled around on the ground, and strong safety Chuck Marlowe recovered the ball at the Cajun 13-yard line, with four minutes elapsed in the first quarter.

With the ball at the 13-yard line, K-State's offense took only two plays to punch it into the end zone. Quarterback Chad May hit receiver Tyson Schwieger on a short post route around the seven yard line, shed a tackler and dashed into the end zone to give the Cats an early 6-0 lead.

"I gave the defender an out-route fake, and he bit on it," Schwieger said. "I then made the defender miss me, and I made it into the end zone."

Freshman place-kicker Martin Gramatica added the extra point to give the Cats a 7-0 lead.

On the ensuing kickoff, Rod Schiller stripped the Cajun kickoff returner, and Joe Gordon recovered the ball for the Cats.

With the ball on the 17-yard line, the Cats drove the ball to the two-yard line, but they were unable to put it into the end zone.

Then K-State had to settle for a 23-yard Gramatica field goal, which extended their lead to 10-0.

The K-State defense forced the Cajuns to punt. Five plays later, the Cats' offense found the end zone on a one-yard touchdown plunge by fullback Dederick Kelly. Gramatica added the extra point, and extended their lead to 17-0.

Southwestern Louisiana coach Nelson Stokley said the early turnovers were costly.

"If we play like that and have six turnovers, we will never beat anybody," Stokley said. "We were a good enough team to win, but we didn't play well enough to win."

Snyder said the turnovers were key, and it allowed the offense to get into scoring field position.

"Most of the scores were a result of great field position," Snyder said. "The offense never actually had to drive the length of the field, because the defense and special teams set them up for the score."

The Cajuns did, however, answer with a touchdown of their own. It came on a four-yard run by tailback Steve Mocek. But on the extra point attempt, Percell Gaskins blocked the kick and the score remained 17-6.

After USL's scoring drive, both teams defenses' started to take over for the rest of the half. It wasn't midway through the third quarter when the Cats' special teams turned in another big play.

As the Cajuns lined up in punt formation at their 42-yard line, K-State placed 10 men on the line of scrimmage, appearing to make an attempt to block the punt.

The snap made it back to punter Mike Jones, but the punt was a low line drive.

Marlowe, who was standing behind the line of scrimmage, put his hand up and blocked the ball. He then recovered the ball, and returned it 17 yards to USL's 25-yard line.

"We got in and put some pressure on

K-State's defensive backfield pass their first real test

WESS HUDELSON

K-State's defensive backs endured their first test Saturday against Southwestern Louisiana.

Unlike other positions on the field, the Wildcats' defensive backfield was faced with replacing every one of its starters.

Lost were first-team all-American Jaime Mendez, second-team all-American Thomas Randolph, all-Big Eight selection Kenny McEntyre and two-year starter Kitt Rawlings.

If statistics have anything to do with judging a performance then the defensive backs would score an A.

Strong safety Clyde Johnson picked off two passes and free safety Steve Hanks intercepted one.

Additionally, strong safety Chuck Marlowe blocked a punt and recovered it. Cornerback Joe Gordon fell on a loose ball in the first quarter and both plays were turned into touchdowns by the offense.

Most important of all, the Cajuns were limited to six points for the game.

"There are some things that we still have to get worked out," Snyder said. "I think our defense played well and obviously the last line of defense was the secondary."

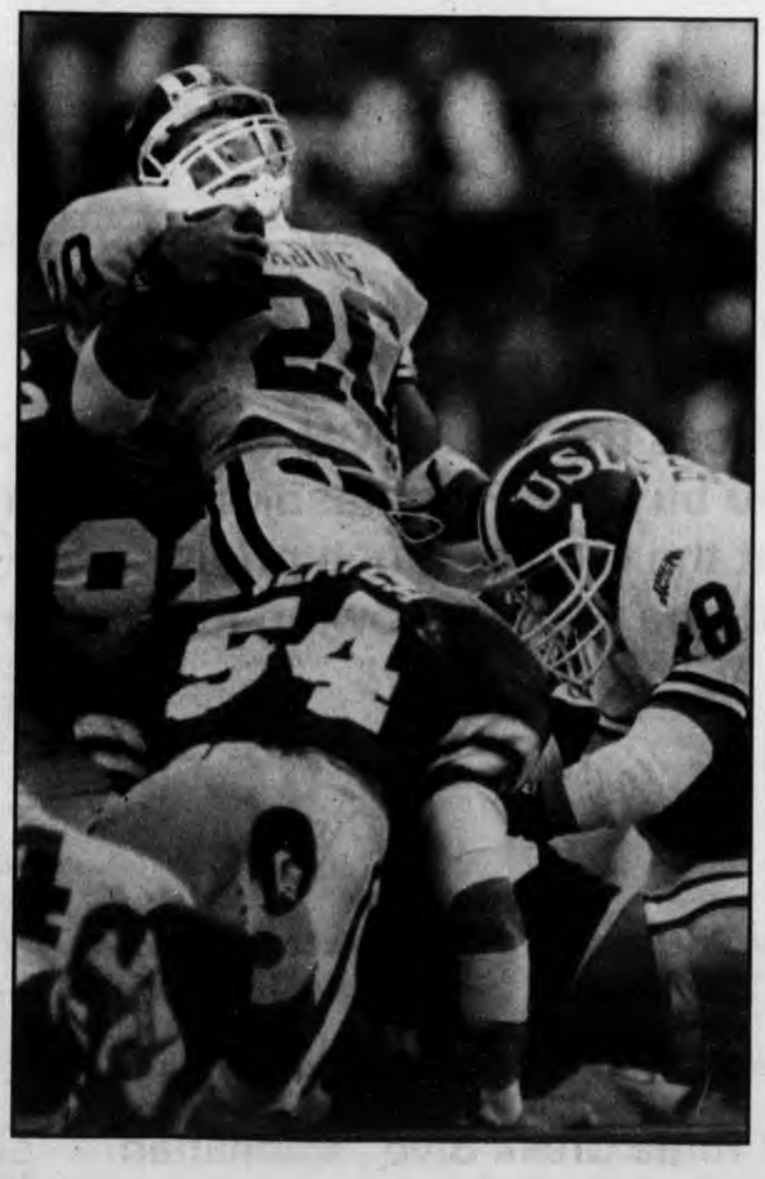
However, in the first quarter, Cajun quarterback Jake Delhomme completed all five of his passing attempts for 52 yards.

"It was the first game out and maybe we didn't click like we should," Johnson said. "We just need to read the plays better."

Johnson was playing in his first football game since 1988. Johnson was a redshirt for K-State during his freshman year, but decided to join the Army after that season.

"He's feeling good right now," Hanks said. "I feel good for him."

Hanks, who started three games last season and provides the only significant experience for the group, said the pressure to replace last year's players doesn't exist.



"Honestly, I don't feel any extra pressure," Hanks said.

"As long as we went out and played as hard as we could I knew there wouldn't be anything to worry about."

Marlowe, who played in six games last season, said he was happy with his performance, but there is room for improvement.

"A lot of people were looking at us and I think we came through," Marlowe said.

MITCH — RUNNING TO FIND SUCCESS

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

It was the "what ifs" that bothered him.

"What if" he stayed in Iowa to play football for a small school?

Or "what if" he took a chance at K-State, just to see what happened?

For Wildcat wide receiver Mitch Running, the choice was clear.

"A lot of people back home said I should have played maybe Division III or Division II ball, but I didn't think so," Running said.

ONE on ONE

"I knew if I did that, I'd look back someday and wonder, 'what if.' That's one of the main reasons I wanted to try and play here."

So far, that decision has made the junior from Decorah, Iowa, a walk-on success story.

Since his arrival in Manhattan, Running has been an unexpected surprise for the Cats.

As a walk-on in the fall of 1991, he eventually worked his way to the top of the depth chart, enough to earn a full scholarship in the spring of 1992.

Running made his presence known early in the '92 season, as his first collegiate reception went for a 73-yard gain against Montana.

As the Cats' fifth-leading receiver that year, Running said, he was looking for bigger and better in 1993.

He got it.

Alongside fellow receivers Andre Coleman and Kevin Lockett, Running was part of just the second trio in conference history to each snag at least 40 catches in one season.

Running's total of 41 catches for 466 yards put him at sixth place in the conference and earned him Honorable Mention spots on both the Associated Press and Big Eight Coaches' squads for the '93 season.

Running, who is former all-state quarterback without much experience as a receiver, said the opportunity to play wide receiver at K-State was enough to get him out of Iowa.

"I really wasn't happy with the way the Iowa schools treated me during recruiting," he said.

"Both Iowa and Iowa State wanted me to walk on, but they also wanted me to play free safety, and I wanted to play wide receiver.

"K-State and Coach Snyder gave me that chance."

Don't get the idea that this chance to play came easily, because it didn't. Running said he had to go the extra mile just to get the attention of the K-State coaches.

"I busted my butt pretty good," he said.

"The whole staff was looking at their scholarship players, the freshmen, so I had to go above and beyond what they were doing just to get looked at.

"After I did that, things just kind of fell into place."

Things did fall in place, for both the Cats and Running.

Two of the biggest K-State victories of last year were also some of Running's most exciting moments on the field.

"Last year at the Copper Bowl was probably one of the best times of my life," Running said.

"With about 15 thousand-plus fans there, it was just unbelievable. I've played in state championships, but they're nothing compared to that."

K-State's win against the Oklahoma Sooners also involved a special moment for Running.

> "A lot of people back home said I should have played maybe Division III or Division II ball, but I didn't think so."
>
> MITCH RUNNING
> K-State Receiver

"I caught the first touchdown of my college career last year in our game with Oklahoma, so that was pretty big, too," he said. "There have been some other special times since I've been here, but those two really stand out."

While Running said he and his teammates were happy with last year's accomplishments, he said they still think that the best is yet to come.

"Everyone on the team is just extremely positive at this point," he said.

"We're all excited for the season, and we just want to get everything going," Running said. "We just think we can expand on what we've done and make great strides this year."

Running is currently going through another "what if." During practice last week, he had ligaments torn in his thumb.

The injury needed to be operated on, and he could return for the Cats' next game against Rice.

Snyder said Running return depends on his progress.

"He could return against Rice or Minnesota," Sndyer said.

"The report now, is not as bad as originally sounded. He could be back sooner than we first thought."

While greater achievements may also be on the horizon for Running, he said his personal philosophy about making it in the college football ranks could help other walk-ons as well.

"You've just got to do it," he said. "You've just got to suck it up, go do it and give it your best. If you fail, you fail, but you won't ever be asking yourself, 'what if?'"

RUNNING'S CAREER AS A WILDCAT

- The first catch of Mitch Running's career as a freshman in 1992 went for 72 yards against Montana.
- The first touchdown of his career came in last year's win over Oklahoma.
- He had a career-high eight receptions for 84 yards in the Cats' 10-9 win against Kansas.
- He caught at least one pass in each of the 12 games last season to extend his streak to 13 games entering 1994.

Big 12 Championship game a possibility

Big Eight football coaches reactions are mixed

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The newly assembled Big Twelve could be weeks away from making a monumental decision.

The decision is whether or not to have a Big Twelve championship football game, and where to play it.

"The athletic directors will have to consider what scenario will best maximize revenue before they make a decision in Kansas City later this month," President Jon Wefald said.

"We could have a playoff game after the north and south division winners have been determined. Their hope from this game is to generate $3 to $5 million."

Jim Walden, Iowa State's coach, also said the main goal of the game is for financial gain.

"I think the playoffs will produce monetarily, and let's face it, we are money-driven now," Walden said. "Anybody who believes any less than that is not into the reality of the world.

"Football is paying all of the bills."

Wefald outlined what the championship game would be based on.

"It is basically modeled after the Southeastern Conference," he said.

"They have east and west division winners in a championship game. They generate around 5 million with that game."

The coaches around the soon-extinct Big Eight have mixed feelings about the possibility of a championship game.

"Just off the top, I would say that I probably favor it, but I want a few particulars before I commit myself," Larry Smith, Missouri's coach, said.

Walden didn't have quite the same outlook on the situation.

"I think it's a terrible idea," Walden said.

"We'll probably never have another national champion again if we go to it. If a team has to play 13 games with five or six teams of equal ability, I think that they'll forfeit the chance to be in the hunt."

Colorado's coach, Bill McCartney, said there is a need for caution before a decision is made.

"If we're going to go for a national championship, let's not do anything that would keep us from having as many candidates as possible," he said. "A championship game could do that."

K-State coach Bill Snyder, said he worries about the type of bowl bid the championship runner-up would receive.

"I firmly believe that we would have at least two tier-one bowl games if we had two divisional champions," he said.

Kansas coach Glen Mason said a championship would make sense.

"It's inevitable," Mason said. "If you're going to have two divisions and you're not going to have a playoff, what the heck are you having a conference for?"

Wefald summed up the coaches concerns.

"The coaches are saying that if you have a playoff, and you have a 9-0 champion and a 8-1 champion, the loser may not get a very good bowl game," he said.

"Also, if there is a national championship game, does it make sense to have a conference championship when our divisional champions could conceivably play for the national title?"

Wefald said the determining factor to whether the National Collegiate Athletic Association adopts a championship game depends on if they keep the current bowl system.

"If we keep the current bowl system, then most people want a playoff within our conference," he said. "My opinion is that what will probably happen is that the conference will probably adopt a championship game.

"If down the road a national championship playoff system is developed, we will drop our playoff."

K-State breaks losing streak

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Four volleyball teams opened their seasons at a round robin tournament hosted by K-State.

The Stephen F. Austin Ladyjacks and the New Orleans Privateers kicked off the tournament Friday night.

The Privateers jumped into the lead of the first game 5-2, but soon gave up their lead and seemingly the game at 7-12. However, New Orleans roared back behind several crushing kills by senior outside hitter Megan Majerus to win the game 15-12.

New Orleans won the second game, but had a hard time controlling sophomore outside hitter Krisna Johnson in the third game as the Ladyjacks won 15-11.

The Privateers were too much though, as they finished Stephen F. Austin, 15-11 in the fourth game.

Kristin O'Hearn led New Orleans in kills with 22 and digs with 20. Johnson led Stephen F. Austin with 21 kills while Joycee Curry had 15 kills and 21 digs.

In the second and last match of the night, the Ohio Bearcats took on the K-State Wildcats.

Ohio fell behind early, 0-4, but then took control and won the first game, 15-11.

It was the Cat's turn to make a comeback as they won the next two games 15-13 and 15-6, after starting out at 3-7 and 2-5.

Ohio then dominated the fourth game, 15-6, which sent the match to a fifth and deciding game.

The Cats were too tough for the Bearcats and prevailed, 15-8, breaking a 16-match losing streak from last year in the process.

Shannen Braden, sophomore setter for the Bearcats, said the Cats were tough.

"They play a very quick game at times and they have some very nice players," she said. "I'm glad we were able to hang with a Big Eight Conference school because I know they have some really tough competition."

Yolanda Young led the Wildcats with 19 kills, followed by Debbie Miller with 12, and Kate DeClerk with 11. Ohio was led in kills and digs by Lori Dyer with 19 and 20.

To start off Saturday, K-State took on Stephen F. Austin.

The Wildcats picked up where they left off the night before, and controlled the Ladyjacks, 15-11, 15-6 and 15-11.

Young once again led the Cats in kills, with 15, while Suzanne Hagge came off the bench for 10. Jill Dugan recorded three solo blocks and five assisted.

Stephen F. Austin was led by Krisna Johnson with 12 kills and setter Terri Sherrill had 27 assists without an error.

In the fifth match, Stephen F. Austin played and dominated Ohio.

The Ladyjacks needed only one hour and 10 minutes to discard of the Bearcats, 15-6, 15-13 and 15-8.

Krisna Johnson provided 14 kills and Joycee Curry 13 for the Jacks, while setter Terri Sherrill recorded 41 assists without an error. Lori Dyer had 12 kills for the Bearcats.

In the final game, K-State took on New Orleans. The Cats needed a victory to go undefeated and win the tournament.

That is exactly what they did.

After three tight games and two Wildcat wins, 15-12, 12-15 and 16-14, they dominated the final game, 15-5, to finish off the tournament in impressive fashion.

"We won because we battled." K-State coach, Jim Moore, said. "We have so much to improve on.

"We did some silly things, but when we got out of control we seemed to regain it quickly, so I'm pleased from that standpoint."

Young had 21 kills and Devon Ryning provided 38 assists without an error for K-State.

K-STATE GOES 3-0

- K-State broke its 16 match losing streak with three victories in the KSU Invitational
- Outside hitter Yolanda Young led the Wildcats with 19 kills against Ohio
- The Cats defeated New Orleans for the championship 15-12, 12-15, 16-14, and 15-5

Unexpected starters make big contributions

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

When the K-State volleyball team took the court at this past weekend's KSU Invitational, there were a few surprises about who stepped on the court.

The most significant of these surprises was freshman Devon Ryning starting in front of junior and two-time letter winner Chi Dau in Friday's match.

"It was the hardest personnel decision that I've ever had to make," K-State coach Jim Moore said. "It's been close all throughout practice.

"Devon's been doing some really good things, and she played really well tonight."

Ryning recorded 44 assists with only five handling errors.

On Saturday, after Ryning played the first game of the match against Stephen F. Austin, she was replaced by Dau.

"I took her out because, and I told Devon this, that we needed a change in chemistry." Moore said.

Ryning said she had no ill feelings about the decision.

"I had no problem with it at all," she said. "I don't think it's something that should be focused on.

"Whatever gets us the win is fine with me."

Dau went on to record 32 assists with only two handling errors in the last two games in the victory over Stephen F. Austin.

In the final match against New Orleans, Ryning saw the majority of the playing time, notching 38 assists without an error. Dau added 11 assists.

Sophomore Gigi Ghattas was unable to play because of an injury and allowed juniors Debbie Miller and Suzanne Hagge extensive playing time.

Ghattas, who received some playing time last year, sprained her ankle in practice and did not play in the tournament. Moore said Miller has been practicing well.

"Debbie wasn't in there because Gigi was hurt," Moore said. "She was in there because she's been playing great."

Miller had 26 attacks and managed 12 kills with only two errors for a team high .385 kill percentage on Friday night.

Hagge, after not playing at all on Friday, provided 10 kills out of 14 attacks for a .643 kill percentage against Stephen F. Austin.

"I didn't necessarily expect to play that much, but I'm always ready." Hagge said.

Ryning said that always being ready to come off the bench is one of the attributes of this year's version of the Wildcats.

"I don't think any of us would be surprised to play," she said. "That's what's great about our team. When people go in, our level of play remains high."

"Devon has been doing some really good things, and she played well tonight."

Jennings hired as assistant coach

New assistant spent summer as PGA assistant

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

K-State graduate Tim Jennings has been added as an assistant coach to the golf team this season.

Jennings, who played golf for the Wildcats from 1986 to 1990, will be working mainly with the women's team.

He has spent the past couple of years teaching, Coach Mark Elliott said.

"Tim has spent a lot of time teaching and will be good for the players," Elliott said.

Jennings spent this summer as an assistant to a Professional Golf Association member. He also taught lessons to children and worked in a pro shop.

"I really enjoy the teaching," Jennings said. "Since I was a sophomore in college, I knew I wanted to teach."

A problem that former assistant coach Jim Brenneman faced was gaining the respect of his players, Elliott said.

"I think it will be easier for Tim to do that since he was gone before these players started playing," Elliott said.

Jennings said there will be a difference between coaching younger players and coaching the women's team.

"My youth won't be a problem," Jennings said.

"Being only 26, I'm not far removed from the problems the players face.

"I'll be able to help the players deal with their problems."

At the same time, Jennings will also be a new kid on an old block.

"Part of me will feel like an incoming freshman because of some new things," Jennings said, "but you can gain a lot by selling yourself."

His presence could also bring a lot of enthusiasm to the squad, Elliot said.

"Any time you bring in a first-year coach, it's going to spark some excitement in the players," Elliott said.

In high school, Jennings played for a team that captured the Kansas 5A state championship

Then he came to K-State, where he felt comfortable and right at home, he said.

That was a big reason he decided to come back and help the women's team this season.

"A big reason I came back to Manhattan is because I enjoyed the campus and the people when I was here," Jennings said.

"Being familiar with the community will help me as a coach."

Jennings said he can't wait to get back into the swing of things with the team.

"I'm very excited and ready to go," Jennings said.

TIM JENNINGS' GOLFING RESUME

- Jennings played golf for Bishop Ward High School, and captured the Kansas 5A state championship
- Spent this past summer as an assistant to a Professional Golf Association member.
- Spent time teaching golf lessons to children

K-State soccer program not a club sport anymore

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The Kansas State men's soccer team may very well be one step away from its ultimate goal.

That goal is to become a sanctioned sport.

The program was promoted from a club to a University sport this year.

The promotion came when the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics gave the team money for goals, equipment and traveling costs to tournaments.

"Some of the teams being added to the league with the inception of the Big Twelve have scholarship players," Bart Vance, a forward on the team, said.

"So we should be close to becoming a scholarship sport."

Not only does this transition affect the depth of their pockets, but also their schedule.

"The difference this year is that we are in a new league that makes our schedule all out in advance," Brent Carpani, a defender, said.

"Last year, we basically had to call around and ask if teams wanted to play."

Although the new schedule is not out yet, both Vance and Carpani figured that the schedule would consist mostly of the Big Twelve teams.

They are also anticipating playing in some tournaments, including the Shartrand Tournament in Manhattan.

As for the team's chances this year, things are also looking up in that regard, Vance said.

Only a few players were lost to graduation, and in addition, many players have transferred to K-State from smaller schools.

"Last year was a transitional year for us," Vance said.

"But with about everyone returning, we should be a pretty tough team."

Carpani also liked his team's chances for the season.

"Once we start practicing, we'll get back into shape and we'll be ready to go," Carpani said.

With the start of this new league, there is a chance to qualify for a national tournament.

"I'm not sure about the format," Carpani said, "but we'll probably have to place either first or second in the Central division in order to make it to nationals."

The players are also hoping for a big turnout at their games, because of the focus on soccer due to the World Cup this summer.

"The players and the athletic department seem so much more excited about our program this year," Carpani said.

"Even people that normally don't follow soccer are starting to get into it."

Vance said the Wildcats should be more fun to watch this season.

"I think the fan support will be better this year because we're going to be an exciting team to watch," Vance said.

"Also, everybody seems to be a lot more interested due to the World Cup."

Cats' offense rack up points

their punter," Snyder said. "Chuck was downfield, and just recovered it for us."

The Cats' offense drove the ball to the goal line, but the Cajun defense stopped them on three straight plays at the one-yard line, bringing up a fourth-and-inches situation, and Snyder decided to go for it.

Instead of trying to score up the middle, K-State decided to take the ball outside with an option play to the right.

May ran down the line, and he was then hit by a USL defender.

As he was being dragged down, he pitched the ball to J.J. Smith, who zipped into the end zone for the touchdown, which brought the score to 24-6.

The Cats' final touchdown came on another touchdown pass from May to Schwieger. This time, the duo connected on a 38-yard strike over the middle to bring the score to 34-6.

"It was an option route," Schwieger said.

"They were blitzing us, and Chad and I made the right read."

"The defender was right on me, he was coming, he almost got to me," he said.

Snyder said it was good to get the win, but there are some things that the team needs to improve on.

"We are capable of being a good team," Snyder said.

"We have to get some mistakes fixed, and we need to iron out our communication. It was good to win though."

Schwieger said he rated the offenses' performance as average.

"I don't want to take anything away from them," Schwieger said. "But I rate our overall performance as a 'C'."

With the victory, K-State jumped into the USA Today-CNN top 25 poll at number 24.

The Associated Press poll has the Cats ranked No. 29. They are tied with Kansas.

Marlowe and Johnson lead the way

"I missed a few tackles and I think we could improve communication."

Because Marlowe and Hanks are the only players with experience, Marlowe said he felt he could assume a leadership role after Saturday's game.

"If it's necessary, I think I could assume a leadership role," Marlowe said. "I'm trying along with Steve (Hanks) to do that in practice."

Johnson gave credit for his performance in the first game to assistant coach Bob Stoops.

"He is my inspiration," Johnson said."

"I believe in my heart, he's the best secondary coach in the nation by far."

Marlowe said much more is yet to be seen.

"They say that the most improvement comes between the first and second games," Marlowe said.

The defensive backs will have an extra week to analyze mistakes made during their first game before taking on the Rice Owls on Sept. 17 at KSU Stadium. The game is scheduled to start at 1:10 p.m.

Former student body president works campaign

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

Jackie McClaskey, former K-State student body president, is hard at work on Sam Brownback's campaign for congress.

McClaskey is serving as Brownback's press secretary.

"I've known Sam for a long time," McClaskey said.

"We're a good fit. I wouldn't do this for anyone else."

McClaskey worked closely with Brownback last summer while she was working for the Board of Agriculture. In addition, she and Brownback knew each other from a variety of other activities, including FFA.

"I enjoy working with people, and I believe in what I am doing," McClaskey said.

"That's the reason I'm here."

"This is not your normal 40-hour-a-week job," McClaskey said.

Everybody helps out with everybody else's projects, she said.

McClaskey said that she is learning a lot and having a lot of fun.

However, she said there are some negative aspects of the campaign.

There are two things she does not enjoy about political campaigns — negative campaigning and fundraisers, McClaskey said.

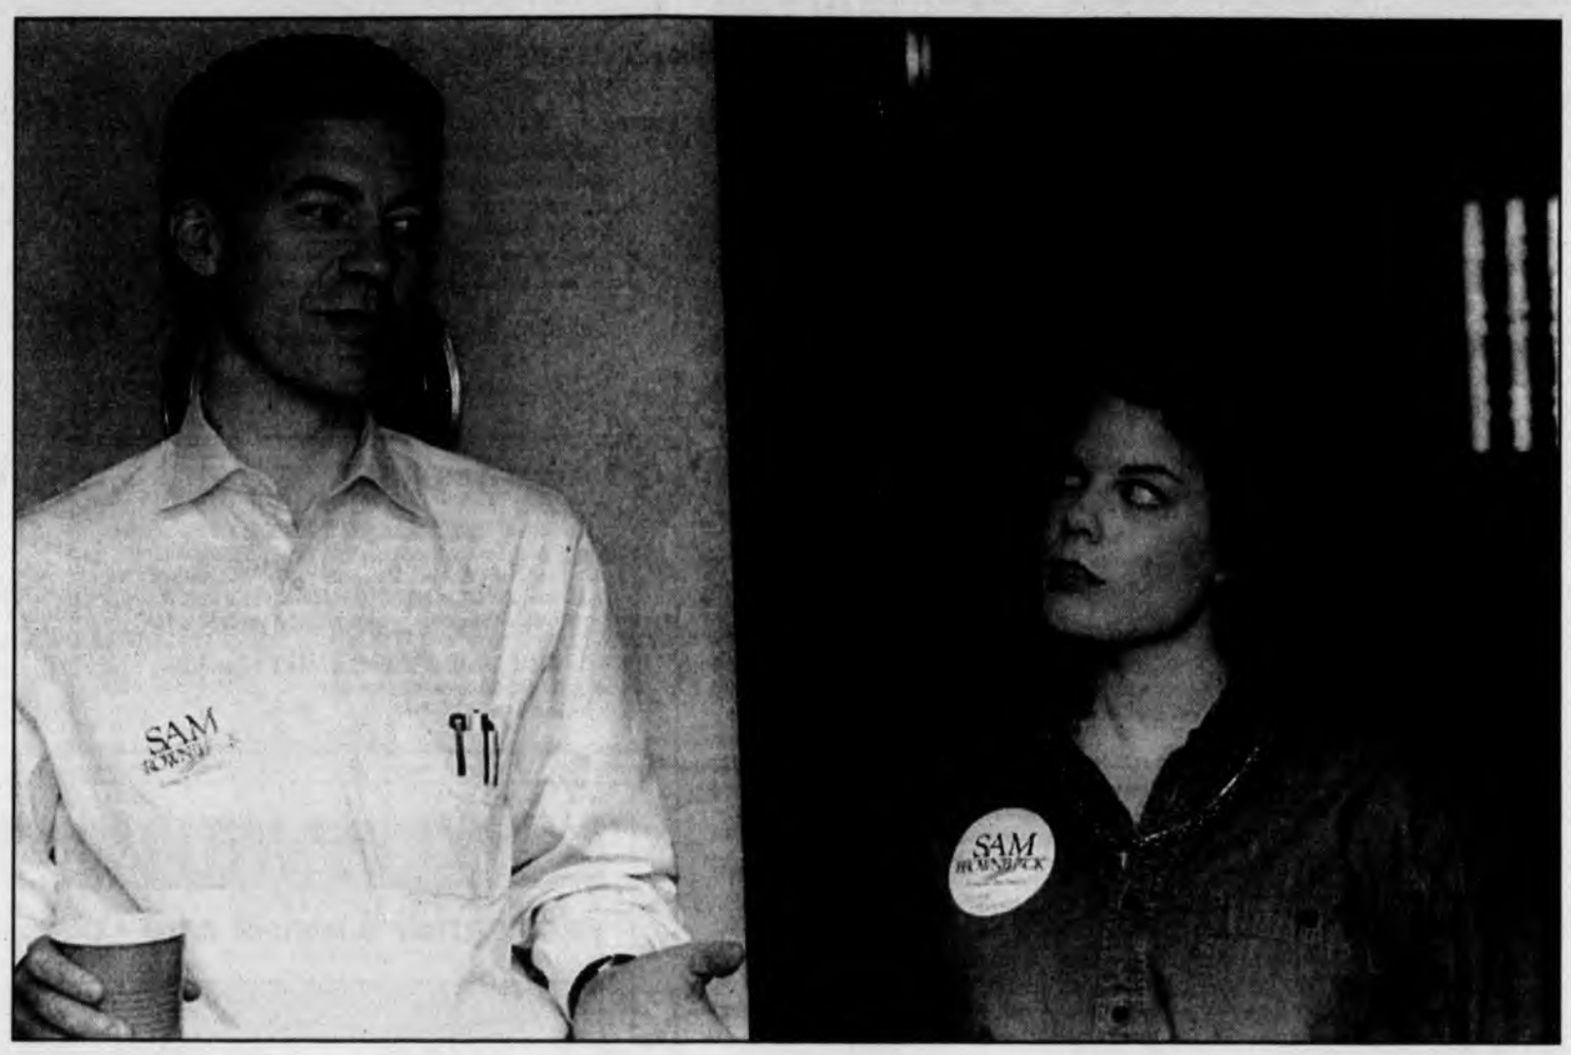
"I don't like seeing people take personal issues into the campaign," McClaskey said.

"There are so many important issues such as crime and healthcare to be talking about," she said.

"There is no reason to get off the issues."

In addition, McClaskey said that it is frustrating that the system puts such an emphasis on fundraising.

She said that she has been to every kind of fundraiser there is, from backyard barbecues to high-dollar dinners.



As far as booking interviews for Brownback and working with the media, McClaskey said that everybody has been very understanding.

"Timing is important," McClaskey said.

She said that everyone is more interested in the campaign when it is near the election.

"We're in a down time now," McClaskey said.

A cardboard cutout of Willie the Wildcat peers over the shoulder of John Carlin's campaign manager.

Just three months ago, Fred Wingert was a student at K-State getting ready to receive his degree in business marketing.

Today, this 24-year-old, the one with a purple cat watching over him, is responsible for running Carlin's bid against Sam Brownback in the 2nd Congressional District.

"If you would have asked me a year ago today, this is probably the last thing in the world I thought I would be doing," Wingert said from Carlin's campaign headquarters in Topeka.

It was about one year ago when Carlin came to him and expressed his interest in running for Congress. Wingert told the former governor he thought it was a great idea.

Some time later, Carlin confirmed he was indeed entering the race and he asked Wingert if he would be his campaign manager.

Today, he oversees every aspect of the Carlin-for-Congress campaign. With that comes the responsibility of working with everything from fundraising to the media.

"It is quite a challenge," Wingert said, referring to

▶ SEXUAL ASSAULT

LEGAL DEFINITION OF RAPE

In 1993, the Kansas Legislature amended the law on rape. K.S.A. 21-3502 as amended reads as follows:

Rape is sexual intercourse with a person who does not consent to the sexual intercourse, under any of the following circumstance:
(a) When the victim is overcome by force or fear;
(b) When the victim is unconscious or physically powerless; or
(c) When the victim is incapable of giving consent because of mental deficiency or disease, or when the victim is incapable of giving consent because of the effect of an alcoholic liquor, narcotic, drug or other substance, which condition was known by the offender or was reasonably apparent to the offender.

Before July 1, 1993, section (c) read as follows:

When the victim is incapable of giving consent because of the effect of any alcoholic liquor, narcotic, drug or other substance administered to the victim by the offender, or by another person with the offender's knowledge, unless the victim voluntarily consumes or allows the administration of the substance with the knowledge of its nature.

Knowing the system aids the prosecution

ANNETTE RIEDL
Collegian

Rape victims who know how the legal system works have a better chance of getting the justice they want, local attorneys said.

Bill Kennedy, Riley County district attorney, said rape is a tough crime to prosecute.

Jennifer Kassebaum, assistant University attorney, said the issue of rape in a courtroom is usually over consent.

"Rape is a crime where there are no eyewitnesses," she said. "It is an act between two people. It is difficult to prove whether or not there was consent when only two people were present."

Thus, when prosecuting, the prosecution looks for other evidence, such as medical and circumstantial evidence, Kassebaum said.

"The first thing a victim should do is call the police and get to the hospital," Gabrielle Thompson, managing attorney of legal services, said.

"It's important that the police preserve the crime scene for evidence," she said.

Mizzou likely to suspend students guilty of rape

The University of Missouri's sexual-violence policy incorporates local police, the courts and the Office of Student Affairs.

BOB MACHA
Collegian

At the University of Missouri, if a student is found guilty of rape on campus, they would likely be suspended from the university.

"They could be suspended for the term and maybe for life," Kelly Mescher, an attorney in the Office of General Counsel for the University, said.

This is if the rape happens on the campus. If it doesn't happen on campus, then the university would just cooperate with the local police and courts, Mescher said.

She said the first step for a student accused of rape on campus would be investigation by campus police and then a hearing before the Office of Student Affairs to determine if there is evidence to support the charge of rape.

sexual VIOLENCE policy

If there's enough evidence, the process continues. The Office of Student Affairs becomes like a prosecuting attorney in another court like district court, she said.

If a student is to be tried for the crime, then they would go before the Student Disciplinary Committee, which is a group of faculty and students appointed by the chancellor.

The committee then will determine the guilt of the student and what will happen to them.

Mescher said if a student is found guilty of rape, then the student would probably be suspended from MU for the term and maybe for life.

Jack Watiring, associate director of the MU campus police said they have had one rape reported so far this calendar year. They had none last year. One rape was reported in both 1992 and 1991, he said.

He said the division has three plainclothes officers. Each one of them is assigned to the residence halls.

Watiring said the Crime Prevention Division goes around to residence-hall floors presenting seminars on how to avoid being raped.

Roxanne Robinson, crime prevention officer, said they teach students to stay out of situations where they might be raped.

"We try to teach self-preservation," Robinson said. "We tell students to constantly be aware of where they are at. For example, if a woman is all alone and she sees three drunk men, she would want to go to the other side of the street."

▶ VOLUNTEERS

Facing death made easier by volunteers

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

Homecare and Hospice volunteers try to make life in the face of death a little more bearable.

Volunteers work with physicians, clergy and social workers to provide support for the terminally ill patients and their families. During this time, volunteers can provide support and companionship.

Sherry Wheeler, Homecare and Hospice of Manhattan coordinator, said when you work with someone who is terminally ill, you not only help them, but you help yourself by learning more about life and death.

The Hospice program is looking for volunteers "to make the road less lonely, because we're all going to go down that road," Wheeler said.

Training sessions start today and continue through Sept. 29 at the Homecare and Hospice offices at 323 Poyntz Ave.

Some of the areas volunteers can help are by visiting patients, getting groceries, running errands or even helping with minor home repair and light housework.

She said the biggest thing for volunteers is giving a family-care giver a much-needed break.

"Let's say a wife is taking care of her dying husband," she said. "They are there 24 hours a day. They can get really stressed out."

The Hospice volunteers are brought in once a week, she said, to give the caregiver some time by themselves. During this time, the volunteers can do everything from straighten up the house or simply sit by the bedside and keep the patient company.

Jeannie Nelson at one time had been a caregiver, but now she is a Hospice volunteer. She said she knows how difficult it can be and how important it is to get an occasional break.

▶ UPC STUDENT ART SHOW SHOWCASES STUDENTS' WORK, RÉSUMÉ BUILDER

Students have the opportunity to show their creative side in the Fall 1994 Student Art Show.

Entry acceptance began Aug. 24 and will continue through Monday, Sept. 19.

"Students may bring their work to the UPC office on the third floor in the Union," Michael Ott, student coordinator and senior in pre-medicine and business administration, said.

Entries are accepted between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.

The entry may be either two dimensional, three dimensional or a graphic-design piece. All entries must be framed.

"Last year we had an accident with glass breaking, so this year we are requiring that there be a frame on the piece rather than a uni-frame that just clips the glass on," Ott said.

Participation is expected to be high because of a new guideline that allows students to enter two pieces in each category, Ott said.

The winners will be displayed in the K-State Union Art Gallery from Sept. 26 to Oct. 14.

Leah Cunnick, senior in fine arts and past exhibitor, said a student show is a good résumé builder and gives artists public exposure that will help them in the future.

Sharon Willits, program adviser, said the event is taking place earlier than in past years.

With the new guidelines allowing more entries, the turnout might be a surprise, she said.

"In the past, we have had three judges, but if the turnout is good, I will try to find four to help handle the usual three- to four-hour job of judging," Ott said.

Judging is done by people not associated with the campus to help keep the art from being judged by a professor who assigned the piece and also to get a fresh view from the outside, Ott said.

Art pieces will be accepted on the basis of their being in a frame and being presentable, not on whether the Union Program Council feels they are art, Ott said.

▶ RED PANDAS HAVE NEW FRIEND IN MANHATTAN; SUNSET EXPERT CHOSEN

A K-State alumnus has been elected to the Red Panda Species Survival Management Group.

Mike Quick, general curator for Sunset Zoo and a 1986 K-State graduate in wildlife biology, was elected to the group and is serving a one-year term.

The nine-member group was elected from zoos across the United States and Canada.

Elected members of the Red Panda Species Survival Management Group are from the Denver Zoo, Metro Toronto Zoo and Seattle Zoo, among others.

"A ballot was given to all the institutions with red pandas in the U.S.," Quick said.

"The group discusses management options for the red panda," Quick said. "We are not only trying to maintain the red panda while they are in the zoo, but we determine how to help them return to the wild.

"We have to make sure the animals are healthy and capable of returning to the wild. This includes preparing the animals genetically and preparing their behaviors and traits so they can survive."

The Red Panda Species Survival Management Group will be meeting next month in Atlanta.

Quick said Sunset Zoo has been able to produce and maintain three red pandas in three years.

This is difficult to do, he said.

As general curator for Sunset Zoo, Quick is responsible for the welfare of all the animals.

He is a member of the administrative staff team and oversees the animals' diets, veterinary care, keeper staff and grounds.

"This is a particular honor for Mike, personally, and it is helping the zoo take a giant step in becoming internationally known," Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director for Sunset Zoo, said.

"Sunset Zoo is gaining national and international recognition for several of its programs, including breeding, management and conservation," Quick said.

▶ PREGNANT WOMEN ADDICTED TO COCAINE NO LONGER RELEASED TO POLICE

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Under pressure from the federal government, a hospital has stopped turning in to the police pregnant women who refuse cocaine treatment.

The Medical University of South Carolina said Wednesday it dropped the policy Sept. 1 under an agreement with the Department of Health and Human Services.

County Solicitor David Schwacke criticized the agreement as financial blackmail because the university feared a loss of $18 million in federal research money. Instead of turning cocaine addicts in, the hospital will try to have them involuntarily committed to a drug rehabilitation program by the courts, an option that has always been available in the state, Schwacke said.

Under the old policy, patients at the hospital signed a consent form agreeing to drug testing if their doctors determined such tests were needed.

Women who tested positive for cocaine during pregnancy were turned in to the police and arrested if they didn't go into drug treatment.

Forty-two pregnant women were arrested. Some agreed to drug treatment; others were charged with distributing cocaine to a minor. Those charges were later dropped.

Critics of the five-year-old policy said it targeted poor black women and violated patient-doctor confidentiality, and a women's right to have a baby.

The Center for Reproductive Law and Policy sued the university last year and filed a complaint with the National Institutes of Health, a branch of Health and Human Services. The policy is under investigation by HHS and NIH.

▶ PANEL DISCUSSION

Role of military falls under a speculative lens

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

MILITARY
A panel discussion on the economic and political effects of the military's new role will be conducted at 6 p.m. today in the Union Little Theatre.

In the mid 1940s, when Europe and the South Pacific were torn by war, the United States stepped in and flexed its muscles.

Now 50 years later, with the Cold War over and a military drawdown in process, the role of the armed forces is under question.

A panel discussion on the economic and political effects of the military's new role will be conducted at 6 tonight in the Union Little Theatre.

"We're in a period where the military policy of the United States and the military organization will be changing, indeed are changing," Donald Mrozek, history professor and panel member, said.

"For a period of 45 to 50 years, the military framework was tested by the Cold War," Mrozek said. "Now we don't have that clear-cut a situation. The challenge is to try to figure out future requirements."

The reduction flies in the face of the demands being placed on the military, Army ROTC Capt. Allen West said.

"We've got guys in Cuba, Idaho — spread from here to Timbuktu," West said.

"Fifty years ago, we had a great armada on the beaches of Normandy," he said. "The present Army is a shell of that force. I don't know if we could even handle the type of invasion we had three years ago in the (Persian) Gulf."

"We got a bit too euphoric after the wall came down. We really need to sit back and examine the situation and ask ourselves, 'are we really as safe as we thought we were,'" West said.

Handling invasions appears to be losing ground to peacekeeping, something with which the military is not entirely familiar, West said.

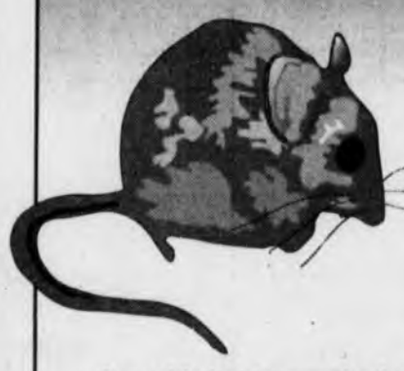
Pages of information pertaining to wartime activities fill an Army handbook, he said. Only a few paragraphs are designated to peacekeeping.

"The military is trained for combat and not trained to stand between two people and keep them from crossing lines," West said.

"If one shoots at the other and hits us, we're going to take sides, and say, 'hey, you're the bad guy,'" he said.

The Department of Military Science invited Col. Larry Aaron, assistant division commander for support at Fort Riley, to be on the panel.

Dale Herspring, head of political science; Wayne Nafziger, economics professor; T. Alden Williams, professor of political science; and Mrozek will field questions at the discussion.



▶ HANTAVIRUS

Deaths spark education on deer mice virus

PREVENTNG HANTAVIRUS

Deer mice are known to carry antibodies to hantavirus. Although you should treat all mice as potential hosts, deer mice have some distinguishing characteristics.

Identifying traits

- Tail: The tail is short, finely haired, has a well-defined dark stripe on top and is white on the bottom.
- Body: The mouse is grey to brown with a white belly.
- Feet: The hind feet are short and all four feet are white.

Some of the keys to preventing the virus include limiting rodent entrance into the home and reducing food sources and nesting sites inside.

- Use steel wool or cement to seal all openings or holes into the home.
- Place three inches of gravel in the crawl space under homes or mobile homes to reduce rodent burrowing.
- Keep food (including pet food) and water covered and stored in metal or plastic containers with tight-fitting lids.
- Store garbage in metal or plastic containers with tight-fitting lids.
- Wash dishes and cooking utensils right after use and remove any spilled food.
- Throw clutter and trash away.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

WHO IS AT RISK FOR INFECTION

Known hantavirus infections have been associated with the following situations:

- Planting or harvesting crops.
- Occupying previously vacant dwellings.
- Cleaning barns or other outdoor buildings.
- Living or working around rodent-infested areas.

People who may be at the greatest risk include:

- farmers
- grain elevator workers
- ranchers
- telephone installers
- maintenance workers
- plumbers
- electricians

SARA SMITH/Collegian

K-State teaches Kansans about the danger of hantavirus

MIKE HIND
Collegian

K-State extension services have played an important role in the education of Kansans on the dangers of a life-threatening illness.

Hantavirus is a potentially fatal disease carried by deer mice.

The virus gained national attention last year when it claimed the lives of several young adult Navaho Indians in the Four Corners region of the United States, where New Mexico, Arizona, Utah and Colorado meet.

Later in the year, two people were killed in Morton and Finney counties in western Kansas.

"We didn't know how widespread it was going to be," said Mike Bradshaw, extension specialist for the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

"They used tissue remains and found that a man who had died in Kansas in 1983 was also the victim of the Hantavirus," Bradshaw said.

After the two Kansans were killed, K-State extension began distributing bulletins and informational videos to county extension agents.

Linda Walter, Stevens County extension home economist, said the bulletins from K-State were very beneficial.

"People were relieved to know that good rodent control gave them some control over the situation," Walter said.

Though most scientists say the risk is slight, it is real.

According to the KSU extension services, 6 percent of deer mice trapped and tested in southwest Kansas turned up positive for hantavirus antibodies.

Fifty deer mice that were tested on the Konza Prairie were negative. Nine percent of deer mice trapped in Russell, Lincoln and Osborne counties were found to have hantavirus antibodies.

Symptoms of the disease include fever, muscle aches, headaches, cough, nausea, vomiting or diarrhea. The fever associated with the disease can reach 104 degrees Fahrenheit and does not respond to medication.

The disease can become fatal when the lungs begin filling with fluid, making breathing impossible. The symptoms usually appear two to three weeks after exposure to the virus, but may take up to 45 days to appear.

Infection can occur when infected urine, feces or saliva are inhaled as aerosols from animals or animal waste. Transmission may also occur through bites or inhaling contaminated dust.

Person-to-person transmission isn't associated with the disease.

Those at the greatest risk of catching the virus are farmers and maintenance people.

Air filters and masks are recommended for those working in rodent-infested areas.

Some keys to prevention include limiting rodent entrance and reducing food sources and nesting sites.

Hospitalization is the key to treating the virus, said Andrew Pelletier, acting state epidemiologist for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

"There is no specific drug," Pelletier said. "The main problem with this disease is respiratory failure. It's important to go to a hospital with a good intensive-care unit."

The recovery rate, which is about 40 percent, depends mostly on the individual, Pelletier said.

"If they recover, they'll do it for the most part on their own. If not, they'll die."

BOOK ARTS WORKSHOPS

A series of four, day long, workshops where you will explore book binding techniques, become familiar with the materials of the art, and develop a strong foundation for the continued exploration of the medium. You will leave the workshops with skeleton books, examples of bindings that include instructions, for all the bindings we explore.

Topics include: Basic book binding, Asian book binding, and Non-Adhesive book binding.

The workshops are open to everyone interested. The fee to cover all materials is 15 dollars for students and 20 dollars for non-students.

The dates of the four workshops are: 24 September and 1,15 and 22 October.

Registration will be open from 1 to 15 September.
Contact Karen Schrader at the KSU Art Department, 532-6605, third floor of Willard Hall, room 322.

The workshops will be taught by book artist, Lea Cyr.

Use the extra $10,000 for more bike racks

Student Senate will begin to formulate ideas about what to do with an extra $10,000 received during fee payment. Give them your ideas. The session starts at 7 p.m. in the Union Big 8 Room.

What would you do if you woke up in the morning and found you had an extra $10,000 in your pocket?

That's the problem Student Senate is addressing now.

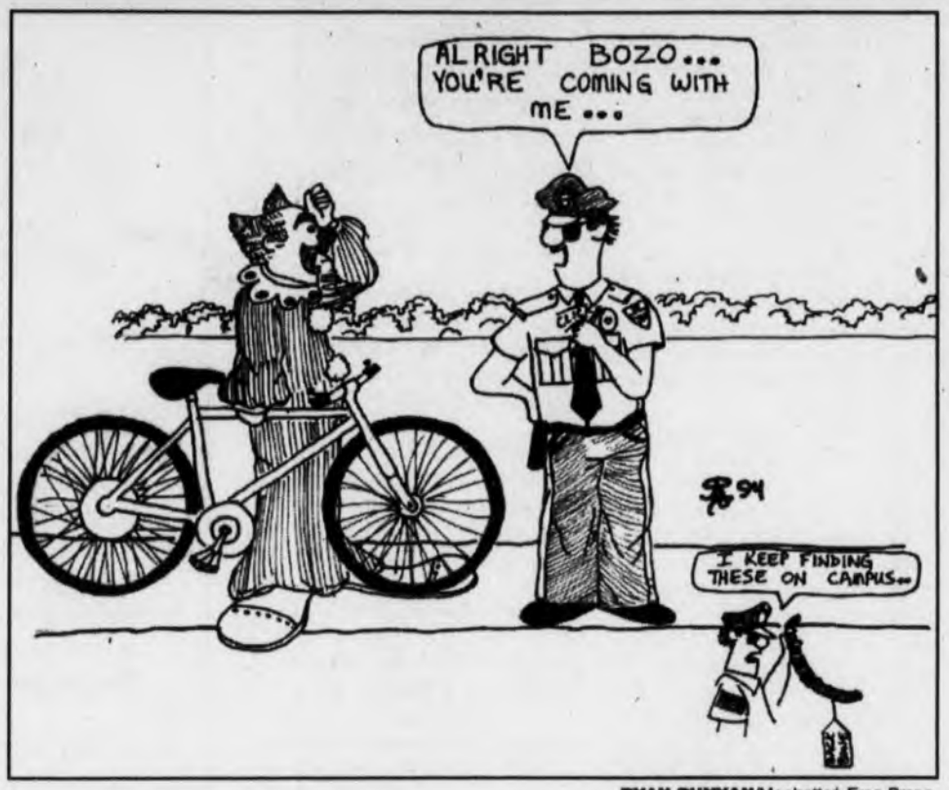
About $10,000 was generated from a 50-cent overcharge for full-time students and a 25-cent overcharge for part-time students, when students paid fees in August.

Senate will meet tonight to discuss what to do with the money.

One thing is clear, though: Students won't be refunded for the lost 50 cents.

So, instead of just keeping the money in its bank account, Senate should consider spending the money on something that will have an immediate effect on a lot of students.

A logical thing for Senate to do with the money is buy new bike racks and place them strategically across campus.



This would help students who ride their bikes to campus every day. Maybe then, they could actually put their bikes on racks instead of on wheelchair ramps and street signs.

Since there would be places to park, more students would be encouraged to ride their bikes to campus.

Even if Senate doesn't decide to use the money for bike racks, it's up to the students to make sure that something beneficial is done with the money.

If you are concerned about what Senate is planning to do with your money, voice your opinion.

Bike riders aren't victims

This campus is brimming over with whiners.

This time, the whiners are bicyclists. Some are up in arms because the K-State Police is enforcing a heretofore ignored part of Kansas traffic law; that is, bicycles, like semis, cars and motorcycles are not allowed to ride on sidewalks.

It's pretty simple: Vehicles don't belong on sidewalks. Simply state that in mixed company, and one might as well have called for the re-institution of slavery. Bicyclists are now claiming to be a repressed minority. They have coronated themselves as Victims.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Most people have to endure real tribulation to acquire Victim status, but now, with a $25 ticket, Victimhood can be conferred on bicyclists. Now an ordinary person can achieve the envied title of Victim by just breaking the law.

Who wouldn't sympathize with a pedal pusher who just woke up and is late to class running you off the sidewalk?

Not me.

Whiners!

Some say only those who interfere with pedestrians should be ticketed. This is like suggesting that people should drive cars on the sidewalks as long as they don't run people on foot into the grass. The fact is, and state law is, bicycles are vehicles and as such don't belong on sidewalks.

There's an attitude that bikes are beyond the realm of mere traffic laws. Most have no headlights, most riders don't signal for turns, and most riders don't wear helmets. So much for responsibility.

Bicyclers can still get around. They can walk.

On the other hand, the bike paths that K-State does have must be off-limits to pedestrians as thoroughfares. Remember, hoofers, they are not sidewalks. They are like streets and should be treated as such. Pedestrians who use bike paths as sidewalks should be fined — $25 sounds fair.

Bike paths are needed, but certainly everyone has to agree that there can't be bike paths to and from every building. Bikes, like cars, are great to ride between homes and campus but not between classes. More people should ride bikes to free up parking for visitors and people who drive long distances to campus.

Then again, this is America, not China.

Judging from the way a recent arrest of a suspected sidewalk rider was handled, K-State's police may be becoming like China's. Even though, by his own account, the rider was rude, arrogant, disrespectful of the law and the officer ticketing him, and just a plain ignorant smart-ass, he didn't deserve the treatment and physical discomfort he claims to have suffered.

He was handcuffed, of all things. Was he a threat to the officer, himself or anyone else? Was he an escape risk? Most importantly, was handcuffing him the best way to handle the situation?

More is at issue than whether the arresting officer was going by the book. The officers who arrested Rodney King followed their department's policies, although the events that transpired were clearly uncalled for. They followed the policies by the letter, not in spirit. The most important matter is whether the officers used the best method to arrest King.

The same question is at issue in this case. At best it was mishandled, and at worst it was an abuse of force.

Was the arresting officer carrying out a vendetta against this fresh-mouthed bicyclist rather than enforcing campus and state laws and respecting the rights of the accused? If this officer was acting out of malice, vengeance or a need to prove the superiority of his uniform, he was out of line, unprofessional, and does not belong on the campus police force in any capacity.

Such police officers are the kind the public needs protection from, not the protection of. They encourage disrespect and mistrust of authorities and ruin the reputations of entire police departments.

What happens with that officer remains to be seen. In the meantime, walk but don't ride on sidewalks, don't walk on bike paths, and stop whining.

Hey, did anyone see the entrance to Farrell Library?

BRAD SEABOURN

As I strolled peacefully through the center of campus one morning, dodging numerous high-speed chases between The Bicycle Police and Flagrant Drug-Cartel Semi-Automatic-Weapon-Spewing Sidewalk Violators, I became acutely aware of the enormous amount of construction that is going on here at our beloved University. In other words, I nearly fell into a hole so deep it would have taken me directly to the radioactive source responsible for the above-ground nuclear test site debris field located immediately east of Farrell Library.

Which conveniently brings up a hot local issue — has ANYONE found the library entrance yet?

New Student: "Hey, older dude, so, like, where's the entrance to Farrell Library?"

Older (wiser) Student: "I think it was blown into orbit when they detonated the Art Building, man."

New Student: "Whoa, cool! So, that's why we have to walk so far."

Actually, while searching one day for the nearest phone to report a Flagrant Drug-Cartel Semi-Automatic-Weapon-Spewing Sidewalk Violator, I accidentally found the entrance to Farrell in President Wefald's house underneath his bed ("It's MY new library, all MINE ... AHHHH HA HA HA HAAAAA!")

OK, OK, so it's quite possible President Wefald didn't really say that.

Anyway, once the entrance to Farrell is located, a hot, local-issue-type question then arises, "Where do I park?"

The nearest spot I could find last week at 10 in the morning was the Pizza Hut parking lot in Wamego because all of the parking stalls closest to the library were full of construction workers' cars (and let me tell you my wife did not appreciate having to carry me piggy-back into class from that far away).

I shouldn't say that about the cars because I don't know that for sure.

For all I know, all those four-wheeled machines in the parking lots could be the new style, "luxury edition," Johnny-On-The-Spot lavatories I have been hearing so much about, and all those guys in hard hats driving them around are simply relocating them to more strategic positions on the work site.

One change on campus that I have noticed, and I really did have to look closely, is The Wall running north and south between Lafene and Farrell. Yes, for those of you who have not noticed because you are scanning the back of your eyelids for any latent signs of neuro-muscular disorders as you walk to class, there is a huge wooden wall running right through the heart of K-State's campus (obviously there to keep construction workers from roaming too far with their lavatories). And the most striking thing about it: it is completely devoid of graffiti.

Do you realize it is probably the ONLY wooden surface on campus that does not say "KU sucks," or "For a good time, call ...?" Which reminds me of a not-so-local issue when in the seventh grade I wrote on my desk "For a good time, call Michelle Watson, 653-4444." Of course, there was no way I could have possibly known what a "good time" was like with a bubble bath, let alone Michelle Watson or any other girl for that matter, since I was earning money for a sufficient supply of zit cream.

Mrs. Wilkerson, who was my seventh grade teacher and who wore a wonderfully sculptured beehive hairdo, which actually had a live bird living in the it, quickly spotted my poetry and called my attention to the fact that the premortem penalty in the 1960s for defacing public property was five swats with the superintendent's paddle, and since the content of my graffiti was suggestive in nature, I could add two more swats — to be immediately administered upon my exiting the classroom and after disposal of the gum I was illegally chewing.

I am not advocating the wanton and malicious defacing of someone else's worthless wooden wall. But, should graffiti magically appear on the wall, I would view it as the work of some highly astute student taking the opportunity to create a one-of-a-kind, K-State historical artifact.

Seriously, this is K-State's version of the Berlin Wall, and we should take every opportunity to treat it with the respect it deserves.

Therefore, in the unlikely event that graffiti should magically appear on The Wall, please keep it "clean." AND bear in mind that whatever you do, whatever you write, Mrs. Wilkerson will be watching.

Police — good; photographers — good

Dear Editor,

Several letters and columns lately have caused me to feel the urge to write in and add my 2 cents worth.

First, the writer who advocated getting involved in African issues, or "wherever," sounds lofty, but who out there in the world community is looking out for the good old U.S. of A.? Anybody?

Let's fix our own truck before giving away all our extra tires and engine parts. And this may come as a surprise to the writer, but not all college students are on one big lark with nothing to do. A lot of us are quite busy, thank you, with just regular mundane issues like studies, jobs and even families to worry about.

Second, the attack on the Collegian photographer. I'm sure the photographer of the Hindenburg disaster could have run to find a fire extinguisher or the guy who snapped the shot at Iwo Jima could have grabbed a rifle.

But I would think photojournalism has to be at least partially instinctive. Besides, non-medically oriented people don't need to be jumping around in a panic, jostling an individual likely suffering from neck and/or spinal injuries. It seemed, from the photos taken, that there were more than enough people present at the accident to help out.

Third, it's easy to ridicule the police. They usually don't fight back.

They're just the ones who have to go out every day and enforce both the popular and the unpopular laws, rules and regulations that the rest of us need in order to keep from being ruled by total chaos.

I think saying the K-State police officer in the recent bike incident over-reacted is totally adequate along with moving him to a different detail.

Paper should use more sensitivity

Dear Editor,

I would like to applaud both David Tomlinson and Brad Ensminger for taking the initiative to speak up about the inappropriate use of photographs of injured or otherwise incapacitated individuals in the Collegian.

Over the past four years, I have been a faithful reader of the Collegian and have always questioned the use of this type of visual aid and its relevance to the story being reported. I feel that opening the paper in the morning and finding a headline about someone's misfortune is more than enough to get my attention, let alone seeing the victim, bleeding and helpless, being strapped to a backboard and toted into an ambulance. It is not necessary to further embarrass the victim by plastering a picture of them at their weakest moment for the entire community to see.

I, too, would like to ask the Collegian to exercise a little empathy when photographing the scene of an accident and in their selection of prints to use with the story. I think everyone wishes they could see their picture in the paper, and perhaps have an article written about them, but is this really the way they want to be remembered?

Library entrance blocked by van

Dear Editor,

With all of the redirected foot traffic due to the construction around campus, anything that inhibits the smooth flow of students on sidewalks is an issue to be dealt with.

On that note, I'd like to know why campus services feels it has a right to blockade our one remaining sidewalk to Farrell Library. We only have one entrance to our library left — we shouldn't have to surrender it to a parking lot.

On several occasions, over the past few weeks, I've spotted a white campus mini-van parked on the sidewalk, which is now the sole entrance to our library. We shouldn't have to deal with this.

If there is, however, some justifiable reason our sidewalk is the only appropriate place on this campus to park a mini-van, then let me know. I'd love to hear it, and I'm sure the rest of the student body would, too.

▶ BICYCLES

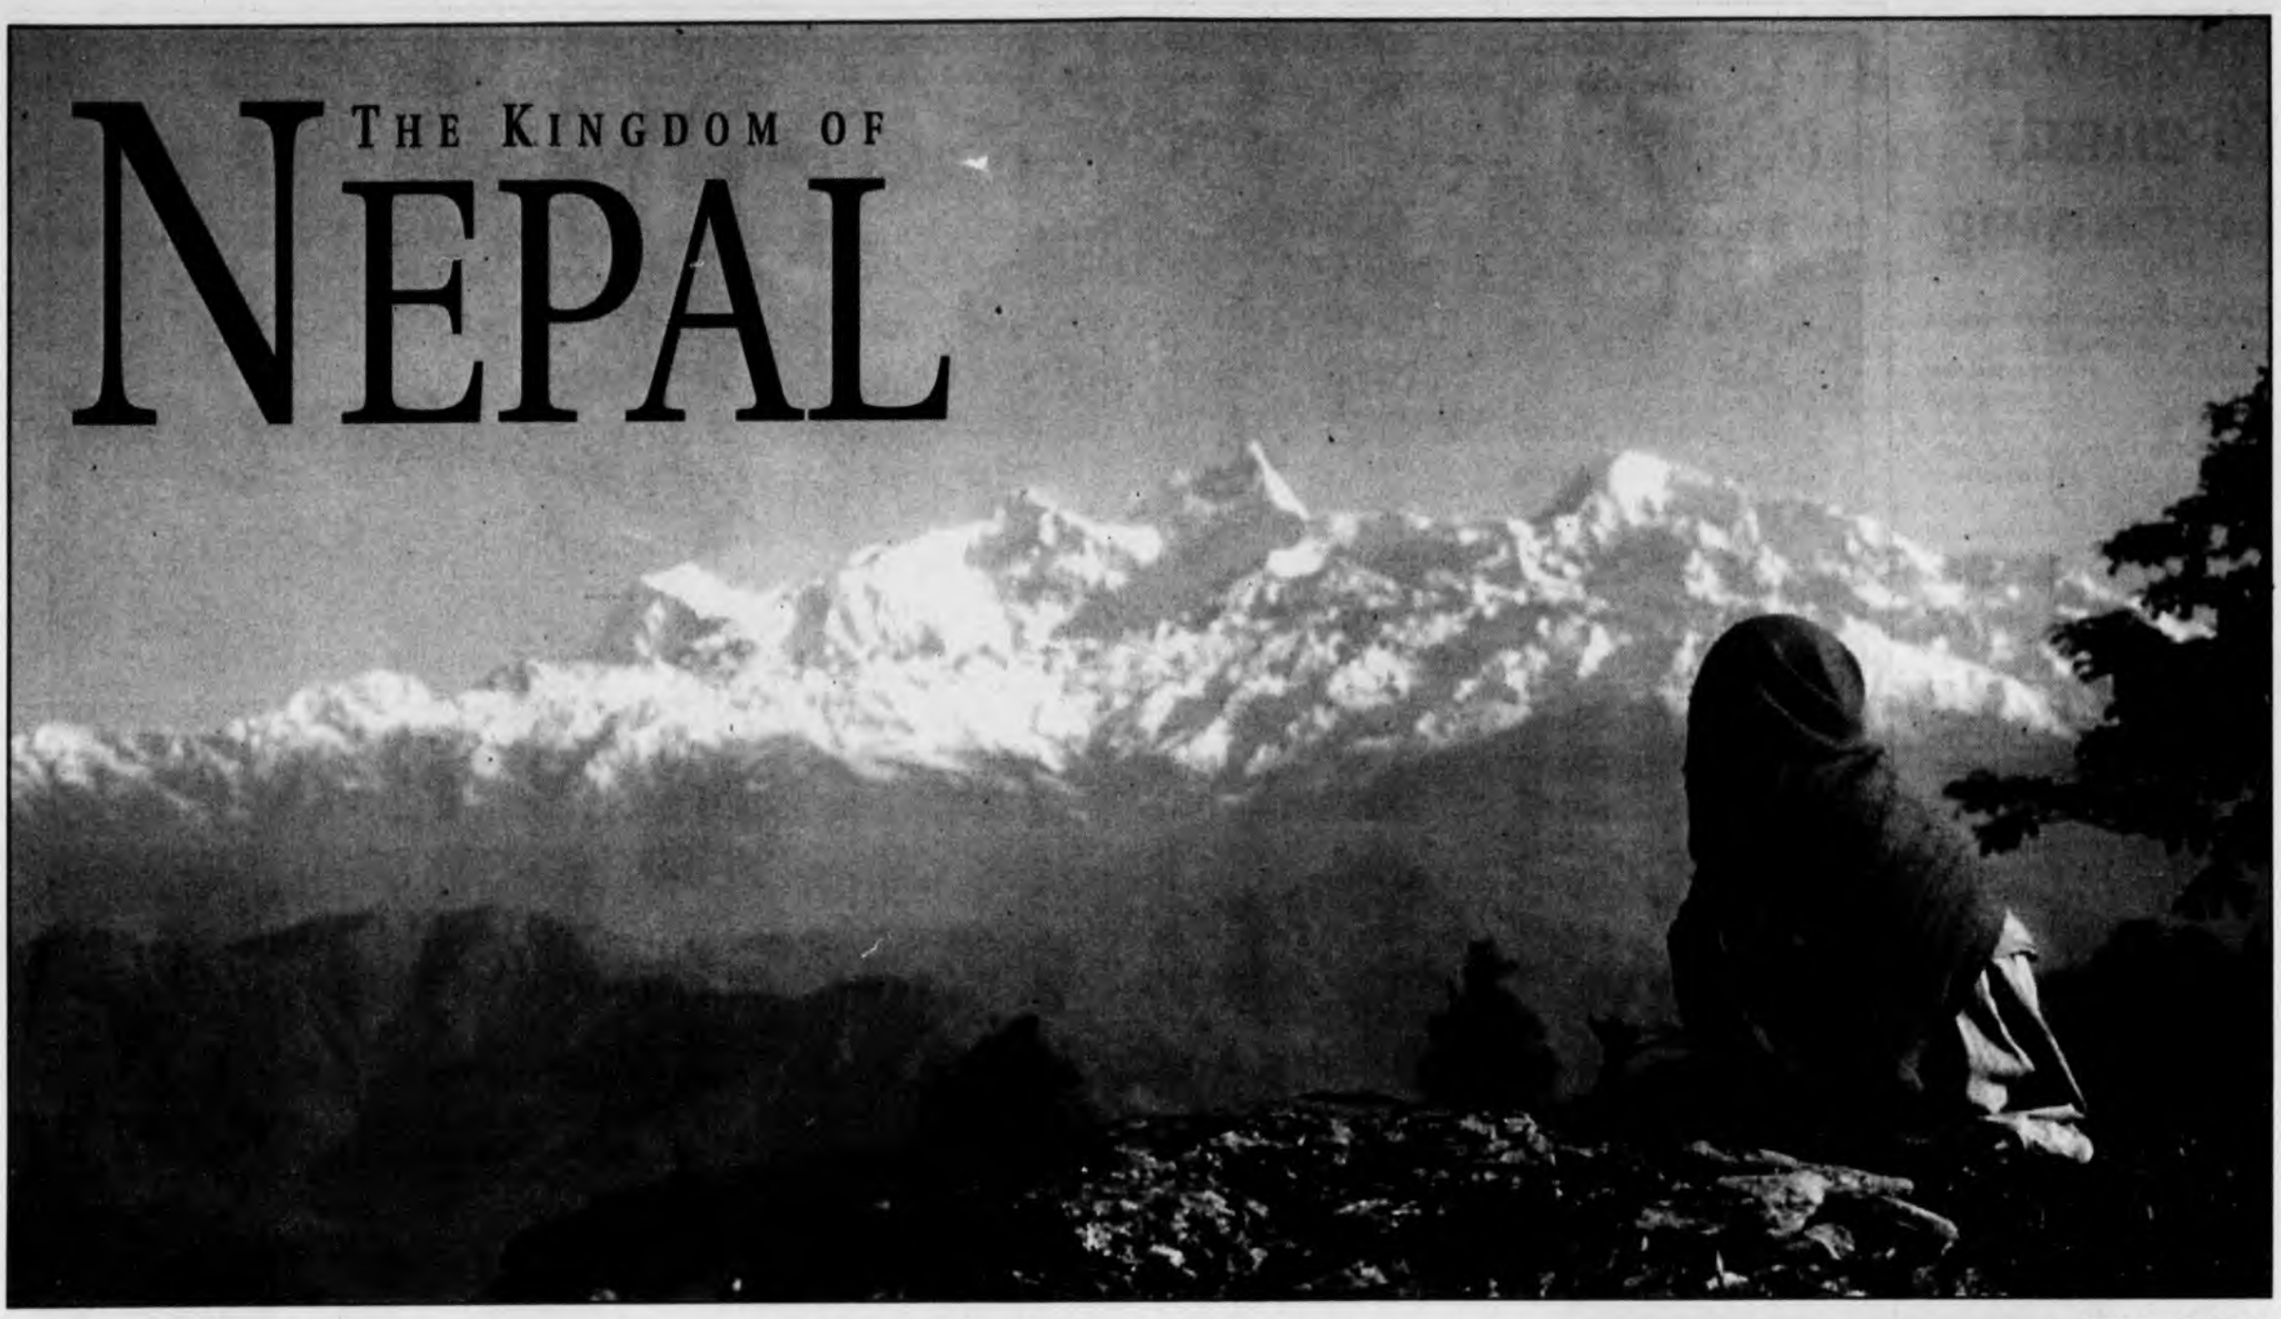
Park it and walk to class

Dear Editor,

I have some comments for the bicyclists on campus. First of all, riding your bike does help solve the parking problem, and I commend you for that.



However, when I was forced to drive to campus, I would park in one parking stall and WALK to class all day. If more bike racks were installed, would you consider riding on campus, parking at the rack and walking the rest of the day?

This would solve accidents, eliminate the need for a $25 penalty and hopefully relieve tensions between pedestrians and bicyclists.

IN FOCUS

THE KINGDOM OF NEPAL

▲ The Ganesh Himal, part of the Himalayan mountain range, is named for a Hindu god, Ganesh. Ganesh is worshipped as the god of good luck and the remover of obstacles.

Nepal is a small, mountainous country nestled between India to the south and China to the north.

Separating, and at times protecting Nepal from invading forces, is the Himalayan mountain range. Mount Everest is the most famous peak, jutting 29,028 feet in the air.

I spent five days in the capital city of Kathmandu, and eight days trekking through villages in the Kathmandu valley in March 1993.

Depressingly, Kathmandu is beginning to acquire the trappings of a full-blown tourist town. MTV has squirmed its way into the classier hotels. Several bookstores, which cater to the various nationalities of the visitors, have sprung up. The street hawkers are becoming multi-lingual. McDonald's has yet to invade the borders, but this is probably only due to the Hindu belief in the sacredness of the cow. Most of the streets are still unpaved, but it is only a matter of time before that changes.

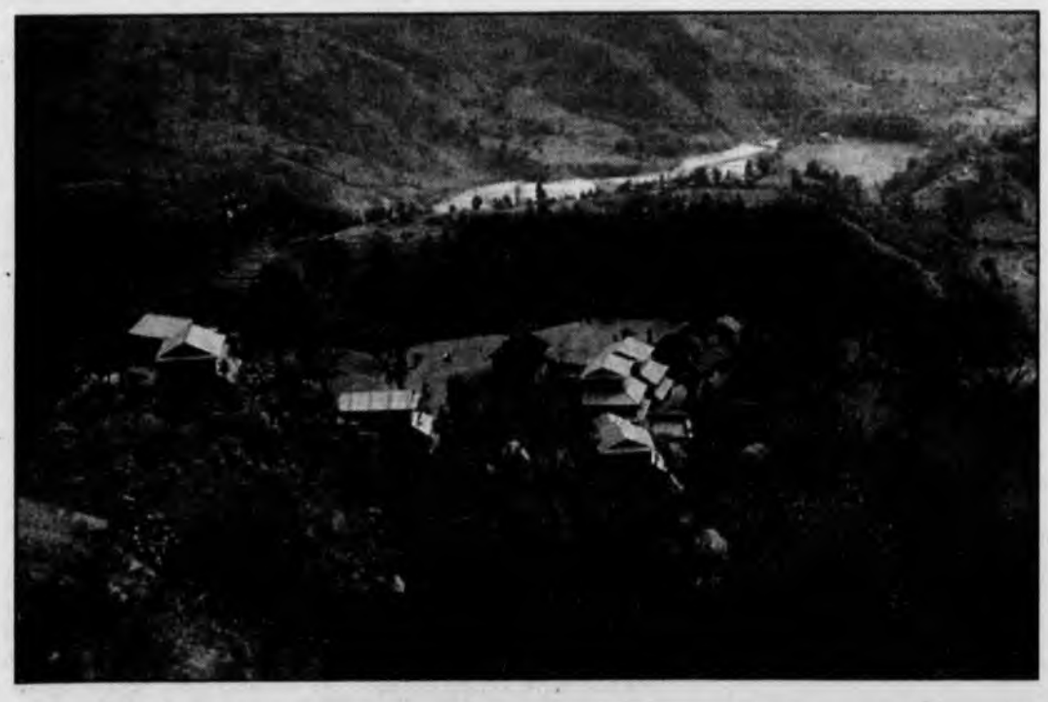
Eight porters, two guides and a team of four cooks traveled with us.

We all piled into an old bus, threw our packs on top and began a four-hour journey on one of Nepal's excuses for pavement. The younger porters took turns riding on top of the bus. I thought they were just having a good time, but later found out that they were suffering from motion sickness. I was glad I skipped breakfast.

At the starting point of the trek, the porters divided the gear between them. I was ashamed, but grateful, that all I had to carry was a windbreaker and camera equipment.

Most of our camping spots were near small villages. Within minutes, our camp would be surrounded by curiosity seekers from the town. Barefoot kids carrying well-worn textbooks stopped to watch the tents go up. They didn't talk, point or get in the way.

There are no direct flights to Nepal, and the kingdom can only be reached four days a week. This remoteness is what attracted me to Nepal. There are still parts of the country closed off to foreigners completely or only opened for those with fat wallets. It's nice to know that some places on earth still remain untouched by television and mass tourism.



The whole time I was in Nepal, I couldn't get rid of the feeling that I was in a theme park. As I watched people still plowing and planting fields using only animals and their hands, I couldn't shake the feeling that eventually everyone would stop working, change out of their costumes and go home.

Many of the religious structures in Nepal are adorned with intricate carvings depicting various Hindu gods.

◀ Water buffalo are still used to prepare the rice paddies for planting. All planting and harvesting is done by hand.

◀ A young Nepalese boy uses a wicker basket to catch fish in a shallow pool of water.

▲ Spread throughout the Kathmandu valley are several small villages linked only by well-worn paths.

▶ Two Nepalese men use a two-handed saw to cut through a wood beam. Power tools are nonexistent in most of the towns.

▲ A porter carries building materials to a remote construction sight. The lack of roads means that porters are used to carry nearly everything between towns and cities.

NFL off to gaudy beginning

It had the stars decked out in their finest gold jewelry.

It had the fans waiting hours just for a glimpse or an autograph before the show.

It had the hosts cracking one-liners and making predictions throughout the entire affair.

Not to worry, sports fans, I'm not talking about some cheesy Hollywood awards show, or even ESPN's Espy awards.

No, I'm talking about the first weekend of NFL football.

Like most other professional sports, NFL football and its players have an image to maintain. The name of the game today is glitz, glamour and most importantly, TV ratings.

Last weekend's show on the gridiron was glitz and glamour at its best, so I felt the need to honor some well-deserved performances with awards of my own. Drum roll, please.

NICOLE POELL

The Yes, They Lost! Award — to the Buffalo Bills. I think it's safe to say that football fans everywhere breathed a collective sigh of relief when the New York Jets, yes, the Jets, rolled to a 23-3 victory over the Buffalo (Choke) Bills.

There is a football god, and maybe, just maybe, he won't allow the Bills to ruin another Super Bowl Sunday.

The Welcome to the NFL Award — to Washington Redskin quarterback Heath Shuler. Mr. Shuler goes to Washington, just in time to meet Seattle's Cortez Kennedy on the turf of RFK Stadium.

Oh, well, Heath, for $5 million, you should at least get your uniform dirty.

The Eat Your Words Award — to Arizona Cardinals coach and drill sergeant Buddy Ryan, courtesy of the Los Angeles Rams.

Just days before this game, Ryan said in an interview that the Rams were the worst team he'd seen, as he proceeded to trash their offense, defense, coaches, fans and even their cheerleaders.

Buddy, tell us — how does it feel to get beaten by the worst team in the NFL? Maybe you should just keep your mouth shut and stick to punching offensive coordinators on the sidelines.

The How 'Bout Them Colts Award — to Indianapolis rookie Marshall Faulk, whose 143 yards rushing led the Colts to a 45-21 win over Houston.

Sure, Charlie Ward may have beaten you out in the Heisman Trophy race, but hey, he's playing basketball for Hooters now. Enough said.

The Senior Citizen Award — to Joe Montana. Forget that old "dollar bill-four quarters" joke from last season, at least for now. But Joe, you've got 15 more games left, not including the post season, if the Chiefs should be so lucky. Better keep the knee brace, Ben-Gay and Steve Bono close by.

The Win it For Don and Dan Award — to the Miami Dolphins, who beat Bill Parcell's pesky Patriots in their quest to win a Super Bowl for legendary coach Don Shula and aging quarterback Dan Marino.

Hey, guys, Don needs one more before he retires, and Dan needs at least one Super Bowl ring before he quits football to do more Ace Ventura movies. Well, all righty then.

The We're As Cool As Those 90210 Kids Award — to the entire Fox broadcasting team.

With their cool music, cool set and cool outfits, these guys may be able to land guest spots on Melrose Place. Maybe John Madden and Heather Locklear could start an affair in one episode — imagine the ratings.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Tricia Wells, K-State alumna from Manhattan, tests her luck on the miniature golf course at Wildcat Creek Sports Center Wednesday afternoon. Wildcat Creek is open from 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. daily. An additional miniature golf course and a nine-hole golf course are scheduled to open in 1995.

Secret revealed in Anneberg Park

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

Nestled in the trees of Anneberg Park is one of Manhattan's newest secrets: Wildcat Creek Sports Center.

John Byers, general manager of the sports center, said the 68-acre complex offers miniature golf, a driving range and nine sand volleyball courts.

A nine-hole golf course is planned for completion in spring 1995. By fall 1995, batting cages also will be available.

Kevin Fateley, partner in Wildcat Creek Sports Center and K-State graduate, landscaped and contracted the building of the miniature-golf complex. The cost to play the course is $3.50.

"It has a more landscaped look rather than having the plastic-animal look," he said.

A second miniature golf course is scheduled for completion by next fall. Fateley said he is considering designing it as a one-theme-for-every-three-holes course.

Wildcat Creek offers both private and group lessons at the 30-station driving range for any level player. Lessons are offered Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays and cost $20 an hour. They are taught by Mike Webb, golf professional at Rolling Meadows Country Club in Junction City, Byers said.

The range faces off into a cluster of trees where, Byers said, in the early evening, wildlife still roams.

"You can still see deer come across at night," he said.

Wildcat Creek charges $3 for a bucket of golf balls.

Spring, summer and fall volleyball leagues are available for any level player. Three levels of competition are available — recreational, competitive and power.

Each league has divisions. The women's six-on-six division will play on Wednesdays, and the coed on Thursdays. The four-on-four competitive women's division will play Mondays.

The men's division will play Sundays, and the coed division will play Tuesdays. The two-on-two power league has a women's division playing Thursdays, a men's division playing Mondays and a coed division playing Sundays.

The courts are also available for tournaments, parties and hourly rental. Byers said the courts cost $10 an hour for non-league rental and $5 for league rental.

The batting cages will be circular and fashioned after batting cages in Lincoln, Neb., Byers said.

Byers said the depth and height of the cages will allow batters to get a true idea of how well they are hitting.

The nine-hole golf course will be on the north side of the complex, Fateley said.

Byers said construction should begin by spring 1995.

"It's something everyone can do," he said. "It's just to have fun."

Parties can be booked at the complex as well. A room in the clubhouse houses any size group. It is equipped with seating, a jukebox and dart board. The party also gets catering from the place of its choice.

"You just say what you want, and I take care of it," Byers said.

The room rental cost is $50. Large groups get discounts on volleyball and miniature golf when they rent the room.

Local residents have been spreading the word about the complex, and business has begun to take off, Byers said.

"The greeks have caught on pretty quick," he said.

Fateley said the Wildcat Creek project has been in the works for 2-1/2 years. Much paperwork had to be completed before the complex could be built, he said.

He said the center also needed to come to an agreement with the city about the use of the the road into the park. The agreement was the city would eventually annex the complex as long as it remained recreational, and the city would allow the complex to use the road for access.

Byers said land available for the complex was scarce in the area. But Fateley said the location is one of Wildcat Creek's greatest assets. Additionally, only one acre of trees was cut for the project.

"That was a great concern to a lot of people," Fateley said. "They thought we were going to clear cut it all."

Byers said there are very few recreational opportunities in the Manhattan area.

"You can either go to Aggieville or to a movie," Byers said. "It's a good date alternative."

Wildcat Creek's hours are 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. daily. For more information, call Wildcat Creek Sports Center at 539-7529.

Warta finds new athletic home

KRISTA COZAD
Collegian

Ben Warta is not your ordinary athletic liaison.

For one thing, he's actually played a varsity sport. Warta walked on last year's basketball team as a freshman, which has not been the norm for someone who holds the liaison position, Jeff Peterson, student body president, said.

Peterson appointed Warta, sophomore in pre-medicine, to the position.

As liaison, Warta is part of Peterson's advising cabinet, which meets every two weeks with Peterson to discuss diverse issues and deal with improving conditions and relations among members of the student body, Peterson said.

"Ben just is a real leader with his peers, how he handles himself in a group, with his friends or on the basketball court with other athletes," Peterson said. "He's got quiet confidence. He's really just impressive."

"Ben's role in particular is dealing with student athletes, and their needs and concerns as students," he said.

Warta serves as a link between campus athletes and the Student Governing Association.

"Mainly I coordinate between sports clubs and varsity sports and hear what their concerns are, and try to help in any way that the Student Governing Association can," Warta said. "We're working on coming up with new ideas to boost fan support at non-revenue sporting events."

"I know a lot of people in the athletic fields, and I think I can bring a new perspective being on an athletic team."
BEN WARTA
Student Governing Association athletic liaison

Warta said he is considering forming a committee of student athletes from many different teams and clubs to see how they could change or better their particular sports.

The committee may look at how to get athletes more involved in campus activities, he said.

However, this could be difficult because their schedules are already so busy with sports, Warta said.

Warta said his time on the men's basketball team has already helped him in his new role.

"I know a lot of people in the athletic fields, and I think I can bring a new perspective being on an athletic team and knowing the sacrifices they have to give," he said.

Walking on also taught him a valuable lesson he can use as a member of the cabinet, Warta said.

"I talked to Coach (Dana) Altman and expressed that I wanted to walk on. He told me to lift and run as much as possible, and then I came down in the summer and played with the team every day that I could," Warta said. "Walking on taught me perseverance."

Warta will not be playing on this year's team, however.

"The main reason I'm not going out is just the time and the restrictions put on your life and schedule. You don't have time to do anything but play basketball," he said. "But I enjoyed it, and I know I'll miss it. It was a good experience."

Nebraska defends No.#1 ranking tonight

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUBBOCK, Texas — A short work week has lengthened the odds against Texas Tech in its early-season battle with top-ranked Nebraska.

"We will have to take out the run," linebacker Zach Thomas said as the Red Raiders prepared for Thursday's game. "It's going to be a big challenge, and I respect them for their tradition."

Thomas pointed out a further challenge: "We've only had four days to prepare. Nebraska's had a week and a half."

It is the first time in 15 years that a No. 1 team has visited Texas Tech.

The Red Raiders enter the game remembering their 50-27 defeat last year in Lincoln. Tech held a brief 21-20 edge in the third quarter. But none of those scorers, other than kicker Jon Davis, is back for Tech.

Nebraska returns many of its key players from 1993's 11-1 team, including quarterback Tommie Frazier, who threw for 206 yards against Tech.

Frazier' ran for three touchdowns and threw for another on Aug. 28 as the Cornhuskers opened their season by blowing out West Virginia. Nebraska moved into the top ranking without playing last weekend.

"I think too much is made of the polls right now," coach Tom Osborne said earlier this week.

It's the first time that Nebraska's been ranked at the top since November 1987. One negative to that spot, Osborne said, is that "everybody seems to give a little extra when they're playing against No. 1."

Thursday's game, televised on ESPN, will be the first in recent memory played without a mounted horse galloping along the sidelines at Jones Stadium.

The pregame ceremony Thursday will include a moment of silence for Double T.

Theaters leave nasty aftertaste

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Been to the movies lately?

If you have, you've probably noticed the uncomfortable chairs, the sticky floors, and the extreme climate control (either too hot or too cold). If that hasn't disturbed you, then maybe the blurry picture or the horrific sound.

What is the state of movie theaters in Manhattan?

Bad. Bad compared to Kansas City. Bad compared to Wichita. Compared to other cities the size of Manhattan, our theaters are on par.

OK. So, other cities have bad movie theaters. If Salina jumped off a cliff, would Manhattan?

Manhattan is a college town full of young adults. We have a very large Army base nearby. We have lots of 18- to 25-year-olds with nothing to do. We have two major movie houses in town, Seth Child and Westloop 6, both of which fail to please.

Any theater whose sound system reminds one of a boom box stuck under a cardboard box at the front of the theater isn't any place I want to spend $5 (with valid student ID, of course) to see a movie.

When I go to the movies, it is usually to see a movie I really want to see. Take, for instance, the movie "Forrest Gump." I hadn't seen it as of one week ago. I was anxious to see the show.

So, I went to Northrock Theaters in Wichita. Oh, what fun. I had a cushiony chair, a cool theater, wide-screen format, and digital sound (unfortunately, no drink holders). Well, you get the idea. I enjoyed the movie twice as much because I felt comfortable while I watched it.

About two weeks ago, I saw "The Client," at Seth Child Cinema.

First of all, "The Client" was highly predictable. Tommy Lee Jones does his best to annoy you, along with Susan Sarandon's muddled, crying-for-help sing-along that makes you wish she had really driven off that cliff in "Thelma and Louise."

Anyway (the movie's quality isn't really the theater's fault), during the movie, I kept leaning over to my friend to ask what was said, because the sound quality was so bad I could barely understand parts of the movie. The theater was dark and uninviting (OK, OK, I know theaters are dark, but there is a difference between the dark brown of Seth Childs and the light gray of other theaters).

What I'm trying to say is that a bad movie coupled with a bad theater makes for a horrible aftertaste. It makes you want to go to Blockbuster next weekend and screw the movies.

There are exceptions to the major theaters. The Union Program Council offers some swell movies for only $1.75. That is, if you don't mind waiting to see the movie after everyone in North America has seen it. Some movies are good enough to see twice at the theater (like, well, what do you know, "Forrest Gump" — hey, I liked it).

There are always the Varsity and Campus theaters in Aggieville. They seem to get newer, yet old, movies ahead of UPC.

OK. Enough exceptions. How about some suggestions?

Dear Seth Child and Westloop 6: Please purchase a THX (that George Lucas sound system that causes brain damage in small children) or Digital sound system for at least one of your theaters. Make the screens bigger, if you can. Then, you can show your first-run movies (movies that have just opened up) in those more accommodating theaters. Also, if you don't have cupholders, get them!

Oh, one more thing, please don't charge $10 for a Coke.

Russell Fortmeyer is a sophomore in architectural engineering.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Poem a comfort to reader

Dear Cassie,

I am writing to you about the woman who lost her boyfriend, because I have just gone through the same thing. My girlfriend and I have been dating very seriously for three years.

We had plans to get married in a few more years. I think the word marriage scares people and makes them want to get away, and I want to make it clear that it's not just men who don't want to get married; it's women also.

I wrote this poem for my girlfriend, and I think it's something that applies to everyone. Don't feel like you're the only one out there "losing weight and sleep."

Here's the poem, Cassie. I hope that it helps other people to try and understand how their significant other feels.

It's not a cure-all, but I think it helped a little for me anyway.

Let me be a guardian of your solitude.

Let there remain a bit of mystery in our relationship.

To seek complete knowledge out of insecurity or a misguided sense is to risk losing a necessary reserve of individual freedom.

Which is something I never wanted to take.

Remember, a room of your own is a precious possession, but it is only one in a house of many.

Signed,
Been There, Still There.

Dear Been There, Still There,

Thanks for sharing your thoughts. It takes some time, but you're well on your way to a mended heart.

A man with your compassion won't be single long.

'Milk Money' turns to cheese but does not go sour

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

Hookers are people, too.

That seems to be the blatantly obvious message in the formulaic "Milk Money."

Melanie Griffith plays V, a prostitute who claims she has never really been treated as a person. This is until 12-year-old Frank Wheeler (Michael Patrick Carter), a sexually curious prepubescent, attempts to make a match between her and his widowed father.

But in order to succeed at this, he tells his father, Tom (Ed Harris), a high-school science teacher and die-hard environmentalist, that V is really a math tutor.

V has her own agenda. She desperately wants to trade her unhappy life in the city for family life in the burbs. Meanwhile, she is running from a local scum named Waltzer (confusingly played by Malcolm McDowell), who believes V has stolen a small fortune in cash from him.

"Milk Money" turns to cheese after a while, but it doesn't necessarily go bad. Griffith's surprisingly convincing representation of a prostitute often appears borrowed from "Pretty Woman," and the boy's relentless matchmaking is reminiscent of "Sleepless in Seattle."

Unlike "Pretty Woman" and "Sleepless," however, "Milk Money" lacks charm and an uplifting quality. But, it is formulaic writing with a twist.

Perhaps "Milk Money" would have worked better as film noir, a now-popular genre that mixes components of sex, and dramatic and thriller flicks to form a compelling storyline. This year's "China Moon," starring Ed Harris, is an example.

The writing in this film is what keeps it from entirely succeeding. It is too basic and too comical to be compelling, making serious issues — sex, death, fear and prostitution — unnaturally sit-com-like.

There is an ever-present feeling of sexism and contrived sentimentality that also detracts from the better-than-average premise.

Case in point: V tells young Frank it should be a rule for boys to give gifts to girls they date.

"Girls and gifts — it's kind of the same word," she says.

"Milk Money" is not insufferable; nor is it trash. It is a decent film that aspires to be no more than feel-good entertainment. It is a watchable series of formulaic predicaments involving a couple of interesting characters.

K-State's new veterinary dean returns with goals for college

"To become a premier college in veterinary medicine in a focus area is the ideal goal."

DR. RONALD MARLER
Dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine

TRACEY STINSON
Collegian

A K-State alumnus has returned to take over responsibilities as dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Dr. Ronald Marler was chosen from a pool of 100 applicants by a committee of 15 members, led by Dr. Rick De Bowes, professor of large-animal surgery.

The committee screened the applicants before deciding on five finalists. The final choice was then made by President Jon Wefald and Provost James Coffman.

The committee was looking for a candidate who would have vision for the future, be able to communicate with different groups of people, and be able to relate to the constituents of the vet-med college, De Bowes said.

"Marler strikes me as a highly motivated individual with a set of clear goals," De Bowes said. "We may have to wear track shoes to keep up with him."

Marler returned to K-State July 1 to begin his new job. He replaced Dr. Michael Lorenz, who is now a professor in the clinical sciences department, Janet Papen, administrative officer, said.

Marler earned his bachelor of science degree in biological sciences from K-State in 1971. From 1971 to 1978, he did his graduate work at K-State, and received his doctor of veterinary medicine degree and a doctorate in veterinary pathology.

In his time away from the K-State campus, Marler has been working in the industrial sector of veterinary medicine.

Before taking the dean position, he was employed with Marion Merrell Dow in Kansas City as vice president of drug safety.

Marler said he has some very clear objectives for the college.

He said he thinks it is important for every college to evaluate what areas of research and expertise are important to their constituents and pursue those areas with the resources at hand.

"To become a premier college in veterinary medicine in a focus area is the ideal goal," Marler said.

One of Marler's objectives for the college is to further its food and animal medicine research and teaching at K-State. This is in response to the needs of the constituents of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"K-State needs to be focused in these areas since agriculture, which includes livestock, is the major industry here in Kansas," Marler said.

By becoming an innovative force in this area of veterinary medicine, K-State would gain a considerable amount of prominence, he said.

The College of Veterinary Medicine has already gained national recognition for its Hill's National Center for Veterinary Practice Management, Marler said.

The center in Trotter Hall is funded by Hill Pet Nutrition Inc., of Topeka. This is the only such facility in a veterinary-medicine college in North America, Marler said.

"It is important for students of veterinary medicine to remember the importance the industrial sector plays in their field," Marler said. "It opens up several avenues for employment in a variety of fields."

He said he has received a considerable amount of support from the faculty for his ideas and plans for the college.

"Since returning, I am extremely impressed with the faculty," Marler said. He said he is convinced that together with his faculty and staff, they can define the next level that the College of Veterinary Medicine wants to reach.

"They [faculty] are really on board with the issues," Marler said.

Marler is not just playing an administrative role in his new position.

This semester, he has already given lectures on toxicology and will be lecturing at the Hill Center.

"I want to make sure our students are given the information and education they need to be competitive in every position that may be available to them in the future," Marler said.

▶ UNION RENOVATION

Union planning chance to dream, get fast food

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

Full-time K-State students have paid their $23 Union-enhancement fee. Now it's time to decide how to spend the money.

The Union Renovation Steering Committee met on Wednesday to begin the process of getting the renovation underway.

"Time is money," Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life, said.

"The longer we wait, the less we get for our project."

The steering committee is responsible for preparing the program draft that will be submitted to the regents Nov. 8.

Union construction will be complete in January 1998, Carter said.

From now until January 1998, timing is critical for a variety of processes to occur throughout the project, Carter said.

"Pre-planning is very, very vital and useful," Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of Farrell Library, said.

The library planning period was short, she said.

Carter said the organization of the steering committee for the Farrell renovation is basically the same as the steering committee for the Union renovation.

"We're just changing the names (of the committees) a little bit to protect the innocent," Carter said.

Bosco said he wants as much student involvement on the renovation as possible.

"I think it's unusual for any university to have the involvement of students, faculty and staff to the extent we have on the Farrell project and on the Union project," Carter said.

"My peers at other universities are watching to see if we can pull it off," Carter said. "We did it with the library, and by God, we're going to do it with this one."

"It's a chance to dream, and that's what we're asking people to do," Carter said.

Bosco said a variety of ideas for the renovation are being thrown around.

"For the first time, we're looking into bringing in fast food," Bosco said.

Some students are concerned that they will not be able to benefit from the fee increase.

"It will be nice to come back and look at it when it's done," Steffany Carrel, public relations coordinator for the Union, said.

▶ NON TRADITIONAL STUDENTS

Workshop advises on choices

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

University Counseling Services is sponsoring a workshop to help nontraditional students make important choices while in school.

The workshop, "How Do I Know What I Want to Do," will be from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Sat., Sept. 17 in K-State Union 205.

Joyce Woodford, senior staff member at University Counseling Services, said the workshop was designed for non-traditional students who want to return to school, or who are already in school but don't know what they want to do.

It is also designed to help nontraditional students see more clearly what is important to them individually, she said, and to help them prioritize their lives' demands.

"There will be a series of exercises done individually, with time for sharing and discussion," Woodford said.

The day's activities will be divided into two parts, she said.

"In the morning, there will be independent and group exercises focusing on decision making and prioritizing," Woodford said. "In the afternoon, the focus will be on individual needs."

Woodford said these activities have a goal of clarification.

"This can help people recognize what they may already know," she said. "It also helps them pull out what's important."

After the activities will be discussion.

"The discussion after takes strong effort," Woodford said, "because that's when the real sharing occurs."

She said the discussions are informal and open with a lot of give and take.

"Discussions tend to be open and spiritual," she said. "They bring a lot of life experience into it."

Woodford also said nontraditional students tend to be very focused.

"They don't have time to drift through school," she said.

The workshop will not be a therapy session, Woodford said.

She said the goals are focused to each individual, and there are fairly defined steps involved for participants to reach those goals.

"We want everyone to get a clear sense that they gained from the experience," Woodford said.

Woodford, along with Dori Lambert, a senior staff member with counseling services, will conduct the workshop.

"We will try to facilitate a feeling of being comfortable and understanding what they're doing and to create a feeling of openness," she said.

She said she would like to present a challenge to participants.

The workshop was offered last year, and Woodford said it was well received.

"We held it at the end of the semester, and everyone was excited about it," she said. "People gave feedback, and everyone said they would highly recommend it."

Lambert said the activities will be informative and supportive.

"It will help you identify your personality type and outline steps in choosing a career," she said.

WORKSHOP

The registration deadline for the non traditional students' workshop is 5 p.m. Friday, Sept. 9. You can register by calling 532-6927. A fee of $20 must be received before the deadline to secure a place. The fee includes rolls and coffee.

Each hospice client needs 4 volunteers

She has been a volunteer for three years. She said it is her way of giving back to the community.

Hospice of Manhattan has a client list of 11 to 12 patients, Wheeler said. For each client, they need at least four or five volunteers.

She said she prefers to vary which volunteers work with certain clients. If they deal with the same client over and over, the volunteers can get burned out, she said. That is the reason they like to have as large a pool of volunteers as possible.

Before anyone can volunteer, she recommends that they attend the training sessions first. The training, which is held Thursday mornings and Tuesday evenings, is good even if you don't plan on volunteering. She said the training would be invaluable for anyone going into a health-care profession.

Once the training is complete, she said, people are not obligated to work with clients. If they are uncomfortable with working directly with the patients, but they would still like to help, she said, there are office positions available.

After arrest, accused go before judge

"If the victim went straight to the hospital, the hospital personnel are trained in handling the victim without damaging evidence."

Kassebaum said people accused of rape must appear before a judge after the police arrest them.

"The court sets a preliminary hearing, which usually takes place within 10 days," she said.

At the arraignment, the defendant is formally informed of the charges and asked to enter a plea, she said.

If the defendant pleads no contest or guilty, then the defendant is sentenced. If the defendant pleads not guilty, then there will be a trial, Kassebaum said.

"Rape victims always have to testify at the preliminary hearing and trial," Kassebaum said. "The defendant has a constitutional right to face his or her accuser."

Kassebaum said the victim will not have to testify at the preliminary hearing if the defendant waives preliminary hearings by saying there is a probable cause.

Thompson said the first thing needed to make a case is a suspect.

"On occasion, a rape victim can't identify the suspect," she said.

"In the majority of cases, though, the person has a way of identifying the suspect," Thompson said. "Rape is not the usual idea of a boogie man jumping out from behind a tree and ripping off your clothes to rape you."

Date rape is harder to convict, Kassebaum said, because it starts out with two consenting adults in some kind of a relationship.

At any point, she said, a woman has the right to change her mind, and the man should stop.

"Just because it is difficult doesn't mean it is impossible," Kassebaum said. "An alleged victim's testimony is generally legally sufficient."

"In court," Thompson said, "it boils down to one person's word against the other.

"In a jury trial, it is simply how well the victim can communicate with the jury," she said.

Kennedy said convicted rapists can be sentenced to between 68 and 308 months.

"If they have no record, the sentence is between 68 and 77 months. If the defendant has three or more felonies, then the offender is sentenced to 276 to 308 months," Kennedy said.

"Rape is a tough crime to prosecute," Kennedy said. "I think the low end of the rape sentencing is pretty low."

Colleagues praise Wingert's efforts

running the campaign. "But I would imagine any job right out of college, regardless of what you're doing, is a challenge."

Following graduation, Wingert hit the ground running, earning praise from co-workers.

"He's probably the most accomplished recent graduate that I've had the pleasure of working with," Jim Obermaier, campaign communication director, said.

Obermaier said he has been impressed with the K-State graduate's ability to run the office and understanding the nuances of the campaign.

Since going to work for the former governor, he has traveled across the state, especially the 2nd District. He said the trip has its occasional rough spots when he comes across a problem that he does not have the answer for.

"There are times when that happens," Wingert said. "Sometimes you just have to use your best judgment and move on."

Another pitfall Wingert has managed to sidestep so far on the campaign trail is his ability not to feel threatened because of his age and inexperience.

"It would be easy to be intimidated, but you've got to have the confidence and let that radiate out to the people in the campaign," he said.

With the election a little more than two months away, Wingert is unsure of what he will be doing after November. He said he would not rule out living and working in Washington, D.C., if Carlin should win, but he has more important things on his mind.

"Right now, we're a little more concerned about winning," he said. "One thing I learned very early in politics, nothing is for sure, so you might as well live from day to day."

McClaskey: KSU experience helped

Some papers in the district are just leaving the coverage to the big papers, she said.

McClaskey said her experience as student body president helped prepare her to work on the campaign.

"On a much smaller scale, I learned the relationship between the government and the press," McClaskey said.

McClaskey said that she worked with a lot of leaders throughout the state, as well as with a diverse student body.

As for her future plans, McClaskey said she is unsure right now.

McClaskey said she came into the campaign while things were moving quickly, so she has not had time to think about her plans.

After Nov. 8, McClaskey said they will wrap things up with the campaign, depending on the results.

Don't screw up!

One illegal drink can cost you:
$200 fine
$125 ADSAP
$102.50
40 hours community service
One bad check can cost you:
A big fine and court costs!
It's a fraud conviction!
One conviction for use or possession of marijuana or other drugs can get you: Jail time!
Stealing or "finding" a parking permit and not turning it in could greatly damage your record.
A DUI conviction costs $500 and mandatory jail time.
Three lousy drinks will do it.
Therefore:
Don't drink unless you're 21, Balance your checkbook, Don't take another's parking permit, Don't drink and drive, Remember drugs are for sick people.

Student not satisfied, seeks legal action

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

The student who was handcuffed and arrested for riding his bicycle on the sidewalk has decided to take legal action against the University.

B.C. Camp II, junior in television and broadcasting, said he is suing K-State for what he feels was harsh treatment from a K-State Police officer.

Camp said he talked to University officials about his grievance, but was not satisfied with their response.

Camp said he talked to Mordean Taylor-Archer, director of multicultural affairs, on the day of the incident.

Taylor-Archer spoke with John Lambert, director of public safety, who then contacted the director of affirmative action, Clyde Howard, about a meeting with Camp, the officer and K-State administrators.

Howard said during the course of the meeting, Camp expressed his recollection of the events of the day, and the officer, along with the police captain, provided information about what happened.

"I told my story, and the officer told his story, and we tried to come up with solutions. Nothing came to my satisfaction, so I'm pursuing other legal action," Camp said.

Camp said he doesn't think the officer's behavior was racially motivated, but he's planning to sue either the University or the campus police for harsh treatment.

"Mordean contacted Howard at affirmative action because he was a lawyer, not because I thought race had anything to do with it," Camp said.

"I don't know what's going to come out of this. I would like to see a pamphlet about bicycle-riding regulations, and if we win any money, most of it will go to the lawyer."

Howard said the administrators did the best job they could to settle the problem.

"By the end of the meeting, there was a situation where the University attempted to put things as right as it could," Howard said. "They acknowledged that it was something that got out of hand."

Howard said two of the charges against Camp, including obstructing the legal process and disobeying a police officer, were dropped, and the bicycle patrol was suspended.

"It's unfortunate that it happened, but from everything that I could understand, efforts were being made to minimize chances of that happening again," Howard said.

Camp said although the meeting didn't yield the results he expected, he appreciated the support from affirmative action and Archer.

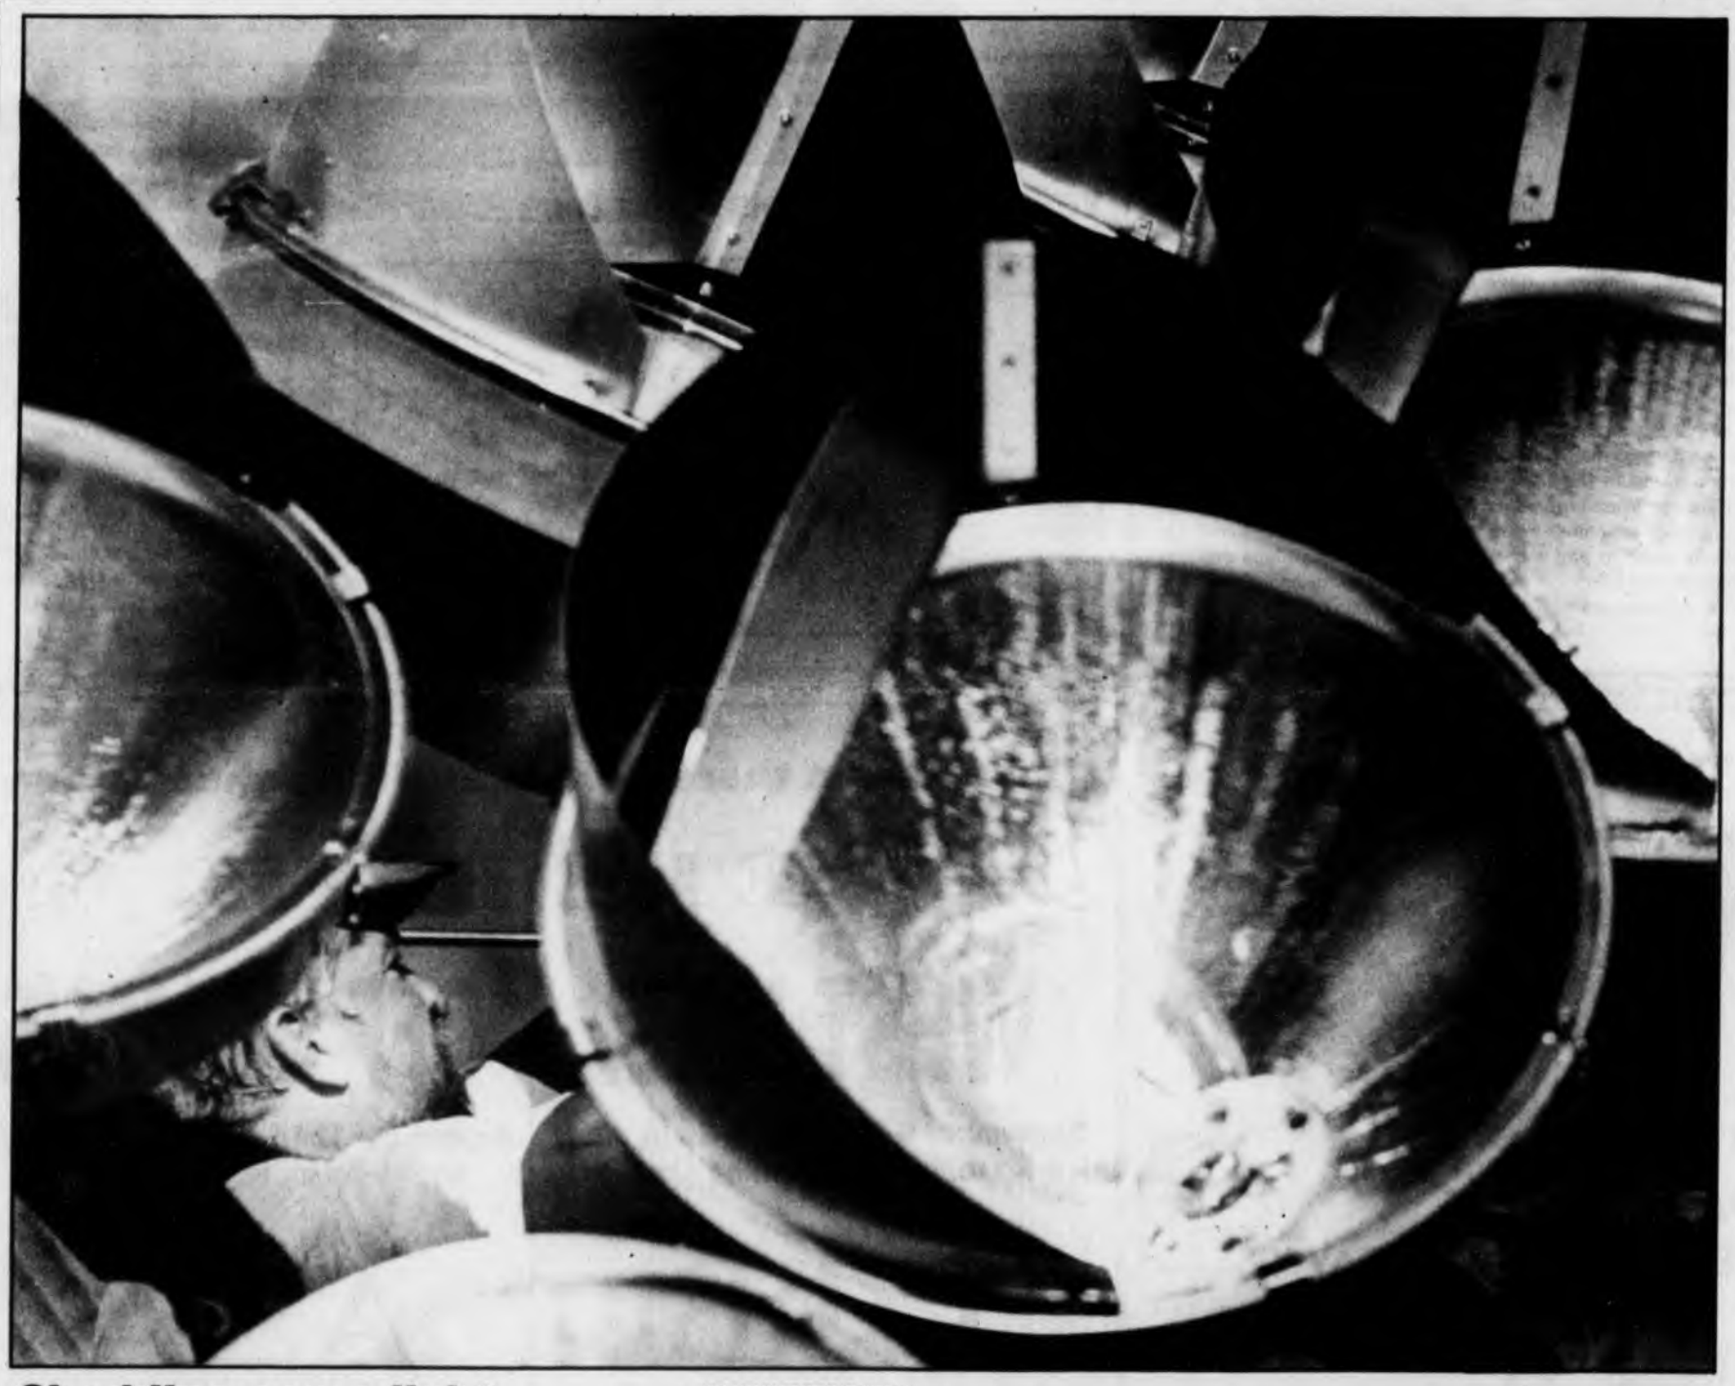
"I had no idea what to do after the incident, and they helped me out a lot," Camp said.

Camp said he knew about the $25-bike fine before he rode his bike on the sidewalk, but he didn't think anyone would stop him.

"I had some idea. I knew they were going to start writing tickets for bikes on the sidewalks," Camp said.

Camp said although he knew about the fine, he didn't expect anyone to harass him about his student ID.

"Captain Mellgren told me at the meeting that there is a regulation to carry your student ID on campus, but the officers never enforce it," Camp said.



Camp said although he admits he knew about the fine, he wants the officer to receive proper punishment for his improper behavior.

"He put the handcuffs on me, and he sort of apologized. He said he thought they were necessary, but he beat around the bush and never apologized," Camp said.

Camp said he has a firm idea of what he wants to happen to Fenton.

"The officer should be fired," Camp said.

Camp said the case is now in the hands of his lawyer. He said he plans to appeal the $25 fine for riding his bicycle on the sidewalk.

Rape education a campus effort

Education is important to OSU sexual-violence policy

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

This is the third in a seven-part series on the sexual assault policies at Big Eight schools.

Oklahoma State University has taken an educational approach to sexual misconduct on campus.

Five years ago, the Committee for Rape Prevention and Awareness was formed, said Joni Hays, senior clinical counselor for University Counseling Services at Oklahoma State.

sexual VIOLENCE policy

The committee was made up of student leaders, faculty members, staff, campus police, administrators and peer educators, Sgt. Steve Gahanas, Oklahoma State campus police department, said.

Oklahoma State did not have a formal sexual-misconduct policy until the last four or five years, Ron Beer, vice president of student services, said.

"We've had one in one form or another since 1980," Beer said, "but in the last four or five years, we've become more attentive and more explicit."

The formal statement on sexual misconduct, adopted on Feb. 19, 1993, states that any form of sexual misconduct, whether physical, mental or emotional, will not be tolerated by the university. The policy includes any act including rape, sexual assault and sexual harassment.

If the university believes a student has violated the policies prohibiting such conduct, it will pursue strong disciplinary action through the student-conduct system, according to the policy.

Students are subject to disciplinary action from the university even if they commit sexual crimes off campus.

The Oklahoma State Office of Student Conduct checks the Stillwater, Okla., police records for students involved in serious crimes such as sexual or alcohol-related crimes.

"We send them a letter and they have 10 working days to respond," Kim Payne, a secretary for the Office of Student Conduct, said.

Students can be referred to the office because of student complaints, academic problems and disciplinary problems in the classroom or tickets received from the Stillwater Police Department or campus police.

If Student Conduct does not hear from the student after the first letter, a second letter is sent. If the student does not respond to the second letter, Student

Vote postponed until next week

Student Governing Association again considered what to do with extra student money.

At its meeting Thursday night, SGA postponed a vote on a bill that would create the Student Life Enrichment Account. This account would contain $17,000 collected from an overcharge in the student-activity fee.

The bill specifies the money will be spent this year on projects to benefit the entire student body.

Bryndon Meinhardt, privilege fee chairman, asked the vote on the bill be postponed. He requested an extra week so the executive committee can propose a bill to refund money by decreasing fees next year.

"I just think there are two alternatives, and they both need to be looked at," Meinhardt said.

Jeff Peterson, student body president, recommended decreasing next year's tuition. Peterson said many students have expressed concern to him about increased spending.

"Even though it is only a 50-cent issue, it is still the same issue," Peterson said. "It's about saving money vs. spending money."

Rachel Smith, arts and sciences senator, said she favors spending the money on projects rather than lowering fees. She said the senior class will not get its money back if tuition is not lowered until next year.

"If it is going to be a donation, I would rather spend the money now and save all of the paperwork," Smith said. "It's a bureaucratic nightmare."

Peterson encouraged students to express their opinions on how to spend the extra money. Students may phone or visit the SGA office.

"We will have more dialogue in the next week so we will know what students want us to do with this money," Peterson said.

Accountability key to increasing funds

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Demonstrating that state schools need increased funding begins with proving their accountability.

That's the theme the Kansas Board of Regents chairman Frank Sabatini put forth at a Thursday news conference in Anderson Hall.

Sabatini and K-State President Jon Wefald spoke to several members of the local media on the board's role in higher education.

Sabatini said K-State was demonstrating accountability in several ways, and he challenged K-State deans to educate the public on what the faculty does.

"The faculty here has one of the highest credit-hour production per ranked faculty member in the state," Sabatini said. "This University is running very efficiently with a lot less money."

Wefald said he agreed.

"Tax payers in general could look at a place like K-State and see our faculty isn't only doing the job of research and service, but is also doing the job in the classroom," Wefald said. "We are either No. 1 or No. 2 when it comes to number of students taught per faculty member."

Sabatini also said 33 percent of Kansas high-school students who finished first or second in their graduating class were enrolled at K-State for the fall semester.

Sabatini said the board's proposed 7-percent tuition hike was very competitive with peer institutions.

"If we are going to raise tuition, then we have to find ways to raise scholarship money and financial aid," Sabatini said. "If we could find more grant money, then I think tuition could go on up."

Both Wefald and Sabatini said that increased tuition was a big concern of students.

Wefald said that the board was now at a point where it would be somewhat more conservative in tuition increases and added that the legislature really determined what the

▶ ACTIVITIES CARNIVAL TO SHOWCASE ORGANIZATIONS OFFERED AT K-STATE

The 37th annual Activities Carnival will be Sunday at the K-State Union.

Sponsored by the Union Program Council, the carnival is a showcase of activities offered to K-State students.

"It is good for the new student to see what is available," Li Sparks, UPC program adviser, said.

The carnival has taken place every year for the past 37 years, and the turnout has always been good, Sparks said.

"This is one of our longest-standing programs on campus," Ann Claussen, UPC assistant program director, said. "It's like going shopping for things to get involved with."

The carnival will begin at 4 p.m. and end at 7 p.m. Sunday. About 200 tables are expected to be set up at the carnival, Claussen said.

Among the organizations participating in the carnival is the K-State Sailing Club, which will have a sailboat assembled and on display in the Union Courtyard.

KSDB-FM 91.9 will be operating a live remote in the courtyard, and Aikido Club will be demonstrating self-defense techniques. The UPC Multicultural Committee will offer free international coffee to all.

"Being involved is something that is looked upon as a plus on a résumé, and that's why I feel that the interest has risen," Sparks said.

Attendance is expected to be as good as past years because the interest is high, she said.

Directly following the carnival will be a free showing of "Heathers" in Forum Hall, on the ground floor of the Union.

▶ COPPER BOWL MEMORABILIA: NOW YOU SEE IT, NOW YOU DON'T

K-State Police officers were summoned to Anderson Hall at 5:40 p.m. Thursday when a student security officer noticed two displays were missing.

Ed Leboeuf, student security officer, noticed the display featuring news clips from the 1993 Copper Bowl and an academic display featuring a USA Today academic all-American were missing.

This is the second time the Copper Bowl display has been reported missing. Last spring, the display was stolen and later found in a dumpster.

"The administrator we contacted feels confident that they're just updating it for the new football season," said campus police officer Robert Fenton.

Leboeuf and Fenton called Thomas Schellhardt, vice president for administration and finance, to see if one of the janitors had taken down the displays to update them.

There are two other displays in the area from which the Copper Bowl and academic displays were taken. One display features the two-year-old Sports Illustrated issue that mentioned K-State. The other features the newspaper clipping of a story about President Jon Wefald.

Leboeuf said he didn't think the disappearance had anything to do with memorabilia collection because the missing displays aren't on the same subject. Instead, both the missing displays and the two remaining are about football and academics.

"It might be in somebody's office waiting for some more stuff to be put in it," he said.

▶ SIGNS POSTED TO LIMIT PARKING CONFUSION DURING CONSTRUCTION

Stop and read the sign.

The KSU Council on Parking Operations is relying on students to read the signs posted on campus to cut down on confusion, especially during construction. Because of construction, many parking lots have been changed to deal with the parking problems.

At the council meeting Thursday, Mark Taussig, facilities-planning officer, explained some future problems for campus parking.

In addition to the library expansion, the art museum is scheduled for construction starting in October. It will be located in the A-1 parking lot at the corner of Anderson and Manhattan avenues.

Only 18 stalls will be left in A-1 and 53 in A-2, Taussig said. Access to campus from 14th Street will be cut off for one year, he said.

To deal with the overflow of traffic entering campus from other streets, a proposal has been made to change a section of Mid Campus Drive to two-way traffic. The two-way traffic will extend from the front of the K-State Union to Anderson Hall, Taussig said.

Another change this fall has been to the Lot D-1 near Memorial Stadium. It has been changed from general parking to student parking on the north side and general parking on the south side, Dwain Archer, director of parking, said.

Previously, 500 stalls were for students, 102 stalls were for general parking and 64 stalls were reserved for faculty/staff, he said.

The problem is that the distinction is not clear on the campus map, and students are parking in the wrong spots even though signs are posted. For now, warnings are being issued, but students need to pay attention to the signs, Archer said.

Archer also discussed the parking allocations at B-16 and B-3. Parking lots around Goodnow and Marlatt are not full, he said. Therefore, they have transferred 30 to 40 parking permits to those lots for students who live in either hall. This has increased the space in B-3. Now, B-3 and B-16 can be shared by general-parking students and B-3 students, he said.

Within the shared lot, 100 spaces have been allocated for general parking only. This is for students going to class in Weber Hall and other people, Archer said.

Unfortunately, many B-3 students are parking in this area because it is a shorter walk to the residence halls, Archer said.

John Lambert, director of public safety, suggested putting notes on cars asking to fill the B-3 lot first until differences between the maps and signs can be dissolved, and restrictions can be enforced.

struggling with TOURETTE SYNDROME

Students hope to raise awareness of Tourette syndrome

TRINA HOLMES
Collegian

Two students with Tourette syndrome will be trying to raise awareness about this often-misunderstood disorder with a presentation on Sunday.

Their presentation, including a video and question/answer session, will be at 7 p.m. in the fourth-floor lobby of Moore Hall.

Matthew Locke, senior in secondary education, said he was diagnosed with TS when he was 9-years old.

Locke said he hopes the presentation will clear up many misconceptions about the disorder.

"We're not crazy," Locke said. "We have a disorder which is bothersome, annoying and uncontrollable, but we cannot help it."

According to the Tourette Syndrome Association, TS is a neurological disorder characterized by involuntary, rapid, repeating movements or tics.

Locke said his symptoms have waxed and waned since his diagnosis.

"Some of the tics I have are when I'm driving in my pickup. I've had the tic of banging the back of my head on the window at full force," Locke said. "I've had goose eggs and, at times, a bald spot."

Locke said he can usually fight the compulsion to scream or make noises in inappropriate places.

"When I'm in places where I know I shouldn't, I can usually control myself," he said. "Medications work very well in my case."

However, he said his efforts to control his actions have worked against him.

"Sometimes, I have the tic of having to give someone the finger," Locke said. "Often in situations where I don't want to have tics, the pressure not to have them makes the tics all the more present."

Locke said it was easier for him to be open about having TS in college than in it was in high school.

"I make noises all the time in class, but all the education people know I have it (TS)," Locke said. "It's easier to relax when people know about it."

Overcoming the public's ignorance about the disorder as well as introducing them to people who actually have TS are some of the goals of the seminar, Locke said.

"People that don't know a person has Tourette's can probably think all kinds of things about them," he said. "It's just a matter of people not knowing that's confusing. One of the purposes of the forum is to educate, not only the people of Moore Hall, but others as well."

Locke urges people who think they might have TS to attend the presentation and contact him.

"If a student thinks they have Tourette syndrome, I'm willing to talk to them about it," he said. "There's nothing worse than not knowing what's wrong with you."

Kim Robertson, senior in lifespan development and fourth-floor Moore resident assistant, said the forum is important for residents of Moore.

"We are trying to educate the rest of Moore Hall about Tourette's since we have a resident living in Moore Hall with Tourette's," Robertson said. "We're hoping the presentation will give people information so they'll be more in tune with what it (TS) is."

Dan Hayden, sophomore in pre-medicine and Moore Hall resident, said he was diagnosed with TS in June 1993.

He said he hopes the presentation will raise awareness of Tourette syndrome.

"I hope more people will understand what Tourette syndrome exactly is, what I mean by tics and what goes along with it, so people won't stare at me as much," Hayden said.

Hayden said he has received mixed responses from people he has told about his having the disorder.

"I've gotten both good and bad reactions," he said. "With some people, it's like 'no problem,' and others don't seem to ever get over it."

Hayden said he has become more tolerant of others since he was diagnosed with TS. He also said he wished others would be more understanding toward those with the disorder.

"We don't like some of the things we do any more than other people, but we have no choice in it," Hayden said.

THINGS TO KNOW ABOUT TOURETTE SYNDROME

- Tourette syndrome is a neurological disorder characterized by tics — involuntary, rapid, sudden movements that occur repeatedly in the same way.
- Other problems include obsessive-compulsive traits, hyperactivity, attention-deficit disorder, learning disabilities, behavioral problems and sleep disorders.
- Other manifestations are corprolalia (the compulsion to utter obscenities), echolalia (the compulsion to repeat words heard) and palilalia (spontaneous repetition of one's own words).
- The most common symptom is a facial tic or involuntary sounds.
- Genetic studies suggest that one in 200 people might have Tourette syndrome.
- Tourette syndrome is three times more prevalent in men.
- The disorder occurs worldwide in all races.

Meal, dancing, culture to be part of Indonesian night

Gado-gado, sate ayem will be part of the ethnic menu

TIM ORINDGREFF

Great food, great dancers and culture, all in the same evening.

The K-State Indonesian Student Association will present Indonesian Cultural Night '94 from 6 to 10 p.m. Saturday at Manhattan Middle School.

"This is a great way to introduce the people around here to Indonesian culture," Iwan Winata, senior in marketing, said.

The evening will start with a dinner prepared by Indonesian students. The dinner will cost $4.

The meal will consist of sate ayam, grilled chicken arranged into bamboo sticks with a sweet peanut sauce; gado-gado, a steamed vegetable dish served with peanut sauce; mei goreng, fried noodles with beef, shrimp, chicken and vegetables; rempeyek, rice flour crackers sprinkled with nuts; klepon, small rice cakes stuffed with palm sugar and rolled in coconut; and es teler, a mixed tropical-fruit drink.

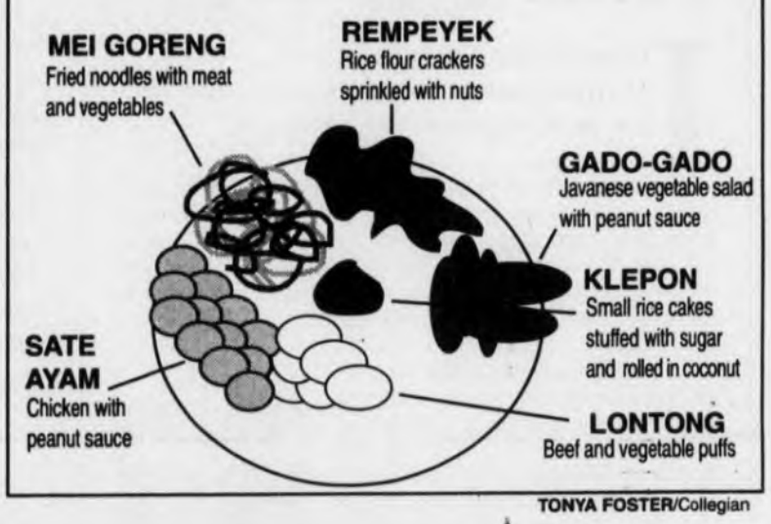
Following the meal will be a show of traditional Indonesian dance and music performed by members of the Indonesian Consulate General from Chicago.

"The group is made up of about half Indonesians and half non-Indonesians and Americans," Winata said.

The show will have six different traditional dances and a traditional bamboo orchestra.

The Mask Dance is performed by one dancer using several masks for his different characters.

The Saman Dance, or dance of 1,000 hands, is named after the Muslim chief who introduced Islam to Indonesia.



The Bambangan Cakil Dance is a Javanese dance showing a knight and an ogre in mortal combat.

Winata said this is the first time the Indonesian Student Association has sponsored this and plans on doing it again in the future.

Dinner tickets will be available from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. today on the K-State Union first floor, in front of the Stateroom. Tickets may also be purchased Saturday night at Manhattan Middle School.

INDONESIAN CULTURAL NIGHT

Indonesian Student Association is having a traditional dinner from 6 to 8 p.m. and a cultural show from 8 to 10 p.m. on Saturday at the Manhattan Middle School. Tickets are available in front of the Stateroom on the first floor of the K-State Union.

ANNOUNCING TWO NEW CREF ACCOUNTS

YOU'RE LOOKING AT TWO COMPLETELY OPPOSITE, FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT WAYS TO INVEST IN STOCKS. WE RECOMMEND BOTH.

Introducing the CREF Growth Account and the CREF Equity Index Account.

Whether you want a fund that selects specific stocks or one that covers the market, we're on the same page. Our new CREF Growth and CREF Equity Index Accounts use two distinct strategies for investing in the stock market, but both aim to provide what every smart investor looks for: long-term growth that outpaces inflation.*

The CREF Growth Account searches for individual companies that are poised for superior growth. In contrast, the Equity Index Account looks for more diversification, with a portfolio encompassing almost the entire range of U.S. stock investments. It will invest in stocks in the Russell 3000, a broad index of U.S. stocks.

Like our CREF Stock Account, which combines active, indexed, and foreign investing, and our Global Equities Account, which actively seeks opportunities worldwide, the new funds are managed by experienced investment professionals. They're the same experts who have helped make TIAA-CREF the largest pension system in the U.S., managing over $130 billion in assets.

To find out more about our new stock funds, and building your portfolio with TIAA-CREF, just call 1 800-842-2776. And take your pick.

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.℠

*The new funds are available for Retirement Annuities subject to the terms of your institution's plan. They are available for all Supplemental Retirement Annuities.

K-State needs to move on with rape case

The University should focus its attentions on developing better plans to deal with those who have been sexually assaulted.

K-State's perpetuation of the Shana Nycole Nero lawsuit is only hurting students.

Eleven out of 12 jurors believed Nero deserved to be compensated for the University's negligence in placing her in a residence hall with a man previously arrested for raping another student.

K-State's resistance to settling the Nero case sends a bad message to future victims that the University will not help.

It also consumes time and energy that could be better spent preventing what happened to Nero from happening to someone else.

The University should focus now on educating, improving campus safety and ensuring there are services available to help victims of future crimes. It is reprehensible that the University is placing more emphasis on this lawsuit than the safety and well-being of students. The K-State Police, University Counseling Services, Women's Resource Center and Dean of Student Life office need to turn their attention inward.

They should try to improve communication so future victims can receive the best help possible. The breakdown of communications among these groups was in part responsible for Nero's suffering.

K-State was found negligent in this case. It did not try to refute the decision of the jury in its motions. Arguing about the price of this person's pain is not benefiting anyone. It is time the University pays up and moves on.

TOLES

Farming, ecology battle over bugs

It may be hard to believe, but environmental and agricultural concerns are not always mutually exclusive.

The latest demonstration of an encouraging new trend in agriculture has come from K-State. For years, Kansas flour mills have been using chemicals as economically viable methods of ridding their mills of flour-eating bugs. The chemical, methyl bromide, has been shown to be harmful to the ozone layer, is poisonous and will soon be illegal to use as a fumigant.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

In an experiment using the mill built inside Shellenberger Hall, the Department of Grain Sciences and Industry recently demonstrated that flour mills can effectively eradicate 97 percent of the bugs inside them simply by raising their internal temperatures. This is an amazingly simple solution to a serious problem — simply cook the little buggers to death.

If you think ag technology pertains only to good ole boys in OshKoshes, think again. Flour goes into most every piece of bread, cake and bowl of cereal you eat. When the price of flour goes up because bugs are eating it, there is an effect on everyone.

Similarly, when millers and farmers use harmful chemicals to stop bugs from destroying grains and crops, it can have a harmful effect on the air we breathe and the water we drink.

Some in agriculture have been very defensive, and perhaps rightfully so, of the use of chemical herbicides and pesticides to keep crop yields high.

Radical environmentalists have been insisting that farmers use fewer chemicals on their crops and instead grow everything organically.

This would be a fine idea if farmers were only growing food for themselves. Instead, every farmer has the job of feeding almost 100 people around the world, and doing it cheaply. Without some kind of defense against pests and weeds, crops will shrink, and prices will go up.

Yet, there must be some way to reconcile these differences. After all, farmers do not want to pollute their lands and groundwaters into uselessness, and they usually live where they grow crops.

Environmentalists, on the other hand, don't want food to be so expensive that the United States and charities can't provide food to hungry people around the world who get it free or to those who buy it cheaply in America.

Obviously, farmers and environmentalists really have some common concerns, but you wouldn't know it by the uncompromising rhetoric on both sides.

Ag researchers are learning that there are some natural answers to the needs of Earth and the people on it. The kind of discovery like this recent one at K-State is, I hope, a sign of things yet to come: common-sense solutions to important problems on the farm.

One area that could be examined further is the use of predatory insects that kill pests and weeds but leave crops alone.

Perhaps researchers will find the proper kinds and ratios of insects that will keep crop yields high but will still cost less than the chemical pesticides currently used.

Farmers would have to quit using pesticides altogether in order to keep the "good bugs" alive, and most do not want to chance throwing away a year's income on some experimental technique.

That's where K-State comes in.

Perhaps some enterprising researcher here will prove that pesticides and herbicides are unnecessary, thanks to the animals that God has put here to help us out.

Perhaps, but there is a lot of influence floating around here from organizations that support chemical use exclusively, and they will not back off a bit on the issue.

Until both environmentalists and farmers become more reasonable in their agendas, however, everyone will suffer the consequences. Let us hope that a new trend of cooperation is gaining momentum at K-State and in America.

Women need to be cautious at all times

As I watched my two friends walk upstairs together that night, I felt very certain that he would never, ever take advantage of her.

CHRISTY LITTLE

One night last winter, several of my friends got together to do a little celebrating before finals started. After having way too much to drink, two of my friends began to hit it off. They had been acquaintances for some time, so this new and profound attraction for each other was funny to the rest of us.

When the two went upstairs together around midnight, I laughed and waved at them. A few hours later, I went upstairs to take my friend home, but no one answered. I trusted the guy and didn't give the situation a second thought. Then, I went home.

My friend woke up the next morning and found a used condom next to her. She woke the guy up, who sheepishly told her that she was the best he'd ever had.

My friend had passed out before they even reached his room. Having sex with a person who is incapable of refusing because of the effects of drugs or alcohol is, by Kansas law, rape. There are a lot of things my friend could have done about the situation, but all she did was go home and try to forget about it, as if that could ever be possible for her. She is a more forgiving person than I could ever be.

Women take a lot of precautions to keep from being sexually assaulted. They lock up cars and houses, travel in groups, carry an artillery in their purses and look over their shoulders at night.

Monday night I left the Collegian after 2 a.m. to discover I'd left my Mace in Kansas City and my whistle had fallen off my keychain. Even with my car only 40 paces away, I walked toward it in a near panic. Most of the time, women's danger radars are on and running just fine. But for some reason, when the weekend rolls around, our common sense can parallel a 5-year-old's.

My friends go off alone with guys to rooms and cars when one or both of them have been drinking, and when they barely know them. Girls will ditch their friends in Aggieville, unconcerned about who will make it home and how.

Even when friends routinely appoint a token babysitter to keep an eye out for everyone (as I was on my friend's unfortunate night), that one person cannot read a situation well enough to know if their friends are making decisions they would make when sober.

What it gets down to is when people are drinking and picking up on each other, signals get mixed. Girls get confused. A guy tells you to come upstairs with him to get a beer, and we wonder if he means for you to stop in for a minute or for the night. But he's been nice so far, right?

Sometimes we're right, but sometimes we're wrong.

We learned (I hope) from the reported rape during the first week of school to watch our steps. The normal precautions, like locking doors and traveling in pairs, were given. But a lot of rapes don't include weapons and anonymity. A lot of them include beer and mixed signals.

Protect yourself. Don't go off alone with a guy or guys you don't know. Don't drink so much that you lose awareness of what's going on. Make sure you have a friend watching out for you who's going to know how, when and with whom you're going home.

As different as the circumstances seem, the reported rape victim and my friend have been assaulted in the same way. Don't let yourself become a victim as well. Unfortunately, watching out for your safety is a full-time job.

As I watched my two friends walk upstairs together that night, I felt very certain that he would never, ever take advantage of her. He was the kind of guy I'd gladly introduce any of my friends to. I learned you can never know someone well enough. My friend learned you can never be too careful.

Student had his constitutional rights

Dear Editor,

I would like to add my two cents worth in the continuing debate concerning what I call the bicycle incident. I would especially like to respond to letters by Tad Wagner and Dallas Gilmore.

Mr. Wagner is very eager to introduce everybody to the law as set out by the U.S. Supreme Court in Terry v. Ohio 392 U.S. 1 (1968), which was later codified by the Kansas legislature in KSA 22-2401.

An officer can request an individual to provide his or her name, address, etc. if the officer suspects legal activity. But the law does not require that person to answer.

It would be illogical to say that a person must answer questions before being placed under arrest, but as soon as they are arrested they can bask in the luxury of their Fifth Amendment privileges.

We do not live in a police state or at least I would like to believe such. While attending law school and my first year out, I worked in a firm in which my primary job was to handle police-abuse cases. Most of them started out with incidents similar to Mr. Camp's. The situations escalated into abusive situations, not due to any actions of the alleged perpetrator, but because of the ineptness of the officer or his short temper.

Sure, the officer has the discretion of placing a person in custody for misdemeanor crimes. However, when the purpose in this case was to make an ID of Mr. Camp, the prudent thing would be to use his radio and call for verification. It seems that this officer wanted to show him what happens when you get "smart with the law."

Mr. Camp appears to try and make light of the situation by making smart remarks. This is not a crime. Once again, I would like to refer Mr. Wagner to our Constitution, Amendment One. With a little research, you will find case after case, in federal and state court, that one of the original purposes of the First Amendment was to allow the citizens of this country to criticize the officials of the government without fear of reprisal.

It appears to me that the letters I have read supporting the officer and his actions have a somewhat biased viewpoint, Mr. Wagner is a senior in a criminal justice and psychology and Mr. Gilmore is a senior in criminology. They probably have intentions of becoming officers themselves and may worry about liability. Face it, anyone who holds themselves out to have more knowledge than the ordinary citizen can be held liable for their action — doctors, lawyers and even police officers.

College kids will be college kids

Dear Editor,

I am writing in regards to the lovely "Don't Screw Up" ad from our own "friendly" Riley County attorney. Suppose I actually listen to this guy and be a good little boy and don't drink or do drugs or write a check that could possibly bounce or "find" a parking permit — how could I still be identified as the pissed-off, rebellious, totally apathetic college student that I am?

Get back to your lives, leave me alone

Dear Editor,

I hope that everyone that has written to the Collegian has a 4.0. I know that I could find something better to do worth my time rather than show off my writing and cartoon skills. Now that everyone knows that you received an A in Comp. I, can we please get back to what most of us came here for: an education.

For the past week, I have been held up as a punching bag for every amateur journalist majoring in criminology with a need to comment on an incident they didn't witness and a person they didn't know. I have been called, at one end, the victim of an overzealous officer and, at the other end, an arrogant, smartass clown. I am not a criminal, nor am I a hero.

I will no longer stand by and be used as an excuse for every wanna-be-cop to comment on our justice system and I will not be made a folk hero for every bored college student with a need to protest. I don't need your criticism, nor do I want your adulation. If you have too much free time, pick up a few more hours, but leave me the hell alone.

Campus cops actions uncalled for

Dear Editor,

Are campus cops so hungry for action that they must now pick on cyclists? I am an experienced, alert and safe bicycle rider. When I ride on a sidewalk, I recognize that I am more dangerous than another pedestrian, and so I go slow. It is silly and uncompromising for the cops to enforce this rule as they are. And $25?! These people are thieves.

Pyramid schemes still plague Manhattan

We've heard of pyramid schemes, but this one takes the cake.

Officers of the Riley County Police Department summoned to the corner of 11th and Moro streets got more than a view Wednesday night. Several nude people were taking their pictures in various poses, among them a pyramid.

Reports have indicated that officers were fighting over who got to take the call.

What follows is made up, but it's short.

Jake Spreewell, unofficial spokesperson for the group, said the people were peacefully protesting the high price of polyester and the scratchiness of cotton products.

The fine folks at the International Center for the Promotion of Synthetic Fabrics refused to comment on the group, saying only that they have "heard of many renegade factions developing in the synthetic fiber world."

From the 'that guy really chaps my ass' file ...

Robert L. Preston wasn't fired for rubbing poison ivy on a toilet seat used by his boss. But the prank, brought on by workplace frustration, could still cost him a lot of money.

The Connecticut state appellate court on Tuesday cut the lawsuit damage figure a jury awarded Preston in 1992, agreeing with his former employer that lost wages weren't merited because the prank would have brought dismissal, had his superiors known he was to blame.

According to court documents, Preston was frustrated and angry over what he saw as management's failure to act on safety violations in 1988. So, he snuck into the bathroom used by his boss and rubbed the toilet seat with poison ivy.

"As a result, the plant manager, who is highly allergic to poison ivy, developed a severe reaction that took two months to cure," Judge Paul M. Foti wrote Tuesday on behalf of the court.

Kind of makes you think about the pluses of toilet seat covers.

A supposed alien spacecraft discovered near Roswell, N.M., 47 years ago likely was a secret Army Air Force balloon designed to monitor Soviet nuclear testing, the Air Force concluded Thursday.

In a report on the "Roswell Incident," the Air Force said contrary claims in a wave of sensational books and TV specials are "undocumented, taken out of context, self-serving or otherwise dubious."

The July 1947 discovery of wreckage on a ranch near Roswell has been at the center of longstanding disputes between UFO advocates and the government over whether the Air Force has been hiding evidence about alien-spacecraft discoveries.

The Air Force began its investigation earlier this year amid charges that it was covering up the truth.

A series of books followed advancing the UFO theory and accusing the Air Force of coverup. The TV show "Unsolved Mysteries" aired a recreation of the Roswell incident.

One of the most vocal critics of the cover-up theorists, a strange, green-complected man, Air Force Sgt. John "Gort" Nictu, claims that thinking life could exist on other planets is "completely preposterous," and that anyone who thinks such things could exist is "obviously controlled by the liberal media establishment."

Nictu then said he had to be leaving, and after saying something into his collar, he disappeared from sight.

Was Napoleon murdered in exile? More than 170 years after the emperor's death, the Federal Bureau of Investigation is on the case.

Using a few strands of his hair, the feds are trying to determine whether Napoleon's body was full of poison.

"It's a very hotly debated issue," said Michael La Vean, a board member of the Napoleonic Society of America.

The group from Clearwater, Fla., will release the results of the FBI tests and debate their significance Sunday, the last day of the society's annual meeting in Chicago.

The history books say Napoleon died of stomach cancer, but some say the British murdered the deposed French emperor. Others contend French royalists did him in, and some historians believe Napoleon's love of licorice killed him.

Actually, sources within the society say they hope to prove that his killer was actually Joey Lawrence from TV's "Blossom."

WEEKEND

SKA

A Revolution with Rhythm

Horns are blaring, drums are rumbling, and fans are jumping up and down to the beat and captivating rhythm of a new type of music that is sweeping the world.

Ska, a revolution in music, which was born in 1962 in Jamaica, is just now starting to catch on in America and is slowly seeping into the heart of the Midwest.

"There are so many types of ska bands across the USA. It's definitely catching on," Chris Diebold, bass player for the St. Louis ska band MU330, said.

"Every time we go to a city again, the scene gets bigger and bigger and more and more ska bands are developing in that city. I totally see an increase in appreciation of our music."

Diebold said the followers of ska have changed from a certain type of crowd to a general audience.

"There are a lot of people who are totally into ska," he said. "We are starting to attract many types of people. What we've found while we're touring around the country is that most of the audience is under 21."

Diebold said his band, MU330, formed while he and his friends were in high school.

"I heard ska for the first time eight years ago when I was a junior, and I totally loved it," Diebold said. "I had a friend who played the horn, and we were all in jazz band together. We listened to a ska tape, and it started to develop into a jam session, which later turned into a band.

"We developed our own original ska song, and our band decided on the name MU330 because our jazz band met in music room 330 in our high school."

Diebold said MU330 has played in Manhattan at the Warehouse, and said they will return if there is somewhere for them to play. They are currently on a six-week tour across the country.

Elyse Rogers, vocalist for Los Angeles-based band Dance Hall Crashers, said she has been into ska since she was 12 years old.

"I used to sneak out of my window and go to clubs when I was a teen-ager," Rogers said. "I was big into the underground scene in L.A., and by the age of 15, I was in a band when my voice hadn't even developed yet."

The Dance Hall Crashers are featured on the compact disc, "International Colors of Ska," as one of the only two American bands. They have also toured around the world.

"We have been to Japan, but our biggest audience was in Honolulu — 25,000 kids came to see us," she said. "It was phenomenal. It was so big there that they played a song by us on the alternative-music station every hour."

Christopher Hamrick, a Lawrence resident and devoted ska fan, said ska had a crucial part in the development of reggae.

Hamrick said ska came from a combination of American classic, rhythm and blues, Jamaican mento and polka. The Skattelites were the first ska band to form in Jamaica in 1962.

In the summer of 1966, it was too hot to dance fast to ska, so the music slowed down into a fusion of blues and jazz. From 1966 to 1968, ska changed into "rock steady," and from 1968 to 1971, it slowed down into reggae.

Diebold said ska shouldn't be classified as one certain type of music.

"It's like saying all the rock has to sound like Elvis or punk-out thrash. Ska is so underground, that people expect it to be a certain way," he said.

Diebold said ska has developed into a new type of music, but the traditionalists won't accept the modern forms of ska.

"This is not the 1960s but the '90s, and there's a huge market for ska," he said. "I don't like it being stereotyped and I don't think ska can be defined as one thing as far as I'm concerned.

"In California, we performed in places where they had a lot of traditionalists, but people here are very open-minded to new and original ska music."

Diebold said his band performs to have a good time and entertain the audience.

"There's a variety of ska and we do what we like to do," he said. "Whatever feels right, we play. Our main goal is to have fun while we're playing because I see ourselves as a fun band. Ska is a happy, fun type music, and is very danceable."

Rogers said she has also encountered crowds who expect them to play a certain way.

"We've been to New York, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, and they were places where the people came to see us as pure ska so they turned out to be weaker shows," Rogers said.

"We don't really do too many ska shows anymore, but tonight, since we're playing with a lot of ska bands, we played ska."

Rogers said things can get ugly if the crowd doesn't like the type of ska that they're playing.

"It's ridiculous. There have been stabbings over it," she said.

"During the shows, we always have a lot of bouncers around us, but if anyone comes near us, the women in the band just push them back because we're tougher than some of the guys in the band."

Hamrick, a type of skinhead called a "rudy," said she believes in pure, traditional ska.

"A good ska band needs to be traditional, have a real respect for Jamaican music, have a good horn section, and play straight forward ska," she said.

"Bad ska bands don't know the history and don't know the culture," she said.

Hamrick said a group of skinheads called the "mods," brought ska into England in the 1960s.

Hamrick said the skinheads now dominate the ska scene all over America.

"It's mainly a skinhead scene. In Lawrence, the ska is like fast reggae, but it is a small town and has good live bands," he said.

Caroline Gnagy, a "rudy girl," who was dressed in a beret, black vest with checkered lining, which was covered with pins from ska bands and a black skirt, said she took a road trip to Nebraska to check out the scene and said Lawrence is way ahead of them.

"The traditionalists are just not there," Gnagy said. "I wore my suit, and I felt set apart from the crowd. It was like an MTV crowd.

"I kept looking for a skin or a rudy but never found one."

Erik Oyen, a Lawrence resident and a "mod," said the skins in America are like a family nationwide.

"We try to stand up for each other and keep fighting out of the scene," Oyen said.

During MU330's performance, the skinheads clustered in a group outside the bar because they refused to support a band that didn't play traditional ska.

A few minutes later, a young man dripping with blood stumbled out the door, and the members of MU330 showed their disgust with the violence.

"Every time we come here, someone gets in a fight. Just stop it," Diebold said.

Gnagy looked down at the ground in shame as one of her fellow skinheads walked out the door and apologized for beating up the man.

The skinheads surrounding me offered to take the wounded man to the hospital, and told me how upset they were about the fight.

"It reflects bad on all of us. It makes us look like ignorant people," Oyen said.

P.J. Arroyo, an alumnus of K-State, said the only people who get the press are the Neo-Nazi skinheads.

"If you put 10 skinheads in one room, eight of them would be dead," Arroyo said. "There's no such thing as a racist Skinhead. We try to bring opposites together.

"That's why we like checkered and black and white clothing — we believe in unity between blacks and whites, punks and skinheads."

Hamrick said the skins look out for each other.

"We never start anything, but if someone messes with a skin, they're pretty much dead," Hamrick said.

Rogers said she was aware of the skinhead scenes in the areas where her band was touring.

"In L.A., it got really bad," Hamrick said. "I've known skinheads who are beautiful and believe in racial unity, but some are horrible."

Ska is about unity and it was started by the Jamaicans. For some white punks to get involved, it's ridiculous.

"They don't know what they're talking about," Rogers said.

BASEBALL APPROACHES D-DAY

NEW YORK (AP) — With the World Series just a day away from being wiped out, striking baseball players delivered a taxation plan to owners Thursday and hoped it would be accepted in place of a salary cap. Owners said they will study the plan and respond today, the deadline for canceling the rest of the season. The plan calls for a 2-percent payroll tax and for clubs to split 25 percent of gate receipts.

Finally, the retirement of John McEnroe and Jimmy Connors and the decline of Ivan Lendl have virtually eliminated the character-players that we loved to watch, win or lose. It once seemed as if these factors would conspire to destroy tennis altogether.

Enter Luke and Murphy Jensen.

Never before has tennis resembled "Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure." The brothers from Michigan attracted more attention in New York than the baseball strike.

What makes them so special? The perfect combination of timing, showmanship and skill.

First, the time is right. Singles has almost become monotonous, as Sampras, Graf or some Spaniard or other always seems to win.

A new face on the doubles scene serves as a welcome break from the usual.

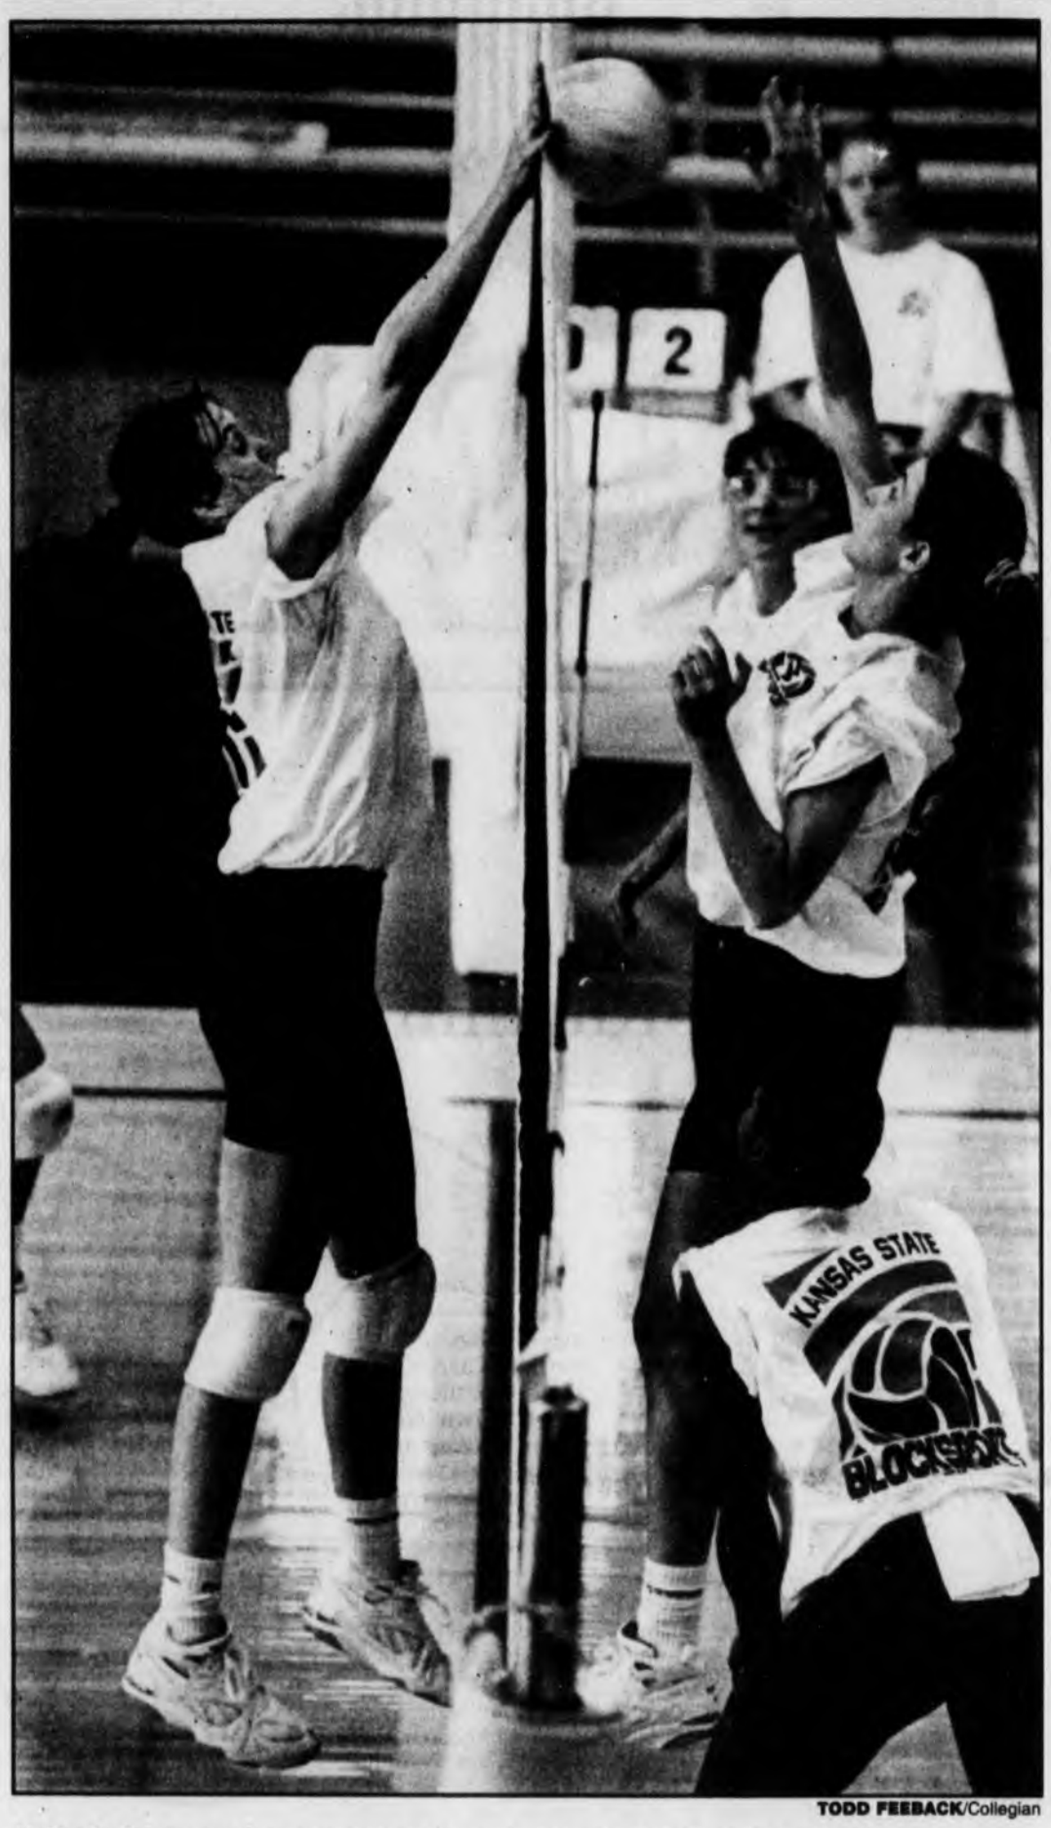
Second, the brothers are just different. It's not every day that you find an all-in-the-family doubles team. Nor can you find another family whose tennis-playing sisters, also a doubles team, can do the color commentary on te;evision ("This is so cool. We feel like pilots.") Nor can you find two people on the same court that make Andre Agassi look plain and McEnroe look easy-going.

But nowhere else can you find this level of ambidextrous tennis. While Murphy refuses to play left-handed outside of practice, Luke has been clocked at 98 mph serving lefty and more than 100 mph with his right.

These guys are good. College all-Americans (at USC and Georgia), they won the 1993 French Open in doubles. Powerful servers, impeccable team players, these two are not only the most exciting doubles team on the circuit, they are probably one of the best.

The crowds love them. Their victory last Friday over Patrick McEnroe and Bryon Shelton was watched by a packed Stadium Court. Most late-night doubles matches have a hard time capturing the attention of the players' immediate families.

So will they revive tennis? Not alone. But the fans will return. Even though the Jensens have been eliminated, the game goes on.



Open favorite Gabriella Sabatini has returned to the semi-finals. And Agassi, unseeded this year, is emerging as a favorite to win after a series of stunning upsets.

Women's tennis is getting more competitive and will be aided by up-and-coming Americans Lindsey Davenport and Lisa Raymond.

The men's game will continue to see the emergence of a new generation of players, mostly Russian. You can hardly swing a racket these days without hitting some unknown Russian who just knocked off Jim Courier.

But just as Larry Bird, Magic Johnson and Michael Jordan were credited with saving the NBA, so credit for reviving tennis must be given to the Jensen brothers.

Their undeniable skill and exciting style will make them the new heroes of the game.

Volleyball teammates clash at the net during practice. Last weekend the Wildcats snapped a 16-match losing streak and began a three-match winning streak at the KSU Invitational.

Challenge awaits netters in Oregon

JULIE KUHLMAN

K-State's volleyball team has already won almost half of the wins it posted last season.

And it has only won three games.

"When I first walked into this program, I saw junior-high girls who could hit the ball harder than Kansas State," Coach Jim Moore said.

The team is hoping to snatch four more wins at the Sizzler Showcase Tourney in Portland, Ore., this weekend.

The Wildcats will face their toughest opponent to date when they meet 4-1 Oregon State at 7 p.m. today, Moore said.

"Oregon State is a very high-caliber team with some powerful hitters who received some preseason rankings," he said. "To beat them, we are going to have to play extremely well and get our serves over."

Serving seems to be the team's main headache, Moore said.

Last weekend, the Cats recorded 50 service errors.

"Consistency in our serving is something we will continue to work on," Moore said. "You can't expect to win at the collegiate level if you don't have good serves."

The power that the players are putting into their serves has improved, Moore said.

"They are serving with more power, and are doing more of what they're capable of," he said.

Good setting and passing is another area in which the team is showing weakness, he said.

"I'm being very patient with my setters," Moore said. "They're not as far along as I would like them to be, but they're getting there."

"We will need the setters to perform well to be successful this weekend," he said.

An impressive team outing will be needed against Eastern Washington as well as the Cats' opponent at 2 p.m. Saturday, Moore said.

"Eastern Washington won their first game, and their confidence will be up," Moore said. "They are also a very good team."

K-State also will go head-to-head against Cal-State Fullerton at 2 p.m. Friday and Portland State at 10 a.m. Saturday.

Although both teams have 0-3 records, Moore said they will not be a cakewalk.

"Portland and Cal-State Fullerton might be just a little less of a talented team than what we faced last weekend," Moore said. "So, we will have our work cut out for us."

Yolanda Young, K-State's top hitter, said she is ready for this weekend's match-ups.

"I'm very fired up about playing," Young said. "The attitude is so much better this season, and we feel like we can beat anyone."

Much of the team's fiery attitude is owed to Moore, Young said.

"We have a lot of respect for Coach Moore," Young said. "The way that we are coached gives us a lot of confidence, and we really believe in ourselves."

Moore said he is confident of his players as well.

"I know that we have the potential to sweep the tournament," he said. "But the passing, the serves and the hitting will all have to come together this weekend to do it."

The Cats should finish the season well, Young said.

"I think we'll do so much better than last year in the Big Eight, and I think we'll win this weekend."

Huskers run over Red Raiders, collect second lopsided victory

Nebraska rolls up 524 yards rushing in easy win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Although it wasn't a performance for the ages, it was vintage Nebraska football.

"We just ran the ball. Old traditional Nebraska football — run it down their throat," quarterback Tommie Frazier said after scoring twice and throwing for a touchdown in the top-ranked Cornhuskers' 42-16 victory over outmanned Texas Tech Thursday night.

I-back Lawrence Phillips ran for 175 of Nebraska's 524 yards and scored two touchdowns in the third period as the Cornhuskers pulled away after Tech (1-1) cut it to 14-9 soon after halftime.

Nebraska 42
Texas Tech 16

"We played good football, but we didn't play inspired football," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said. "I think the layoff took a little edge off. Probably we weren't as sharp as we should have been."

Nebraska (2-0) hadn't played since routing West Virginia 31-0 in the Kickoff Classic on Aug. 27.

"I don't know if I've ever seen a team that stronger and better prepared," Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes said.

"It was really disheartening to be in there for awhile and then lose it," he said.

It was defense that kept Texas Tech within reach of Nebraska until midway through the third quarter. The unit, led by linebacker Zach Thomas, sacked Frazier once and had four tackles for losses.

"We played good at times and then the next quarter you don't know what happens," Thomas said.

"I think we lost our poise a little bit and didn't play like we can for 60 minutes," he said.

Frazier, who ran for 84 yards and threw for 88, gave Nebraska a 7-0 lead just 2:01 into the game when he sprinted 58 yards down the right sideline, then made it 14-0 by going the last 3 yards of a 98-yard drive early in the second quarter.

Tech's first pass completion of the game, with 12:22 left in the half, was a big one, a 43-yard pass from Tony Darden to split end Field Scovell that set up a 49-yard field goal by Jon Davis.

The Red Raiders made it 14-9 early in the third quarter on Zebbie Lethridge's 6-yard pass to tight end Scott Aylor. A two-point conversion attempt failed when Lethridge fumbled.

Then Phillips took over.

He vaulted 2 yards to make it 21-9, then sprinted 56 yards to give the Cornhuskers a safe 28-9 lead.

Frazier hit Eric Alford with a 35-yard TD pass to give the Cornhuskers a 35-9 with 10:56 left in the game.

Tech nearly gave away a touchdown in the fourth period when Darden ran 11 yards to the 2, only to fumble. A Nebraska defender jumped at the ball, but missed it and Tech tackle Ben Kaufman recovered in the end zone with 6:24 left to go.

Jayhawk quarterback improves

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — It's a good thing Kansas quarterback Asheiki Preston doesn't have to take a class from himself.

In last week's season opener, a 35-13 victory over Houston, Preston completed 14 of 17 passes for 161 yards and a touchdown. Following the game, he rated that a B performance.

But after watching the game films, "I'd probably give myself a B-minus or a C-plus," the senior quarterback said.

Preston and the rest of the Jayhawks will face Michigan State at 7 p.m. Saturday, at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence.

Preston, who took over the Jayhawk starting duties four games into last season, said tempo was a big factor in his tough grading.

"We had a couple of delay-of-game penalties. Those are my fault," he said. "I need to get the guys out of the huddle quicker."

Despite that critique, Coach Glen Mason said Preston has made tremendous improvement since last season.

"Asheiki is more confident," Mason said. "He has a strong arm and is just a better quarterback than he was a year ago."

Senior wingback George White, who describes himself as "a pretty fast guy," can attest to Preston's increased arm strength.

"I was running a deep pattern in practice, and he overthrew me," White said. "He never would have done that last year."

Perhaps more important to Preston's emergence than the improved arm and his vigorous off-season weight program is the confidence factor. Confidence was one of the reasons Mason decided to insert him in the 1993 starting lineup.

Even after a botched play that might have cost Kansas a victory, Preston remained confident.

"After he threw an easy touchdown pass into the ground against K-State, a lot of guys would have fallen apart," Mason said. "Asheiki came running back and said, 'We'll get them next time.' That's confidence."

Hanks arrested after late-night car accident

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The K-State football team hit another off-field road block at 12:43 a.m. Thursday morning.

Junior defensive back Steve Hanks was arrested by the Riley County Police Department for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

Hanks was arrested after he was involved in a one-car accident at 1515 Leavenworth St.

According to the police report, Hanks' car suffered major damage, and he refused treatment for knee pain.

He was later released on $500 bond.

Coach Bill Snyder was unavailable for comment.

Hanks

Hanks, originally from Manhattan, saw considerable playing time last season. He also started at free safety in the Wildcats' first game last Saturday against Southwestern Louisiana.

Last season, he started in only one game, but he finished as the Cats' third-leading tackler in the secondary. His season high in tackles came against Oklahoma, when he recorded 12.

Bands to jam for $400 grand prize

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

The beats and rhythm of seven unsigned bands will rock the north lawn of the K-State Union tonight in the eighth annual Opus band competition.

Jack Timberfish, 425 Main, Margin of Error, Acoustic Juice, Big Sky Showcase, Nash Vegas Cowhands and Emotional Killjoy will perform for 20 minutes each, competing for the grand prize of $400.

"It's definitely one of the most successful events that the Eclectic Committee offers," said Annie Gilliam, graduate student and Union Program Council program adviser. "Opus is a K-State tradition."

Gilliam said 16 applicants sent in audition tapes to be anonymously screened and judged by the UPC Eclectic Committee.

"We number the tapes, and when the committee is listening to them, they don't know what band it is. It's blind judging. I think it's very fair how we do it," Gilliam said.

Gilliam said the number of applicants is down, but the band competition is growing in size.

"We usually have around 20 bands apply, so this year, we're down a little bit. Last year, we had around 1,000 people attend," Gilliam said.

"Every year, it grows and gets bigger and bigger."

Melissa Wells, senior in accounting and chairman of the UPC Eclectic Committee, said Opus has attracted bands from around Kansas.

"We have four bands from Lawrence, a band from Great Bend, one from Wichita, a group from Russell and an alternate band from Manhattan," Wells said.

Wells said Manhattan bands rarely apply because of the embarrassment factor.

"The trend has always been that way. We don't get nearly as many Manhattan bands because if they play in bars around town and then don't place in the top three in the competition, they feel a little embarrassed," Wells said.

Wells said Truck Stop Love competed two years ago and placed second.

"The band who won the Opus competition broke up a few months later and Truck Stop Love got signed by a record contract. It's hard to tell what will happen," she said.

Wells said most of the unsigned bands around town are just now starting to play in bars, so the eight bands who were chosen by the 10 Eclectic Committee members tended to be based outside of Manhattan.

She said the bands at the 1994 Opus competition all have different styles, but almost all of them would fall under the same class of music.

"One of them is classic rock, another is bluesy-alternative, but I would call the majority of the bands alternative rock," Wells said.

"We have a lot of the same types of bands every year and the one that usually wins is a little different," she said.

Wells said that during the selection process, the judges looked at the band's originality, vocal ability and instrumental ability.

"It's a strong event. Last year, it rained, so we had it at Union Station and the place was packed. It's a great way to witness all the different bands at once. It's a good time," Wells said.

OPUS COMPETITION

UPC will present the eighth annual Opus band competition from 5 to 11 p.m. on the north lawn of the K-State Union. In case of rain, the competition will be moved to Union Station.

Program inflexibility upsets TCI customers

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

If you're frustrated that Manhattan's cable system doesn't carry Comedy Central or the SciFi Network, you are not alone.

Many people are upset with Tele-Communications Inc. because of its programming inflexibility.

"TCI seems to have a public-be-damned attitude," David Macfarland, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, said.

"TCI puts on channels that they have a financial interest in, not what the public asks for," he said.

Starz and Encore, for example, are heavily invested in by Liberty Media, a spin-off company of TCI, according to the Broadcast Education Association newsletter, spring 1994.

"Many people have asked for channels, such as the SciFi channel and Comedy Central, only to be faced with a 'What's in it for us?' reply from TCI," Bill Adams, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said.

Ron Frazier, TCI of Manhattan general manager, said the cable system has been trying to expand channels but has to deal with limited channel space.

All programming decisions are made at the corporate level in Denver, not locally, he said.

"Some people say 'Why don't you drop this and add this?' but it's not that easy."

"TCI is a large conglomerate, the largest in the U.S.," he said. "They try to standardize programming in order to get competitive prices."

Alternative system to cable available

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

A new form of TV broadcasting offering an alternative to cable is now available in Manhattan.

Direct Satellite System provides up to 150 channels of various audio and video programming, with the option of adding Fox and other networks.

It has better picture quality than cable television and a variety of different programming packages to meet individual needs, Craig Claassen, general sales manager for Conde's Audio and Video, said.

One popular option is the 24-channel package, which costs $22 per month, and is comparable to extended-basic cable, he said.

The technology for this broadcasting was developed by RCA over the past four or five years, Claassen said.

"The main reason that RCA came out with this system was to offer more programming options to rural areas," he said.

The DSS system uses a 14-inch satellite dish to receive the programming from two satellites.

It also operates on a separate radio band, which means there will likely be no interference from other sources, he said.

The digital quality of the reception allows for higher resolution than cable television, meaning a sharper picture and compact disc-quality sound.

DSS will be fully compatible with the new High-Definition Television systems, scheduled for operation around 1997, he said.

TCI, the cable conglomerate that serves Manhattan, plans to offer Primestar, which operates similar to DSS, Ron Frazier, general manager of TCI of Manhattan, said.

"I don't think DSS will be a threat to the local cable system," Frazier said. "It's mainly designed for uncabled, rural areas of the country, and so is Primestar."

The DSS system hardware, including the dish and receiver, costs $699 for the base model.

Programming packages range from $5 per month for only network channels to $60 per month for all the programming DSS has to offer, Claassen said.

TCI's Primestar system will cost $299 for installation and insurance, Frazier said.

Programming options begin with a $29.95, 65-channel value package. For an extra $3.95, customers can purchase networks like NBC and Fox, he said.

Max Conde, manager of Conde's Audio and Video, said DSS was superior in quality to Primestar.

"Primestar is an analog system. DSS is digital. DSS has a better picture, better sound, and you own the equipment," he said.

Frazier said TCI offers better service with Primestar.

"If anyone is seriously considering switching to DSS, I'd ask them to look at the service aspect compared to TCI," he said.

For example, if lightning strikes your dish and fries it, TCI will replace it, Frazier said.

In response, Conde said lightning and other acts of God are covered under most peoples' homeowner's insurance.

If something else goes wrong with RCA's equipment, they have a lifetime overnight-air policy, he said.

Students face university sanctions, courts

Conduct places a hold on the student's enrollment.

Punishments are given on an individual basis. The University sanctions for sexual crimes include an educational or counseling experience, suspension and expulsion, according to the policy.

"The perpetrator has usually had to view a videotape that deals with the subject," Payne said.

The perpetrator is asked to have no contact with the victim. Perpetrators are usually put on probation until they leave the university. In some cases, the perpetrator may even be suspended and later reinstated.

If the law-enforcement authorities choose not to prosecute a matter, the University may still take action on the matter through the student-conduct system, Payne said.

"A person could be found innocent in the courts and still face sanctions from OSU," Hays said.

Between 400 and 500 students are disciplined through the office annually for a variety of different offenses including sexual crimes, Payne said.

The rape-awareness committee has largely been responsible for bringing sexual-assault education to the general-campus population.

University Counseling Services also does programs whenever invited to.

"We go out any time we're asked. The problem is we don't get asked very often," Hays said.

Most of the programs Counseling Services does are in greek houses. Students are there because they have to be, Hays said.

"One of the biggest problems I see as a counselor who goes out and does programs is students don't realize that if alcohol is involved and the woman says yes, she really can't say yes," she said.

According to Oklahoma law, a person under the influence of alcohol is not capable of giving consent to sex or sexual acts, Hays said. A woman must actually say yes, or express consent, she said.

Beer said he thinks female students have a real responsibility to say no.

"I try to be very, very clear about 'no' meaning 'no,'" Beer said.

Regents discuss merger with junior colleges tuition level would be.

Sabatini also discussed the possibility of Kansas junior colleges merging with regents schools.

He said that in September the board would look at, among other things, the proposed merger between Barton County Community College and Fort Hays State University.

Wefald said that the area of school mergers was exciting and had many options.

"I think most people would agree that in a state of 2.2 million people that there are just too many post-secondary institutions to support the amount of students."

Wefald said that K-State was proof that mergers can work — speaking of the '91 Salina College of Technology merger with K-State — but cautioned against acting too quickly.

"We have to be careful because there are 18 community colleges, so anything we do at one may set a precedent for others."

Sobriety checkpoints stop impaired drivers

"Good morning, sobriety check."

"May I see your driver's license and registration, please?"

The Riley County Police Department checked 440 cars for drunk drivers Saturday night at a sobriety checkpoint.

More than a dozen area police officers worked for three hours checking cars on Kansas Highway 18 near the Manhattan Municipal Airport.

Officers arrested three drivers for driving under the influence and ticketed two people for transporting open containers.

This was the fourth in a series of eight checks the RCPD will conduct in the area.

Checks are conducted all over the state with the cooperation of the Kansas Highway Patrol and are partially funded by grants from the federal government.

Areas with high incidence of DUIs are selected for checkpoints, Jerry Turner, master trooper with the Kansas Highway Patrol, said.

Last week, a driver who was clocked at 90 mph on K-18 was tested and found to have a .19 blood alcohol concentration, Turner said.

The goal of the checkpoints is to get impaired drivers off the road, Turner said.

The checkpoints are also valuable for promoting

FIELD SOBRIETY TESTS

These exercises test balance:
- Suspects must hold one foot six inches off the ground and count to 30.
- Suspects must walk a straight line, one foot directly in front of the other, while keeping their arms down at their sides.

This excercise tests eye movement:
- A pen is held in front of the suspects' faces. The suspects must follow the movement of the pen without moving their heads. The eyes of an intoxicated person will bounce.

Preliminary breath testing:
Suspects blow into a hand-held meter.
- A green light indicates blood-alcohol concentration of less than 0.04 percent.
- A yellow light indicates blood-alcohol concentration between 0.04 percent and 0.079 percent.
- A red light indicates blood-alcohol concentration of 0.08 or above (legal intoxication).

These are pass-or-fail tests. Failure means arrest and an evidential breath test.

▶ SALES TAX

Campus not exempt from taxes

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

The proposed city and county tax hikes would raise taxes by 1 cent.

"The proposal is a half cent for the city and a half cent for the county," Manhattan Mayor Helen Cooper said. "The only effects will be what you paid sales tax on before."

This means the tax increase will not involve tuition or fees, but it will affect the price of books, school supplies, food and anything else purchased in the K-State Union.

The taxes will include the Stateroom, Union Station, Copy Center and bowling alley.

"If you buy something at the Union, you pay state, city and county taxes," Cooper said.

The prices listed in the Union no longer include sales tax.

Jack Sills, director of the K-State Union, said the Union decided it was more fair to add the tax at the register.

Counseling, crime prevention a plus for OU campus

This is the fourth in a seven-part series on the sexual assault policies at Big Eight schools.

The campus police and the counseling center at the University of Oklahoma have teamed up to fight crime and support the victims of rape and sexual assault.

sexual VIOLENCE policy

Susan Marcus-Mendoza, a licensed psychologist at Oklahoma, said more and more women out of her support group are reporting rape.

"The campus police are very good in terms of handling rape victims," Marcus-Mendoza said. "The survivors have said that the police have dealt with them to the best of their ability under the circumstances.

"I think that's why there's an increase in the number of women who decide to report the rape."

Neal Stone, deputy chief of operations for the department of public safety, said that in addition to counseling programs and support groups, the campus police have also tightened security on campus.

Oklahoma installed outdoor emergency phones in 1974 and have had phones outside the residence halls for about four years.

It also has supplemental student patrols. The patrols consist of community-service officers

Slattery asks students to get involved with statewide 'door-to-door' campaign

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

When Linda Slattery was a K-State student in the early 1970s, she took part in many campus protests.

The wife of Jim Slattery, who is the Democratic candidate for governor, returned to K-State on Sunday.

She asked students to get involved in the Kansas gubernatorial race for much the same reason she got involved in protests more than 20 years ago.

"Each of you have the chance for seven weeks, that's all it is, to get involved in the campaign that you can tell your children about," Slattery said. "The same way I've been telling my children about Vietnam."

The 1971 K-State graduate said the campaign against Republican challenger Bill Graves, secretary of state, was on shaky financial ground in comparison to Graves' campaign. She said Jim Slattery would never be able to win the election with money alone.

"This race is going to come down to a populous grass-roots campaign, and that's where you all really fit in," she said, pointing to the students sitting in front of her.

Even though most of the people she was speaking to were already actively involved with Students for Slattery, she said she wanted students to do even more for the campaign.

"This is the most painless thing I'm going to ask you to do," she said, holding up a Slattery-for-governor bumper sticker.

The most important thing Slattery wanted was students to pound the pavement for the Democratic candidate. She said she wanted an extensive door-to-door campaign all across the state.

"You don't have to know Jim's views on every issue," she said. "All you have to know is that you're supporting him, why you like him, and then you just walk door to door and hand out brochures."

Slattery said even though polls have the Democrat trailing Graves, they are moving in the right direction.

▶ GUBERNATORIAL DEBATE

Graves, Slattery debate at state fair

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

HUTCHINSON — A sea of red and blue greeted the two candidates for governor as they debated for the first time in the campaign Saturday at the Kansas State Fair.

Both Republican Bill Graves and Democrat Jim Slattery touched on issues ranging from school finance to health care.

Supporters from both sides, as well as curious onlookers, gathered at the Farm Bureau Arena to hear the two answer questions from the media and the public.

Supporters of Secretary of State Bill Graves wore red T-shirts, while supporters of Congressman Jim Slattery came decked out in blue.

One issue both candidates agreed on is the need for qualified admissions at state universities. Both Slattery and Graves said that would send a message to young students across the state.

"We're all about excellence in Kansas, and we have to be committed to a lifelong learning process at our regents institutions and beyond," Slattery said.

"I believe it's time we draw the line and require students to perform at the high-school level if they expect to be admitted to our state universities," Graves said.

Graves pointed out the success of K-State President Jon Wefald when it comes to recruiting students from high schools across the state.

"It would help if we could get a governor who would put their shoulder with Jon Wefald, with the new chancellor, whoever it might be, at KU and the other regents schools, and convince young people that there is a future in this state," he said.

Slattery said he would like to beef up the Kansas Value Added Center at K-State. The center was established 15 years ago to support products produced by Kansas farmers. He said the center should be given more financial support.

"We're talking about a very important part of research for the backbone of the Kansas economy — agriculture," Slattery said. "As far as I'm concerned, that should be increased."

▶ KANSAS LABOR EDUCATION CENTER TO AID LABOR FORCE, EMPLOYERS

Kansas workers and employers will be served by a new center at K-State.

The Kansas Labor Education Center was established during the 1993 legislative term.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations, said the center is now being established in association with the Institute for Social and Behavioral Research at K-State.

An 11-member committee will help organize the center. State senator Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, and state representative Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, are on the committee.

"When policy issues concern workers, we will bring them before the Senate," Oleen said.

Oleen said one of the main goals of the committee is to protect Kansas workers during possible layoffs.

"I believe that one of the main goals is to coordinate efforts so that Kansas workers aren't left in the lurch if job security is threatened," Oleen said.

Peterson said education and retraining of workers were issues the center may address.

"The biggest benefit is that we now have a statewide education center that will benefit both the labor force and employers," Peterson said.

Oleen said the council is a coordinated effort with the federal government, along with other labor unions.

▶ SELF-DEFENSE COURSE SCHEDULED TO TEACH AWARENESS, ASSERTIVENESS

The Women's Resource Center will be sponsoring a six-day self-defense workshop this month to teach women to be more assertive and self-confident.

The workshop will be from 4 to 5:15 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays, beginning Sept. 13 in Holton 206.

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said the workshop is free, and any woman would benefit from the training.

"The reason we like it is because it's the kind of program that any woman can do — even a woman that is physically disabled," Davis said. "Women who take a particular interest in it can even get good enough to teach it to other women."

The workshop will consist of practicing skills in basic assertiveness and verbal confrontation, as well as physical resistance, Davis said.

Davis said because of the sensitive issues raised during the workshop, optimal enrollment is only about 12-15 women, but as many may attend as space permits.

"The program gives women a heightened awareness that there's a lot of experiences we share. Because we share a great deal, we have a lot to offer one another," she said.

"A lot of women are really surprised to learn how much they know about taking care of themselves," she said. "In that way, it's kind of a variation of show and tell — talking about how we've successfully dealt with a particular situation."

Davis said the workshop teaches its participants the necessary skills for modern living.

"We want women to be free to move around in the world, and yet we know there are physical threats around," Davis said.

Susan Allen, assistant director of the center, said it is too bad that self-defense knowledge is such a necessity for women.

"It's sad that we have to know this, but we do," Allen said.

Allen said women who have participated in the workshop have found it very rewarding.

"I think it's wonderful," she said. "People learn a lot and have fun."

Although the workshop is a substantial time commitment, Davis said attendance will enable women to better handle most situations.

"We urge women to set limits to what they will tolerate, whether it be at a party or on the street," Davis said. "There are simple skills we can all master for handling a situation in the most effective fashion."

Davis said women have been taught from an early age to handle situations passively, and the workshop teaches women how to take charge of threatening situations.

"We teach women not to give ground," she said.

"We learn early in life that it's easier to leave the room or leave a party if we find someone or a situation threatening. We urge women to consider their alternatives and not take the crap."

WORKSHOP

Free self-defense workshops sponsored by the Women's Resource Center will begin Tuesday. Call 532-6444 to reserve your place.

▶ U.S. PLANS POTENTIAL HAITI INVASION TO DRIVE OUT CEDRAS AND COHORTS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House and the Pentagon have telegraphed the U.S. military's preparations for an invasion of Haiti that would use overwhelming force, including an innovative plan to put thousands of U.S. Army soldiers to sea on a naval aircraft carrier.

While aimed at driving Haiti's Gen. Raoul Cedras and his cohorts from power without having to fire a shot, such preparations can be costly, both politically and financially.

They carry the risk that once tens of thousands of troops are tapped for duty, President Clinton will have little choice but to follow the saber-rattling with military action or face renewed criticism for waffling.

Clinton, Vice President Al Gore, and advisers met Saturday at the White House to discuss Haiti, but made no final decisions, press secretary Dee Dee Myers said.

POLICE REPORTS

These reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County Police departments. Because of space constraints, not all crimes are listed.

OPUS

Variety, atmosphere make this year's event a success

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

The Union Plaza was transformed from a student walkway, free-speech zone and architecture-student hangout to a mini "Day on the Hill," during the eighth annual Opus Band competition Friday night.

Around 600 students sat down on the lawn, relaxed and enjoyed performances from eight bands from across the state.

"I like the atmosphere out here. It's cool to just sit around and see some bands play and chill out," Sundee Davis, freshman in pre-law, said.

Melissa Wells, Union Program Council Eclectic Committee chairperson, said the 1994 competition went well because it was outside instead of in Union Station as it was last year.

"When people are walking down the street, they can hear the music, and it draws them to it," Wells said.

Ted Connely, vocalist for Acoustic Juice, said he enjoyed performing outside for the Opus competition.

"The energy is so intense out here for some reason," Connely said.

Because the event was outside, some technical difficulties and problems with the sound system hindered the bands' performances.

"I couldn't hear the last band's vocals," Jared May, sophomore in accounting, said.

Aaron Rice, Eclectic Committee member, said some of the bands also had problems with their instruments.

Wells said the problems should be expected for an outdoor event and said most things fell into place.

"There were a few quirks, but for the most part, it sounded good," Wells said. "There's a big variety this year, and what's cool about this is there are so many different bands that you don't have to listen to the same music over and over again."

Because Jack Timberfish backed out at the last minute, the UPC Eclectic Committee asked the alternate band from Manhattan, Ten Thumb, to perform in the competition.

Blind Fly, another band from Manhattan, also appeared on stage, but did not compete for the $400 prize. The band instead played while the judges were making their final decision.

The three winners were chosen on the basis of originality, audience response and vocal ability.

Emotional Killjoy, a band from Wichita, won the $400 prize, followed by Acoustic Juice from Lawrence, which placed second, and Ten Thumb, who ranked third in the competition.

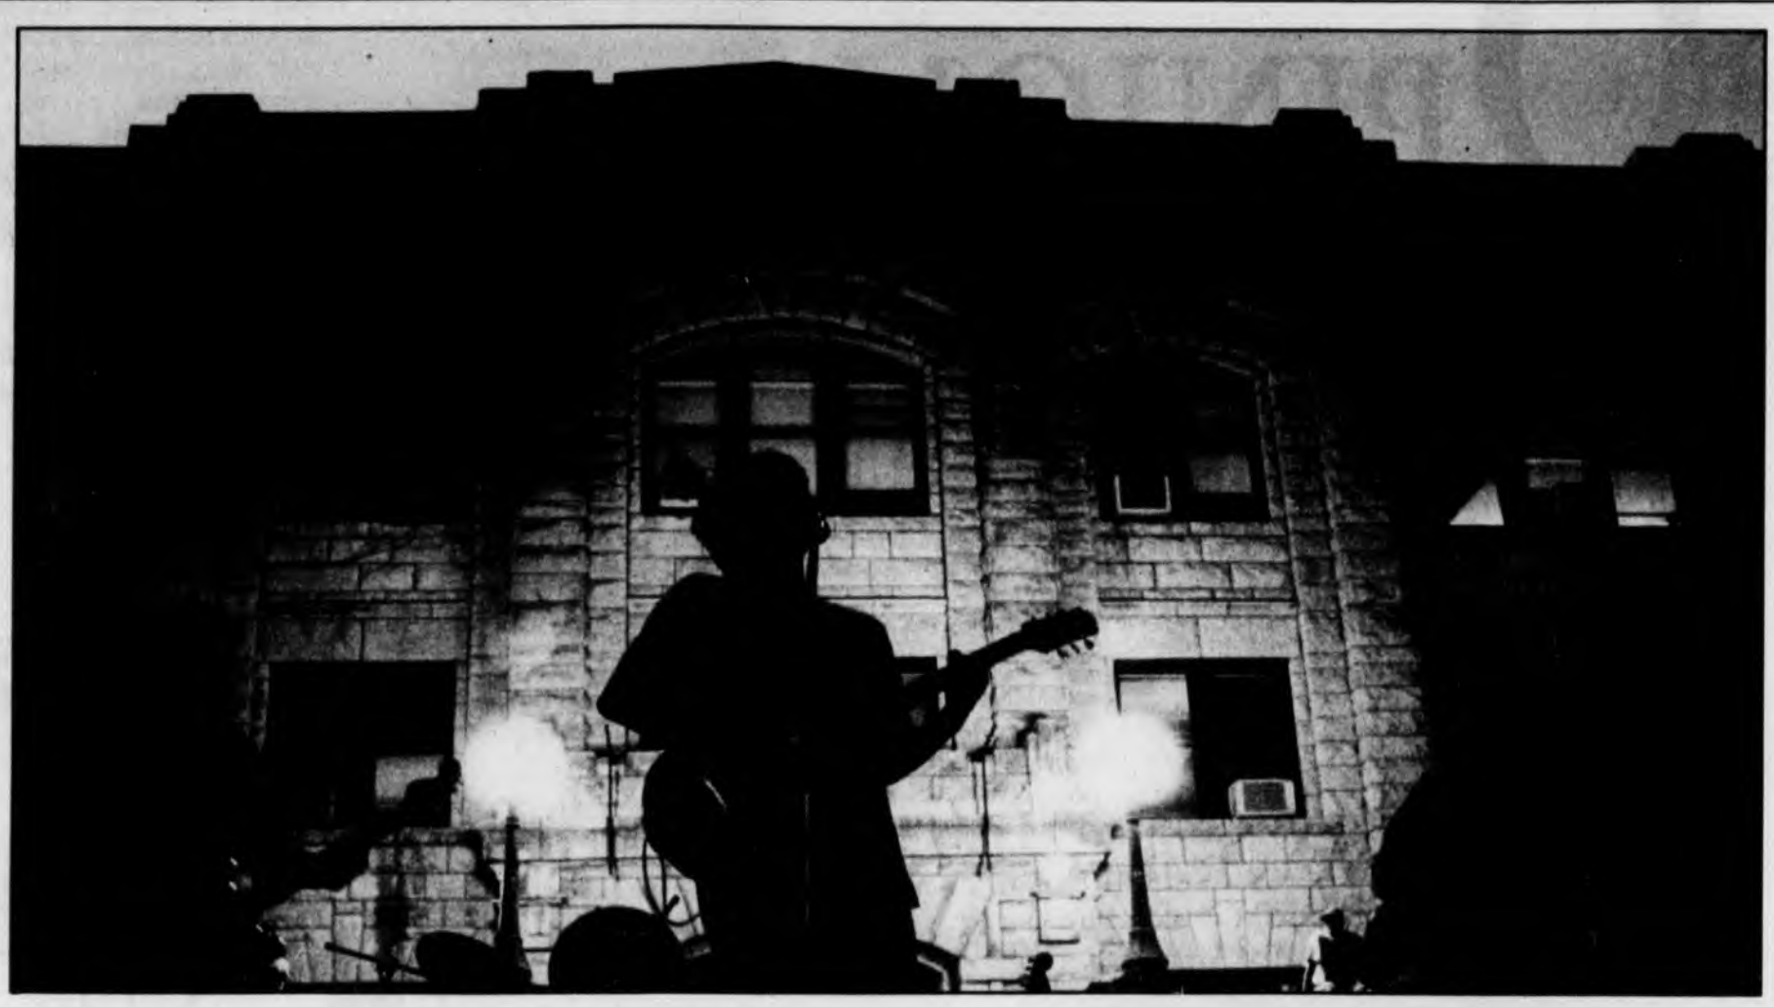
Steve Bartkoski, keyboard player for Emotional Killjoy, said his band, which has only been together since May, was thrilled to be honored as the top band at Opus.

"This is only our second gig, and I can't even explain how happy we are," Bartkoski said.

"We worked hard to play tight, and it was a little goal of ours all summer long to win the competition. It felt really good and was great to get to play outdoors."

Tony McCall, vocalist for Emotional Killjoy, said his band, which was inspired by English pop stars such as the Beatles, has hopes to get signed some day.

"We have a good time while we're playing and with some kind of luck, we'll get with a record deal that will allow us to travel," McCall said.



"We want to go play where people really enjoy music.

"I like events like Opus because when we're playing in bars, it seems like people don't care what's on stage, just as long as there's cheap beer."

Connely said his band, Acoustic Juice, plans to play in Aggieville as soon as his band gets its promotional package together.

"The turnout's pretty cool, but it's weird everyone's sitting down," Connely said.

"It's obvious that this town could use some real music and hear some good sound. That's why I'm looking forward to playing here — so I can get some blood running through them."

▲Playing into the night, Margin of Error, a Lawrence band, entertained the crowd Friday evening in the Union Plaza. Margin of Error, along with six other bands, competed for a grand prize of $400.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Students should vote down tax increase

We might have to pay another penny on the dollar for our sales taxes.

Manhattan wants half a penny, and Riley County wants half a penny, too.

It would make the sales tax about eight cents on the dollar.

One city commissioner said the increase would put Manhattan in the Who's Who of high sales taxes.

Sure, no one likes raising taxes, but students should be particularly angry about the thought of this tax increase.

The revenue from the increased taxes would go for capital improvements, including projects like a Manhattan water treatment plant and a new Riley County jail.

Most students will get very little use out of these projects because most of us are gone within four, five or six years.

These are worthy projects, but should be paid for through increased property tax and not increased sales tax.

Property owners are the ones who would get the most use out of these improvements.

How can students stop this then? Vote it down.

Students have a history of not voting in Manhattan elections.

That needs to change.

Sales tax will hurt you immediately.

There is no getting around it. The K-State Union was annexed along with the rest of campus this summer.

That means everything could cost you more, including photo copies and your Monterey chicken sandwiches. Even your $100 text books will cost more.

Register to vote, and then vote. It's radical, but it might save you money.

TOLES

Change the rules: bikes on sidewalks

First, let's rewrite the regulations, then the laws. Crusade time?

City, state, whatever it takes. A bike is not a motor vehicle.

Not that it should make any difference. Last summer, dump trucks and backhoes driving by Denison Hall at midmorning were barely noticed. Cherry-pickers, turf mowers, etc., move yearlong.

Until now, watching pedestrians blithely ignore 99.9 percent of the bikes rolling past, you'd never have guessed we were a problem either.

ROBERT KIRK

Now that the butt-headed 0.1 percent seems to have learned some manners — which could have been done without creating a whole new outlaw class — we suddenly get noticed like you wouldn't believe.

I still doubt most pedestrians really care; they're just curious if we'll be hauled off in irons. What happened?

First, this issue has been flogged for two years until some people are convinced it's a big deal. It's not.

Second, it's too easy to say this new crisis was caused by cop mentality. More on this in another column.

So where did this little nightmare originate?

Existing laws (thousands of them barely remembered) be damned.

This stink blew up just last spring with new campus regulations that would have slid through unnoticed if not for one heads-up rider.

Rules proposed, the stories stated there was a concern about bicyclists in 1992-93.

In case you've recycled those papers ... A hundred big issues got more ink. Bicycle concern was at best evenly pro and con, hardly a mandate except to sorts whose existence (or résumé) demands spawning ever more rules.

One favorite argument mentioned was that bicycles were "silent machines creeping up behind."

One favorite argument mentioned was that bicycles were "silent machines creeping up behind."

God, how we bicyclers love it. Creep up, flick on the afterburner — leaving pedestrians sprawled in the weeds clutching at the spreading stain in their collective crotch.

If a bike going by is the scariest thing that ever happens in your life, consider yourself blessed.

A real public hearing was finally held, with (as predictably reported) concerns expressed about bicyclists being threats to pedestrians.

If you missed the meeting, it hardly favored that line. Aside from a few stock complaints about almost being run down and killed by a bike, the best they could muster was a committee member who once assumed nobody was coming the opposite way up a one-way street.

I'm sure we're all glad she learned that first-grade lesson from a bicycle, instead of some wild-ass cowboy in a three quarter-ton dual rig.

So, one pedestrian actually got hit by a bike at speed. The only real statistics that have come out, for most of 1993, show (count 'em) ONE bike-pedestrian accident — which also involved a car. On the sidewalk?

The $25 sidewalk fine did start out almost equal to that for a stolen permit, so things could be worse.

They could be a lot better, too. Registration is a lost cause, but it's still on the books.

K-State's bike-parking mess is nowhere near any solution that justifies bolt cutters.

And at least, some K-State Police regard the sidewalk regulations as unenforceable mumbo-jumbo.

Read 'em yourself, and check out the signs. God alone may understand where or when you can legally ride a bike on this campus.

Enough already? More next time.

Can't write, but can get a college degree

As college education has become more accessible to more people, college graduates who write and speak poorly has become the norm.

Universities, including K-State, have in their efforts to reached down to all people.

Some who otherwise would not go to on to higher education, have forgotten to straighten their spines and pull people up with them.

One can visualize our country's universities as being constantly bent over, reaching to the ground rather than the skies.

Language is important because without a mastery of it, the effective communication necessary for jobs sought by college graduates is impossible.

Conversational English is one thing, but college-educated people who can't write or speak well at all reflects poorly on those who do and on college eduation in general.

However, it seems a little more acceptable if you're white.

Azalea Whitley was born in Mexico, grew up in Liberal, attended Fort Hays State University and became an American citizen two years ago.

She speaks English as well as most anyone, but on her K-State enrollment form, she claimed Spanish as her first language because she learned it first, not because she speaks it most or better. She also claimed to be Hispanic.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Upon registration, she was told that she had to take an English-proficiency test to prove her ability to speak the language.

Another woman, whose name is being withheld to protect her identity, teaches third grade in a school not far from where she was born and raised, in western Kansas. She's white, in her 20s, and graduated from K-State with both bachelor's and master's degrees.

She, however, never had to take an English-proficiency test. She also doesn't have the English skills to write a simple letter.

When a white person speaks English poorly, no one but grammar experts notices or corrects them. Instead, it's accepted.

Anyone who dares challenge a white adult's ability with English is called picky, argumentative and a know-it-all.

When immigrants or even tourists speak with so much as an accent, they become the objects of derision, scorn and discrimination.

Tests are used to screen them out so universities can "help" them. Untalented stand-up comics make cracks about them owning convenience stores.

Students snicker at an international professor's accent, even though the professor is so much smarter than they are.

Thanks to an unbelievably liberal admissions policy, students who can't identify the subject of a sentence are admitted and welcomed to K-State as long as they are native English speakers.

They enroll in English composition classes and are passed with little challenge from the Department of English — a department that has lowered its expectations to politically correct acceptance of effort. As long as you try, you pass.

Thank God driving tests are not so lax.

These same ignorant students think a Pakistani professor's accent is so damn funny.

They can't write a decent letter to tell their relatives they just got their bachelor's from K-State.

They're tomorrow's third-grade teachers who will set poor examples for children yet to be born.

They may be you.

Until universities, colleges and departments like K-State's decide that nothing less than mastery of all skills taught is acceptable, the trend of turning out ignorant students will continue.

This may mean using more standardized tests to screen out applicants, although they are no guarantee of intelligence.

With the SAT being watered down now, universities may have to find other means to screen out prospective students lacking in the skills necessary for true college education.

Nonetheless, it is imperative for them to do so. Universities must discriminate on the basis of knowledge, or else, their diploma's are worthless.

They must never, however, discriminate on the bases of race or national origin, even if their students do.

Scott Allen Miller is a junior in radio/television.

▶ VIOLENCE

Violence in U.S. not as bad as stated

Dear Editor,

Of course, I admit that violence is a major problem in present-day, America. As prevalent as it is, violence does not occur "all over our streets, in our homes and even in our classrooms," as Andrew Tomb painted vividly in his column.

Needless to say, I am not minimizing the problems of violence in this country.
God Forbid!

But for Tomb to say that violence is as widespread as Pepsi and Levi jeans is simply not true.

Andrew Tomb, open your eyes and see — America is not a war zone! Even in Los Angeles, people continue to breathe and live and go about their everyday lifestyle quite violence-free.

It is not like everybody is trying to shoot everybody in L.A. because pulling the trigger is a "cool" thing to do.

Thank God, America has not degenerated to that point yet.

I know the gun-blazing, knife-slashing movie violence is just too much for ordinary people like you and me to digest. But, Tomb, have you ever realized that pictures out of Hollywood are not real life?

Even though I am not a loud-mouthed politician, I can tell you without hesitation that in today's real-life America, from the smallest farming community "somewhere in the nowhere of the North Dakota plains" to the largest bustling city in the East, the majority of Americans lead relatively violence-free lives.

Sorry for being too harsh with these last words, my fellow K-Stater.

The next time you utter "violence is as American as apple pie,"

I think we should deport you to say, Bosnia or Rwanda, to see for yourself what the face of violence really looks like.

▶ PARKING

Good news on the parking issue

Dear Editor,

A few weeks ago, several students, faculty and staff of the Department of Plant Pathology petitioned the Department of Parking Services to change the restrictions regarding the small parking lot between Dykstra and Throckmorton halls. This lot had been restricted to 15-minute parking at all times.

We felt restricting the parking lot to 15 minutes only from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday was more reasonable.

This would provide daytime parking for visitors and post office patrons, while providing safe, close night-time parking for workers in Throckmorton.

On behalf of all those who signed the petition, I would like to thank Parking Services for responding positively to our request.

Because of their timely action, people working in Throckmorton late at night no longer have to choose between safer parking and receiving a parking ticket. Not all the news concerning parking on campus is negative.

▶ COLLEGIAN

Camp, Police make headlines — again

Dear Editor,

I was very disappointed to pick up the Collegian Friday only to see the bickering between B.C. Camp II and the K-State Police had once again stolen the headlines.

Even more disturbing was the omission of any mention of the debacle of USAir Flight 427.

In case no one noticed, the crash was the deadliest in the United States since 1987, and among the 132 killed were two K-State alumni.

You would think for a newspaper that publicizes the fact it has the sixth-largest circulation in Kansas and provides K-State students with the only information they get about the world outside of Manhattan, some things would be more important than another story about B.C. Camp II.

▶ RESPONSE

Language used in column offensive

Dear Editor,

Thursday's column, "Bike riders aren't victims" came across, to me anyway, as needlessly offensive and inflammatory. I was able to sit through the long-winded railing about "whiners" and "victimhood," but the crack about reconstituting slavery as well as the comparison between American and Chinese police forces seemed to be taking it a bit far.

I also found it very distressing that the columnist, in a somewhat confusing sentence, called a the officer a "plain ignorant smartass" and then attributed those words to the student.

His points had merit, but his offensive style detracted from the article.

Perhaps, if he would ixnay on the cute literary devices and name calling, his voice would come through more effectively.

▶ USAIR DISASTER

Alumni killed in airline crash

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

An airplane crash near Pittsburgh, Penn., killed 132 passengers and crew, including two K-State alumni, Friday night.

Dr. Richard Talbot, 1958 graduate of the veterinary medicine department, and Dan Ruzich, a 1985 marketing graduate and former K-State football player, were traveling from Chicago to Pittsburgh when USAir Boeing 737-300 crashed.

Talbot was a professor of veterinary medicine at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. He had also been a faculty member at Iowa State University and the University of Georgia.

Talbot formerly served as dean of veterinary medicine at Virginia State. He helped to create the College of Veterinary Medicine at Virginia State.

Michael Lorenz, K-State professor of veterinary medicine and former dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said he knew and liked Talbot on both a professional and personal level.

"He hired me for my first academic position at the University of Georgia," Lorenz said.

As Lorenz's career progressed, he said he often turned to Talbot for advice, he said.

"When I became dean here at K-State, I frequently consulted with him for his knowledge and expertise," Lorenz said.

Lorenz said he remembers Talbot as a very direct person.

"He was not afraid to tell you what was on his mind," he said.

Dr. Ludeman Eng, head of the biology and pathobiology department at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in Blacksburg, Va., said he remembers Talbot as a good listener.

"He would take the time to listen to you, but he wasn't the kind to butt his nose in other people's business. When asked, he would give you the benefit of his knowledge," Eng said.

Eng said the loss of Talbot as a faculty member will leave a big hole that can never be filled.

"He had such a wide background," he said. "He could do lots of things, and he could do them well. He had the experiences of a lifetime, and it'll be hard to find someone to replace him.

Sports fans may remember Ruzich as a linebacker on the K-State football team from 1980 to 1982. He was on the 1982 Independence Bowl team and finished his career as K-State's fourth-leading career tackler.

Jim Epps, senior associate director of intercollegiate aAthletics, said he remembers Ruzich as an overall good person.

"He was a wonderful young man, always upbeat, reliable and pleasant to be around," Epps said.

Ruzich was always responsible and always kept up with his commitments academically and otherwise, Epps said.

"He kept his nose clean, and he was trustworthy," he said. "If you were in a dark alley, you would want him by your side."

Epps said Ruzich was one of the great players in K-State's history. Epps said he was glad to have had the opportunity to know Ruzich.

▶ TOURETTE SYNDROME

Students explain disability during presentation

TRINA HOLMES
Collegian

Fifty students gathered in the fourth-floor lobby of Moore Hall on Sunday to hear two students speak about Tourette syndrome.

The presentation, which began at 7 p.m., included the viewing of a videotape produced by the Tourette Syndrome Association followed by a question-and-answer session.

The disorder, which is characterized by involuntary movements, or tics, is usually onset before the age of 21, according to the Tourette Syndrome Association.

Matthew Locke, senior in secondary education, and Dan Hayden, sophomore in pre-medicine and Moore Hall resident, candidly told audience members what living with the disorder is like.

Hayden said before he was put on medication, his tics were a lot worse.

"When I'm not on medication, I have to walk with a cane because I can't keep my balance," he said.

Hayden, who has a symptom called coprolalia that includes the involuntary utterance of obscenities, said he has the most problems with his vocal tics.

"The vocal tics are the ones that get me in trouble," Hayden said. "The girls on this floor know that I'll say about anything to them, and usually it has to deal either with sex or hooters."

Whistles, barks and repeated lines from Beavis and Butt-head were some of the tics Hayden exhibited during the presentation.

"I think of it like inside of your brain is a box with everything you're not supposed to do inside of it, and my key is open," he said.

Circulating the fact that he has TS is one goal Hayden said he hoped his speaking at the presentation would accomplish.

"I hope it will get out that I have Tourette's, so I won't have to walk by a really good-looking girl and pray that she won't Mace me."

Locke, who is going to begin student teaching at Clay Center, said he has felt accepted by those he has told about his having TS.

"When I told my students that I had Tourette syndrome, it was unbelievable how many compassionate faces I saw," he said. "The trend nowadays is to accept those with disabilities, and I'm very open about having it."

Hayden, however, said he is usually reluctant to tell people in his classes about having the disorder.

"In class sometimes people sit and stare at me all day," he said. "I don't usually tell people I have it because every time I try to tell people, they don't believe me."

Chiefs beat Joe's old mates

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Even Steve Young knows that Joe Montana is still the man.

Or as Young, who ran his predecessor out of the Bay Area, put it after he and the 49ers lost 24-17 Sunday to Montana and the Kansas City Chiefs, "In a lot of ways, it shows the master still had some more to teach the student."

In his first game against the team he led to four Super Bowl victories, Montana threw two touchdown passes and completed 19 of 31 for 203 yards.

On any other day, the star would have been Derrick Thomas.

As a defensive end last year, he had just eight sacks. As a linebacker on Sunday, he had three sacks, one for a safety that turned around the game. He had a fourth sack taken away when Young was called for grounding.

"One of these games has been waiting for me for a year," Thomas said.

"But it wasn't my day. Defensively, we understood that this was Joe's day. We just had to show up and play so we could make it Joe's day," he said.

After the sack, the Chiefs went on a 17-point run over a 10-minute span of the second and third quarters. David Whitmore, traded from the 49ers in the deal with Montana, got in the act, too, making a touchdown-saving tackle on Young with less than six minutes to go and forcing San Francisco to kick a field goal.

But overall, it was Montana's victory as the Chiefs moved to 2-0. He had a 1-yard touchdown pass to Joe Valerio and an 8-yarder to Keith Cash.

"For both teams, it's good to have this behind us," Montana said of the game, for which more than 500 media credentials were issued.

"It's special because there are a lot of old friends of mine on that team. There was no feeling of vindication."

Some of his teammates said they were awed.

"Believe in Joe?" said Valerio, a backup offensive lineman who, like Montana, grew up in Pennsylvania. "I've been believing in Joe since I was 10 years old."

Valerio was 10 years old in Montana's rookie season with the Niners in 1979.

Young was in high school in Greenwich, Conn., then. While he hardly looked like a high-school quarterback, he was not the master.

Young was 24 of 34 for 288 yards and a touchdown, but got little help. He was sacked four times, threw two interceptions and fumbled once. Another fumble, by San Francisco's John Taylor with 2:23 left, sealed the 49ers' fate as they dropped to 1-1.

"If it was Joe against Steve, then we felt it was the best supporting cast that would win," said Jerry Rice, who was held to five catches for 78 yards, six days after catching three touchdown passes to set an NFL record with 127 career touchdowns.

The game turned around with 2:12 left in the first half with San Francisco leading 14-7, and it turned on two mistakes by the offensive line.

On a first down from his own 22, Ricky Watters ran for 9 yards, but the play was called back for holding on center Bart Oates. Then, tight end Brent Jones was penalized for illegal motion, moving the ball back to the 7.

Young dropped back to pass from the end zone, and Thomas burst around Boatswain and flattened Young for a safety. That made it 14-9.

It stayed that way when San Francisco's Doug Brien missed a 43-yard field goal just before halftime.

Victory means more than the personal duel

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A sweaty, grimy Joe Montana refused to take the sheet of paper his boss handed him.

"No, thanks," Montana said Sunday as team president Carl Peterson offered the stat sheet from Kansas City's 24-17 victory over San Francisco in the biggest game in Arrowhead Stadium history.

"We won," Montana said. "That's all that counts."

Statistically, the man who took Montana's San Francisco job and set in motion the events that led him to Kansas City 16 months ago came out on top. Operating behind an injury-weakened offensive line, Steve Young completed 24 of 34 passes for 288 yards and a touchdown.

Montana was 19-for-31 for 203 yards and two touchdowns and a two-point conversion toss, but Young was sacked four times, three times by Derrick Thomas, while Montana was sacked only once. Young was intercepted twice, Montana not at all.

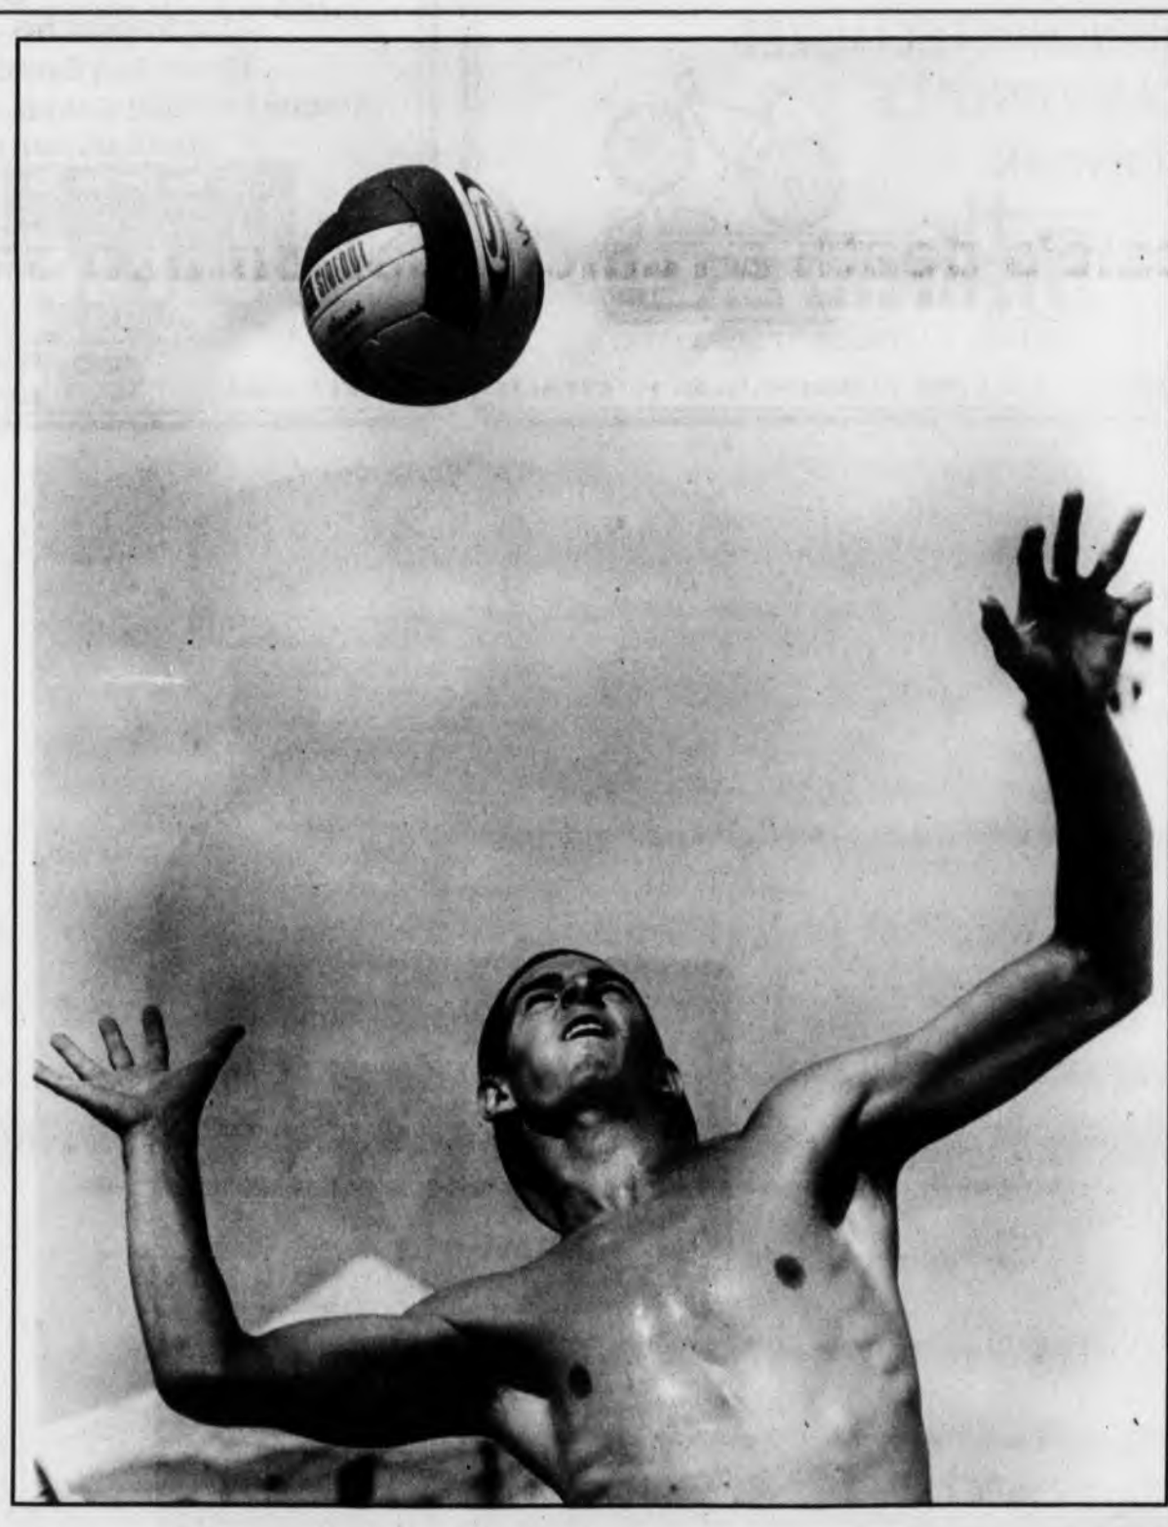
Montana got to grin and say it was only another game. Young said it was bitter loss.

"In a lot of ways, I guess it shows the master had some more to teach the student," Young said.

Montana spent the week insisting it was just another game, but he didn't fool his teammates.

"Joe didn't say anything, but we could sense this was special for him in a special way," said Willie Davis, who has taken Jerry Rice's place as Montana's favorite receiver.

Two of Montana's first three passes were dropped.



"Everybody was waiting for this game. Everybody was hyped up for the first half, and then we tried to just calm down a little bit in the second half," Davis said.

"There are a lot of guys in that locker room who had a hand in this victory," Montana said. "I was nervous before the game, but then I'm always nervous before any game. I feel if you're not nervous about your performance, you really don't care about it.

"I don't want to let down those guys."

Admittedly not the best of friends, Montana and Young exchanged pleasantries before and after the game.

"We just said hello and good luck," Montana said.

K-State moves to 6-1

The Wildcats took three of four matches at the Sizzler Showcase Tournament at Oregon State. With the win over Eastern Washington Saturday, K-State is within one victory of equalling its win total from all of last year.

The volleyball team has moved within one win of equaling its total number of wins one year ago.

The Wildcats went 3-1 at the Sizzler Showcase Tournament at Oregon State University this weekend in Corvallis, Ore., bringing their overall record to 6-1 on the season.

The Cats went 7-25 last year.

The first test for K-State was Cal-State Fullerton, who entered the game with an 0-4 record Friday.

The Cats jumped on Cal-State from the opening serve as they won the first two games, 15-4, 15-9.

Cal-State made a bid for a comeback after winning the third game, 15-10. However, the Cats shut the door with a 15-8 win in the fourth.

Yolanda Young led the Cats in kills with 12, and Kate DeClerk had three solo blocks. Chi Dau and Devon Ryning combined for 38 assists.

After struggling with their serves in play at the KSU Invitational last weekend, the Cats recorded only four service errors in the match.

In the late game Friday, the hometown Oregon State Beavers welcomed K-State, and they weren't very hospitable as they dominated the Cats, 15-4, 15-7, 15-1.

The Cats contributed to the outcome by recording 15 service errors and only 21 kills for a total of 19 errors and a .024 kill percentage.

Saturday morning, the Cats rebounded as they destroyed Portland, 15-9, 15-12, 15-11.

Young led in kills again with 11 spikes, and Dau scorched four service aces, while Ryning recorded 33 assists.

To finish off the tournament, the Cats defeated Eastern Washington in a five-game marathon.

After winning the first game, 15-13, the Cats traded off games with Eastern Washington until the Cats won a nail-biter in the fifth.

The final scores were 15-13, 5-15, 15-5, 8-15 and 15-12.

Young provided 22 kills, while Jill Dugan led in digs with 14. Ryning had 37 assists, three service aces and two solo blocks.

K-State's next game will be against the University of Missouri-Kansas City at 2 p.m., Sunday in Ahearn Field House.

Baseball season ended with the start of football

The baseball season is ruined, and who really cares?

While player representative/procrastinator Donald Fehr and owner representative/stone wall Richard Ravitch report no progress, every day the newspapers, radio and television stations are filled with football.

Football is in the conversations of the fans — not baseball.

Time for a short quiz.

How many games have been missed because of the strike?

How much money have the owners and players lost? (Not to mention the people who have real jobs at the stadiums.)

Who are the leaders in the six division races?

Who is leading the league in batting average? Runs batted in? Earned run average?

Most sports fans can't answer any of these questions.

This tells me two things.

First, baseball has been forgotten. Second, no one really paid attention while one of the greatest seasons in recent memory was being played.

The nation's pastime is exactly that — past its time. No one, besides the people who were alive in the 1950s and got to see players who really cared, really devotes any attention to the game.

WESS HUDELSON

The last baseball game I attended was in July.The focus of my attention and the people around me was how expensive it was going to be to slam beers and eat hot dogs.

Any hope to save this season died when the players emptied their lockers.

It's pointless to resume the season. Would you like to whip John Kruk into shape twice in the same year?

Baseball has no hope of competing with football after the way the first two weeks of the NFL have gone.

Dan Marino returned from a ruptured Achilles tendon to throw for 473 yards. Rookie Marshall Faulk secured the future by running for 143 yards and three touchdowns.

Steve Young and Joe Montana clashed in front of a crowd at Arrowhead Stadium that would've made the hair stand up on Dana Altman's back.

Every season, football grips the country. It inspires grown men to paint their entire bodies and cook barbecue feasts in the parking lots just to give food away to people they don't even know.

Excitement on this level is never created during baseball.

Kauffman Stadium is the perfect example of how boring a baseball game has become.

Beyond the left-field fence, in order to boost fan attendance, the Royals have installed a permanent carnival equipped with cardboard cutouts of your favorite players, a batting cage (not different from most batting cages) and even a radar gun just to tell fans how weak their arms really are.

However, these types of things are needed for sports that start in April and end in October, especially when 90 percent of the teams have no hope of moving into the playoffs shortly after the All-Star break.

Football fans create their own promotions.

Perhaps it's unfair to criticize baseball from the outside, but the popularity of the sport has been declining for years because of the skyrocketing salaries, and nothing has been done to prevent it.

The players and owners are both to blame for letting the problem get this big.

Baseball players and owners can walk out if they want to just as long the door doesn't hit their butts on the way out.

Program offers creative outlet

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Students have a chance to share their poetic side with the campus.

The Union Program Council Arts Committee is sponsoring the first in a series of poetry readings beginning at 9 tonight in the Union Art Gallery.

Sharon Willits, program adviser, said the readings are open to anyone who wants to come.

"All ages are welcome," Willits said.

Those wishing to participate in the readings may sign up in the UPC office or come to the gallery at the scheduled time.

"It's a very flexible program," she said. "Those who are signed up read first, but we'll try to fit everybody in."

Willits said there is no cost to participate, and it is not necessary to submit any works. In fact, the poem doesn't even have to be an original.

"We have mostly original works, but if someone wants to come and read their favorite poem, they can do that," she said.

"Everyone just shows up that night and reads."

Chrissy Hathaway, arts committee chairperson, said the readings provide a good artistic outlet for many people.

"We usually get a good turnout," Hathaway said. "A lot of people come because they can either participate or just observe."

Willits said the committee is trying to broaden the scope of the readings.

"We're looking into bringing in some well-known poets," she said. "Maybe not this year, but sometime in the future.

The readings are scheduled on the first Monday of every month, except on holidays. Refreshments will be served.

POETRY READING

Union Program Council's series of poetry readings begins at 9 tonight in the Union Art Gallery. The readings will be on the first Monday of each month.

Cassie's death a rumor; 'poison pen' writes on

Write to Cassandra: 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Dear Cassandra,

What have you done with the real Cassandra Duveaux?

The response to the girl who wanted to diplomatically dump her boyfriend was honest, well thought out and dignified.

This could mean only one thing — Cassandra died, and rather than admit her passing to everyone on campus, you've hired someone else to take over her poison pen.

Only now the pen spews forth reason and understanding. Oh, Cassie, wherefore art thou, Cassie? It is the Collegian, and Cassie is now a sap!

Signed,
XXXOOOXXX

Dear XXXOOXX,

My response to the gal that wanted to diplomatically dump her boyfriend was honest and dignified because the letter I received was honest and dignified.

Nevertheless, I guarantee the poisoned pen of Madame Cassie lives on. Obviously, you've never had enough of a social life to understand how difficult it is to break ties with someone who's got the hots for you.

Maybe you slipped getting out of your shower this morning, bumped your head, lost your already nonexistent mind and confused me with someone else.

Or maybe aliens abducted you. Or quite possibly, you've always been stupid.

Damn it, there I go being all understanding again.

I'd better quit before I really start getting sappy.

Position, not size, key to Aikido moves

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

Do you think you could defend yourself against a 300-pound attacker? Well, you can, and the K-State Aikido Club can show you how.

Members of the club were on hand at the Union Program Council Activities Carnival Sunday evening to encourage membership and demonstrations.

The club's faculty adviser, Greg Matthews, said there are benefits of learning the Japanese martial art.

"Aikido is very different from other martial arts because we're not working in a competitive mode," he said.

"It's a very specialized form of self-defense where you don't have to use physical strength — it's an art of position, so men and women of various sizes can accomplish this without having to do a lot of work."

As Matthews demonstrated, even getting out of a headlock takes very little effort. If you were ever in this situation, simply grabbing the attacker by the knuckles and pulling could have you free in seconds.

"As you can see, just by changing your relative position to somebody, you can cause them to casually fall to the ground without any real strength being used," Matthews said.

"If you had a 90-pound woman and a 200-pound man, she could easily move that person's balance by just changing her relative position to that person."

While knowing how to defend yourself against an attacker is one benefit of Aikido, Matthews said there are other advantages as well.

"You gain so much confidence in your abilities by learning this," he said. "You don't have to have any special athletic capabilities to be successful with Aikido. Everything is more or less common-sense movement."

The Aikido Club has been in existence at K-State for five years, and Matthews said the group usually has 30-35 members. He said one of the club's primary goals for this year is to attract and keep female members in the organization.

"There seems to be a difficulty in keeping women in clubs like this, and I'm not sure why," he said. "With the recent attacks on women here at K-State that have been in the news lately, I would strongly encourage women to seriously consider the benefits of Aikido."

The K-State Aikido Club will present a seminar Thursday from 7-8:30 p.m. in Union 206. For more information, call 537-1317.

Mask dance

I Gusti Ngurah Kertayuda performs the Taro Topeng Pajegan (mask dance) during Indonesian Cultural Night '94 Saturday. The dance is usually performed in traditional ceremonies in Bali. The event was the first of its kind at K-State and was organized by the 19 students in the K-State Indonesian Student Association. The program showcased Indonesian culture, including music, clothing and food. Short skits were performed by Indonesian students, and music was provided by a group from Chicago.

Everyone to feel tax bite

"If it goes up a penny, we didn't feel we could charge a nickel, so we just add the tax to the sale," Sills said. "That way, students pay the exact amount. This way is a fairer way to treat our customers."

It's not just students who will feel the effects of these tax increases, Sills said.

"The impact will be felt when we buy stuff, too," Sills said. "Everything we buy has taxes. We're the retail consumers, so it will increase our prices too."

Cooper said the county tax will go toward funding a new jail, and the city tax will provide funds for economic development.

"We are trying to diversify our employment doses because we depend on K-State and Fort Riley so much," Cooper said. "The possibilities of Fort Riley closing or being down-sized would be a big economic setback."

Voters will be able to vote on the city and county-tax increases during the November election.

For position description and application, come to the Department of Human Resources Office, City Hall, 1101 Poyntz, Manhattan, Kansas.

Larger testing sites safer for police awareness about the risks of drinking and driving, he said.

"If we don't find anyone who has been drinking, we have still been successful," Turner said.

Police used a mobile breath alcohol testing unit at the checkpoint.

"This allows us to test drivers without having to take them to a local jail facility," Turner said.

Three teams of three officers each spent an average of eight to 15 seconds checking vehicles for signs of open containers or drunken drivers.

Drivers suspected of driving drunk were asked to step to the side of the road for a sobriety test.

Drivers who failed the test were arrested.

Capt. Steven French of the RCPD said the police do everything possible to ensure the safety of the officers and drivers.

"We are using a larger testing site, more officers and more equipment than we normally would because of the 55-speed zone," French said. "It is more dangerous."

The testing areas can be dangerous because the officers are dealing with impaired drivers, Turner said.

"No matter how many safety precautions we have, we still have occasions when we have problems."

Turner was working at a checkpoint in Pittsburg, Kan., when an intoxicated driver came through the check lane at 80 mph and rolled the vehicle four times.

"Cones were flying everywhere, and officers were running for their lives," Turner said.

"You have to assume that a driver with a .04 alcohol level is going to be impaired, and you can't predict how they will react when they come in the lane."

A driver with a blood alcohol concentration of .08 is considered intoxicated in Kansas.

"We teach kids not to play in the street, but we are basically doing the same thing," Turner said. "The hazards are the same."

Turner has worked with the highway patrol alcohol unit for two years. He has been a trooper for 21 years, and has worked many traffic accidents.

"When you have an accident," Turner said, "as a trooper or any police officer, you see things — serious injuries."

Turner said he believes what he is doing is worthwhile.

"I firmly believe I am saving lives," he said.

"We are not here to harass drivers," he said. "We are here to remove drunken drivers from the road, and make Kansas highways a safer place."

Brent Smith, a second-year K-State-Salina student, and his friend Shane E. Rittmiller, also a K-State-Salina student, were headed home after an evening in Aggieville when they encountered the checkpoint.

Rittmiller was detained by a trooper, who arrested him for driving under the influence.

"I tried to tell him to let me drive," Smith said. "I only had two beers. I was OK to drive."

Despite his friend's arrest, Smith said he thought the checkpoints were a good idea.

"I think it is a good thing to keep the highways safer," Smith said, "but it was not a good thing for him."

Choices for sexual-assault victims

who are dressed in full uniform and make the rounds until all the housing units are secured.

Stone said there has been a 20-percent decrease in crime on campus, but the number of sexual assaults reported on campus has remained stable.

Out of 1,443 crimes in 1993, four were rape, and 19 were other sex offenses.

Stone said the officers in the campus police department recognize the problem and try to offer as many choices to the survivor as possible.

"We offer the information to the victim up front. I encourage people to report rape because it's the only way we have an accurate pattern of crime development," Stone said.

"If we have an inaccurate picture of the crime activities on campus, we may not be making the best use of our resources."

Stone said he cautions the comparison of the University of Oklahoma to the other universities in the Big Eight Conference.

"I think we compare favorably, but you need to look at the different jurisdictions, people and location of each university," he said. "One is not safer than the other because of the number of crimes."

Stone said at the university, police have full control over handling the crime problems.

"If the crime involves a student on our campus, then it's our case," he said. "When a victim reports a rape, we will refer them to the department that has the jurisdiction, and if the crime happened on campus, then it's us."

Stone said the campus police can't force the victim to press charges. The victim has full authority to decide how and when to proceed after the crime.

"If they choose to go through our student-disciplinary system, we encourage them to take the medical/legal exam," he said.

The staff at the local emergency room performs a set of exams and takes samples. The victim can choose whether to use the test results in the prosecution.

Stone said campus police action and the criminal prosecution don't work against each other.

"We don't want to place the victim in double jeopardy. The rights of the accused are protected under law, so we can't expel the student until the courts make a decision," he said.

Stone said the university helps the student deal with the rape through changes in housing, class scheduling or university transfer.

"Some of the survivors don't want to be in the same room where the attacks occurred, so we move them to another living unit."

If the rapist and victim attend the same college, the university does what it can to adjust the victim's schedule to minimize the possibility for a chance encounter.

Edwards Hall's future as residence hall uncertain

Edwards Hall, home to graduate and non-traditional students, will possibly be converted to office space after the 1995 school year.

CHARITY WOODSON
Collegian

Graduate and non-traditional students wanting to live in Edwards Hall next year may have to look elsewhere for a place to call home.

Edwards Hall is being considered for possible takeover and conversion into office space by the University.

"It is highly probable that Edwards Hall will end its service as a residence hall when we complete this school year in May 1995," Edwards Hall director Valerie Averill said in a letter to the residents of Edwards.

Any takeover of a Housing and Dining Services building would have to be approved by the Kansas Board of Regents, Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement said.

The decision will not be made final until October when the board will discuss the issue, Krause said.

A demand for office space is the main reason for the possible takeover, he said.

"There is a tremendous crunch on campus for office space. We are looking at various departments and administrative offices that aren't necessarily central to campus that we can move," he said.

Edwards Hall, as described by housing pamphlets in the University archives, has traditionally been a residence hall for graduate and upper-class students whose academic priorities require intensive study.

Because of its setup, Edwards would be ideal for office space, Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement, said.

"Part of the advantage of looking at Edwards for potential faculty offices is there would be minimal renovation," Bosco said.

Krause agreed that Edwards has an advantage because it is an isolated segment of the housing department.

"Edwards was built by private money

Plane plows into White House lawn

STEFFANY CARREL

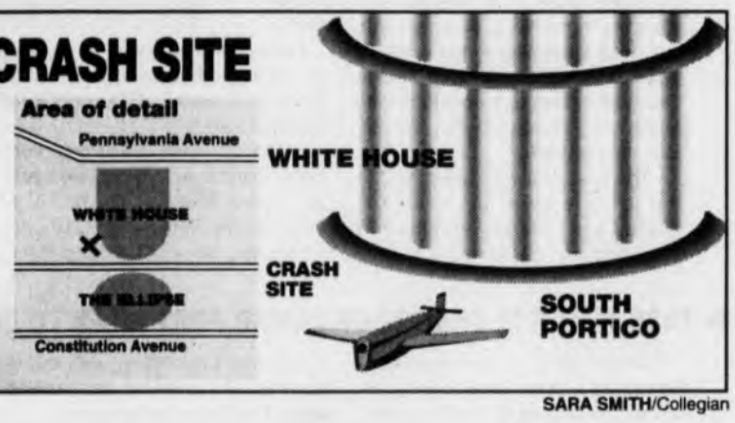
WASHINGTON, D.C. — The nation's capital awoke to some startling news Monday. Shortly after 2 a.m., a single-engine Cessna airplane pierced the restricted air zone around the White House and crashed onto the South Lawn.

Sources said the red-and-white two-seater plane had been flying low enough to avoid radar detection by Washington National Airport. Apparently, the plane drifted in with the engine turned off before it crashed into a 160-year-old magnolia tree.

The plane somersaulted and came to a rest, sending wreckage just inches from the Clintons' sleeping quarters in the White House.



The pilot, who was identified by the Secret Service as Frank Corder, was killed in the crash. Corder, 38, worked as a self-employed freight truck driver and had a student pilot license.

Student tells of complaint against cop

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Following publication of a student's complaint about his treatment by a police officer, another student has come forward with a previous complaint against the same officer.

DeAnn Legill, senior in elementary education, filed a formal complaint with K-State police in April, regarding a confrontation with Officer Bob Fenton on April 14, 1994.

Legill said Fenton treated her in an argumentative and unprofessional manner when she went to complain about her car being towed that evening.

She said in the complaint that she had mistaken an obscurely marked 24-hour reserved parking stall for a 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. reserved stall.

When Legill and a friend went to the police station, she said Fenton was standing nearby while she complained about the stall being poorly labeled and asked for the phone number to the wrecking service.

As she was leaving the station, Legill said Fenton followed her out and began to verbally harass her.

"He proceeded to ask me, 'Well, you are a college student. Can't you read?'" she said in the report.

Legill said he asked her the same question approximately three times and said if she did not change her attitude, he would haul her off to jail and put her in the drunk bin.

"I asked him, 'Why? Am I drunk?'" she said.

Legill said she then tried to walk away to avoid a confrontation, but Fenton would not let her leave.

"He said, 'If I did not stop he would charge me for, as I recall, obstructing a police officer,'" she said in the report.

Legill said she stood listening to the officer's lecture with her head bowed because she felt intimidated by Fenton, who she said stood less than a foot away from her.

"He ended his lecture with the words, 'He suggests the next time I drive to campus, I bring a friend to read the signs for me,'" she reported.

Legill wrote in her complaint that she felt Fenton's conduct in this case should be questioned.

She said she thought Fenton belittled her because she was a female student.

"I feel the officer involved treated me with an obviously sarcastic tone, insulted my intelligence and appeared to be using his police uniform as a weapon to demoralize me and get the last word in," she said in the complaint.

When Legill filed her formal complaint, she said she was told that the officer had reprimanded her because she used foul, abusive language.

Legill said she was angry when she went to the station, but that she had not used any profanities.

"The only swear words I used was when I asked a parking attendant, 'Where

NU urges victims to report crimes

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

This is the fifth in a seven-part series on the sexual assault policies at Big Eight schools.

The University of Nebraska at Lincoln is home to a program designed to help victims cope with the consequences of crime and deal with a complex judicial system.

The Victim Services Program was started in August 1993 and is designed to help the more than 27,000 students, staff and faculty members at Nebraska.

sexual VIOLENCE policy

Since the program began, they have counseled over 100 victims, Lisa Cauble, the programs coordinator, said.

"I don't think our campus is any different than any other," she said, "but we have a problem with students not reporting crimes, especially sexual assaults."

She said fewer reported crimes makes it look as if the campus is hiding the fact that sexual assaults do occur.

However, she said victims just don't want to report sexual assaults.

In 1993, according to figures provided by the Nebraska campus police department, there were a total of five sexual assaults at the university.

Because people were reluctant to report some crimes, Ken Cauble, the Nebraska campus chief of police, formed Victim Services to make reporting and dealing with a crime much easier.

Once a crime, such as acquaintance rape, is reported to officials, Victim Services is brought in to talk to the victim and explain the options available.

They provide the information to prosecute within the university at the judicial affairs office, in the criminal court system through the county attorney or both if they desire.

Ken Cauble said the campus judicial affairs office is very aggressive when it comes to taking action against the parties responsible.

Students found guilty of sexual assault could face suspension or expulsion for life from the university.

Most victims of sexual assaults on campus know the suspect.

He said the last reported stranger rape at the university was 12 years ago.

The fact that the victim usually knows the suspect makes it hard to see that justice is served, he said.

"Sometimes, because it was a friend, they don't want any public action taken," he said.

Following the crime, Victim Services also helps in filling out any paperwork, providing personal support and referring victims to the necessary agencies.

Lisa Cauble said the response over the past year has been favorable.

There are other programs at Nebraska designed to help.

There is an escort service on campus, a women's center that offers counseling and a survivors' support group and a rape/spouse abuse crisis center. The psychology department offers counseling as well.

"I don't think our campus is any different than any other, but we have a problem with students not reporting crimes, especially sexual assaults."

▶ FIRE AT THE MERCURY GIVES NEW LIFE TO OLD PHRASE 'HOT OFF THE PRESSES'

An unknown person or people using motor oil and a stack of paper attempted to set fire to the Manhattan Mercury Saturday night.

"Someone stacked up a few bundles of what we call pre-printed inserts, poured the oil on it and lighted it," Edward Seaton, editor-in-chief of the Manhattan Mercury, said.

The fire was started in the distribution room while several reporters were in the building working, Seaton said.

A press operator at the Mercury discovered the fire and extinguished it.

The fire was extinguished before the Riley County Fire Department arrived at the scene, Seaton said.

There was minor damage to the distribution room, Seaton said.

The Riley County Police Department was unable to give any information on the investigation.

The Manhattan Mercury is going to step up security by locking the doors at night, Seaton said.

▶ WOMAN ARRESTED UNDER SUSPICION OF KILLING ALLEGEDLY ABUSIVE BOYFRIEND

At 7:01 p.m. Sunday night, Alexandria Yancy called the Riley County Police Department and said she was being abused by her boyfriend, Melvin Rhodeman.

The RCPD reported to 1026 Garden Way, where the couple lived.

Rhodeman was pronounced deceased. Yancy was arrested for second degree murder and confined of $50,000 bond. She was transported to Geary County Jail.

"The case is still under investigation, and I am unable to discuss specific aspects of the case," Sargent Larry Freeby said.

"What I can say is there is one subject deceased and one subject in jail."

▶ CARNIVAL WORKER'S BODY FOUND LYING BETWEEN VEHICLES AT STATE FAIR

HUTCHINSON (AP) — The body of a 30-year-old carnival worker was found over the weekend on the grounds of the Kansas State Fair.

The body of Randy Frazier, of El Dorado, Ark., was found lying between vehicles in the carnival area, said Sgt. Alan Stoecklein of the Kansas Highway Patrol.

He was discovered by another carnival worker about 8:25 a.m. Sunday, the patrol said.

The cause of death was unclear, but there were no signs of foul play, Stoecklein said. An autopsy was scheduled for Monday.

Frazier worked for an independent carnival ride that contracts with Royal American Shows, the primary carnival company at the fair, Stoecklein said.

▶ PROFESSOR ACCUSED OF SEXUAL HARASSMENT AWAITS REGENTS' DECISION

LAWRENCE (AP) — A former University of Kansas professor who was dismissed after allegations that he sexually harassed a student said he will sue the school if he does not get his job back.

For the past 13 months, the Kansas Board of Regents has contemplated a finding that Emil Tonkovich should be fired for sexually harassing a student.

Regents plan to decide the case on Thursday in Topeka.

If regents conclude he was unjustly ousted, he could rejoin the faculty. But if the board rules otherwise, Tonkovich said his lawyers at Landmark Legal Foundation in Kansas City will carry the fight to federal court.

Allegations against Tonkovich surfaced in 1991.

Former Chancellor Gene Budig proposed in 1992 that Tonkovich be fired.

A faculty committee voted for dismissal in 1993, based on the conclusion that one of Tonkovich's students performed oral sex on him and that Tonkovich's behavior with other students was unethical.

He has not taught at the University since 1991, and he was removed from the payroll in August 1993.

In the appeal to regents, Tonkovich argued he didn't sexually harass anyone and that the University's dismissal process violated his due-process rights.

Tonkovich asserted that the university had no policy forbidding romantic or sexual relations between students and faculty during the 10 years he taught at the University.

He admitted to dating women in his classes.

"How can you prosecute someone for something not regulated?"

▶ 14-YEAR-OLD 1 OF 3 CHARGED WITH 1ST-DEGREE MURDER, ARMED ROBBERY

OLATHE (AP) — A 14-year-old Parsons boy who is accused with two other teen-agers in the shooting death of a liquor store owner is the youngest person to be charged with murder in Johnson County, the district attorney said.

The boy, who was being held in the juvenile detention center in Olathe, was charged Saturday with first-degree murder and armed robbery in the slaying of Gene Martin.

Prosecutors will likely try to have the youth tried as an adult, Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison said.

Also charged Saturday with felony murder and aggravated robbery were Sheldon Nash, 18, of Parsons, and Robert Aikins, 18.

Martin, 56, of Overland Park, was shot and killed Wednesday night at his liquor store, just three blocks from the Olathe police station.

Martin was shot when he refused to hand over money to the boy, police said. Martin's mother, Marge Martin was killed at the age of 77 at the same store in January 1989. A transient was sentenced to life in prison for that slaying.

▶ TASK FORCE IN CHARGE OF SAVING FORT RILEY TO DISPEL POPULAR MYTHS

TOPEKA (AP) — The executive director of a task force formed to prevent the closing of Fort Riley told legislators today that officials need to attack some myths about the Army post.

One of those myths is that Fort Riley, near Junction City and Manhattan, is basically an old Indian post and is too small to conduct maneuvers, said Fred Hepler, who heads the Governor's Task Force in Support of Fort Riley.

Hepler is Fort Riley's former garrison commander and served as the First Infantry Division's chief of staff when it shipped out to the Persian Gulf War in 1991.

He said Fort Riley, with more than 100,000 acres, is the second largest installation in the nation.

The Department of Defense is deciding which of several military installations should be closed in the next two to three years.

Many Kansans fear that Fort Riley, which has been the home of the First Infantry Division since the mid-1950s, could be one of them.

"We're playing for some big marbles right now," Hepler told the Joint Committee on Economic Development. "This is a larger issue than just a Geary-Riley county issue we're dealing with."

Fort Riley is the state's 13th largest city and the state's second largest employer, the largest being the state itself. It has 18,110 military and civilian employees.

Hepler said Fort Riley is a maneuver post, and it is ranked eighth among 13 other such posts.

"The Army will be very reluctant to walk away from a maneuver installation," Hepler said.

"It's almost impossible to acquire another," he said.

Hepler acknowledged that politics will play a role in the decision to close any base.

"Every base is protected by someone," he said. "Politicians get involved at all levels."

Center volunteers help victims of violent crime

STACEY HAGER
Collegian

Imagine having to answer the phone within one ring, having the car odometer checked every evening, or constantly fearing for one's life.

Domestic violence is just that, but there are more places to turn for help now.

In recent years, there has been an increase in public awareness of incidents of domestic violence, Kathy Ryan-Harshbarger, volunteer coordinator for the Crisis Center Inc., said.

With that awareness, more K-State students are becoming aware of real-life situations as Crisis Center volunteers.

The Crisis Center Inc., established in 1979, provides a safe haven for victims of domestic violence, rape or sexual abuse. The center is sponsored by federal and local funds, and donations. No state monies fund the center because Kansas is one of only seven states that do not provide aid for centers such as the Crisis Center, Ryan-Harshbarger said.

The Crisis Center operates with 10 full-time and five part-time staff members, and about 110 volunteers. Many of those volunteers are K-State students, with 20 to 30 percent of the volunteers being men, Ryan-Harshbarger said.

Becoming a volunteer includes 16-20 hours of group training and an interview.

Volunteers' responsibilities include help in the main office, children's activities and on-call duty. On-call work involves volunteers talking to individuals who call the Crisis Center hotline after hours. Most of the volunteers do on-call work, Ryan-Harshbarger said.

Lee Wilbur, senior in nutrition science and pre-medicine, began volunteering in May and now works 15-24 hours a week.

Wilbur's volunteer work mostly includes on-call duty, but he also helps with children's activities. On a busy night, Wilbur said, he receives about four calls, with each call averaging about 30 minutes.

Wilbur said he feels as a man, he has an advantage in telling women that not all men are like their abuser, but at the same time he also feels this is his greatest disadvantage.

"It is difficult sometimes to be a man and talk to the women because they cast you into the category that all men are the same way as their abuser," Wilbur said.

Of the calls he has received, only one woman was uncomfortable in speaking to a man, he said.

Wilbur said the greatest reward as a volunteer is helping someone who believes she's in a no-win situation.

"It's amazing how much love and gratitude these women can have when someone like me can help them," Wilbur said.

It's the greatest feeling when a women who has been in a violent situation for years comes into the shelter, Wilbur said.

President absent from White House at time of crash

Federico Pena inspected the crash site and said there was no structural damage to the mansion. However, a window was broken by the flying debris.

The President and First Lady were not in the White House at the time of the crash. Due to ongoing renovation to the White House air-conditioning system, the Clintons' had been sleeping at the Blair House, the presidential guest residence located across Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House.

One official said 14 seconds went by between the time the plane was first noticed and the crash. White House security forces, who are reported to be equipped with shoulder-fired Stinger missiles, apparently did not fire on the plane.

When the crash occurred, Bob White, a businessman visiting Washington from Wilson, N.C., was staying in the J.W. Marriott presidential suite one block from the South Lawn.

White said he believes he heard the crash.

"My wife and I were out on the terrace with another couple right before 2 (a.m.)," White said. "I heard this sound, and I thought it sounded very peculiar."

White said he thought the sound had been an automobile crash.

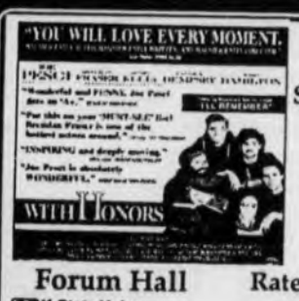
"I knew something big was happening, and after that, I heard a helicopter and saw its spotlight," he said. "I thought they were looking for someone."

"It was very strange. It was an eerie feeling."

Sources said the president would go ahead with his regular schedule, which included an afternoon ceremony on the South Lawn.

A member of the White House staff said she saw the plane wreckage Monday morning.

"It was really weird," she said. "There were all these lawn chairs set up and the plane crashed, and it didn't even touch them. It just wiped out that tree."



Corder's relatives say it was not politics that motivated him, but a determination to kill himself. His marriage had just fallen apart, his father had died of cancer, and he had problems with drugs and alcohol.

"He did this to destroy himself," an aunt, Edith Dishman, said.

"Frank has never said anything against this country or anyone else. It was the drugs. That's the only problem that I know of that Frank had. It was just like the devil will get a hold of you and won't let go."

TCI subscribers lose shows in Fox switch

The switch between WDAF and KSHB has left Manhattan and the rest of the KSHB subscribers without true Fox programming.

As now has become evident, the new Fox affiliate is long on news and short on the programming that led most people to watch the station in the first place.

Some of those programs were "Animaniacs," "The X Files," "Star Trek" and "Deep Space 9."

The Fox station out of Wichita has all the same programming that KSHB had. The shows are just at different times.

The catch is that WDAF has better technical quality, Ron Frazier, general manager of Manhattan TCI of Kansas, said.

WDAF was purchased with the intent of making it a Fox affiliate.

If Fox can get stations on VHF, then they can reach the people who don't get cable, which is carried on UHF.

The problem is that new Fox affiliates can't get some of the Fox programming for a year.

So to make Fox programming accessible to more people, they are taking away the same programming that would appeal to a large audience.

News is fine, but there are two news stations already. If people want to watch talk shows, they can watch the three major networks.

Fox programming is original and interesting.

Manhattan does not have a true Fox station anymore.

If you are interested in bringing back these shows, call TCI of Kansas and Ron Frazier and tell them that you want your shows.

The number is 776-9239.

"The X Files" are waiting.

Proposed view of the K-State Union from Seaton Court

Union expansion needs lots of ideas

Whether you like it or not, a majority of students last year voted in favor of Union Enhancement and, therefore, the K-State Union will be undergoing a massive face lift over the next couple of years.

For some of you, that is terribly bad news because you might have voted against the $25 fee increase. I say let bygones be bygones, and I would like to make a pitch to any student who uses the Union to get involved in the process of designing the features of the new and improved K-State Union. The bottom line is you're paying for it, so give your ideas.

AARON OTTO

We, as students at K-State during the 1994-95 academic year, have a historic opportunity to give our suggestions in the designing of the new enhanced Union, which will be under construction from May 1996 until January 1998. In other words, our ideas could have a lasting effect on the building for decades.

Enhancement of the Union will include replacing a lot of old and outdated infrastructure, changing student services and adding additional space to the north toward Seaton Hall, to make a new Union plaza.

During the summer, a three-level committee structure was established to oversee the planning of Union enhancement.

■ First, there are several sub-planning committees that are broken up by topics that will be collecting a majority of the input. Each of the sub-planning committees will be co-chaired by students.

The goal is to have student majorities on as many of these committees as possible. Some of the committees include: technology, infrastructure, activity center, food service, bookstore, vending services, Union plaza, recreation, meeting room space and lease shops.

■ The chairs of each of these committees will then serve on a planning committee. This committee will help the Division of Facilities Planning in the creation of the building program for the Union.

It will coordinate the work of small sub-planning committees to present a clear consensus of the needs of the students, staff and patrons of the Union.

■ The chair of the planning committee will then serve on a steering committee which sits atop the three-level committee process. The steering committee provides advisory oversight of the programming activities of the Union Enhancement project.

It will communicate with the campus-at-large regarding the programming being done. It will also provide assistance to the Division of Facilities Planning in completing the program and communicating the program needs to the Kansas Board of Regents, legislature and other state agencies.

This is a great way for any student to get involved in a very important process. Anyone interested in serving on any of these committees should call the Union Director's Office at 532-6591, and they will be happy to get you involved.

Your reward for volunteering is knowing you made a difference. Maybe someday, you'll be walking on campus, as an alumni, with your child, who is a K-State student. You'll walk by the Union and you can say to them that you helped design that grand ol' building.

Aaron Otto is sophomore in pre-law.

Call the Union Director's Office at 532-6591.

Students need haven from construction woes

KRISTIN BRIGHTON

The pounding has succeeded in following me to sleep.

One night, not so long ago, I was dreaming about my 8:05 literature class (unlike most fortunate people, my dreams are never set in exotic, fantasy-like places. I tend to dream about unusual things happening in usual places).

Things were pretty normal except every 10 seconds or so we would freeze like statues, wait while the jackhammering temporarily subsided once again, and then resume our discussion.

We had become so desensitized to the pounding, hammering, churning sounds of Eisenhower Hall construction, that we simply stopped everything and allowed the obnoxious noise to dictate class.

It grew louder and louder, until suddenly, from above, as if from God or something, I began to overhear a conversation between two men with equally obnoxious laughs. OK, so the conversation came from the disc jockeys on the station my alarm was tuned in to, but the pounding sound was real.

Workers from the city of Manhattan were tearing out the sidewalk two houses down, just one more corner out of the series of improvements the city must make to meet Americans with Disabilities Act requirements.

Yep, we cannot escape the pounding. Construction totally surrounds our very being, and, unless we take an abnormally long period of time graduating, it will remain around us throughout our entire stay here at K-State.

Like you don't already know this, finding your way around Farrell Library anymore is like trying to, well, get from Willard Hall to Bluemont Hall. It is a complicated mess.

Freshmen, don't even worry about trying to learn your way around the library for awhile. The completion date for the expansion project is still two years away, in September of 1996. Maybe then things will stay in one place.

But in the span of things, two years isn't much. We can put up with the mess in the library, and, as an alternative, Manhattan Public Library isn't so bad (and you don't have to figure out any stacks to use it).

And as far as a place to study goes, at least we have still have the Union.

But it won't be long until the pounding moves there too.

Once the Union Expansion project begins, we will never be able to escape into silence. There will not be a quiet corner to curl up and study for that accounting quiz you have in 45 minutes, or a place to nap over lunch.

But boy, will we have more noise.

This may sound crazy, but what if we put off the Union project until the library becomes more peaceful?

Yes, it will be a little more expensive if we wait a year. Yes, it has been a struggle to get the whole thing approved anyway.

But a lot of us only use the Union as a place to study and rest between classes.

The only logical alternative for those of us who need somewhere to go, but don't want to face the hassle of finding another parking space two hours later, is the library.

And in just two years, we will have a super-new library to go to for a mid-day getaway.

We have waited all this time to make Union improvements — what's another year or so more? A lot of what is to be done in the Union is just superficial — improvements like adding restaurants and such. Why the hurry? We can walk to Aggieville to go to Hardee's if we really can't wait a little longer for non-Union food. It is not that far.

Why don't we just take the money we all contributed in August and stick it into the highest interest-bearing savings account we can muster up and, in the mean time, brainstorm more improvements for another 18 or more months? It would give us more time to dream about Union possibilities.

And it would allow us to have somewhere to go to as an escape from the pounding.

If all else fails and, like I imagine, it will anyway, Union construction begins ASAP, then I have one idea how to provide a place for those of us in need of a quiet corner to rest/study/read in: An alumni old couch drive.

Huh?

If at first you don't succeed, then come up with a second plan for compromise.

We could send letters to parents and past students asking them to donate old couches to the University (not roach-invested, mildewed things like are found on porches along Bluemont Ave., but nice couches like you would sell for $30 in a garage sale).

We could arrange for the couches to end up here (maybe people could bring them up in their game day tailgating pick-ups). Then, we could put couches up in wide hallways in quiet buildings without construction like Bluemont or Seaton.

This way, even if we must surrender the Union soon, we could have lots of places to comfortably read in quiet, and others wouldn't have to worry about what to do with that bright orange couch from 1972.

▶ BICYCLES

Manhattan behind on bike trials

Dear Editor,

Congratulations, K-State, on one big step backwards. Pat yourself on the back for getting bikes removed from the sidewalks. Has it amounted to less run-ins with pedestrians? The answer is no. Bicyclists still have to maneuver around people walking down the streets that bisect campus. The truth to the matter is bicyclists never really created a problem, except those few bicyclists who speeded through campus — those type of bicyclists should be ticketed.

If bicyclists are to be treated like motor vehicles, then the bicycles should be licensed, have turn blinkers, taxed, parking permits, and have big license plates on the back of the seat! Do you see how ridiculous this is? Don't be surprised if this is the new policy next year.

Lets face it, K-State and Manhattan are a great place to go to school; however, it isn't one of the more progressive cities of our nation. There are absolutely no bike paths in Manhattan, not even handicapped accessible curbs.

You might think Alaska is somewhat backwards? Wrong. Anchorage has over a 150 miles of bike trails. You can ride from one end of town through the other without ever seeing the surface of a road. How? Large culvert pipes lie under the roads or bike bridges expand over creeks or highways. In the winter, they become cross-country ski and dog-sled trails. Manhattan take notice, Anchorage is able to afford these nice trails due to a law provision that says 10 percent of a highway's construction fund has to go to bike right-of-ways.

Boulder, Colorado, does everything to encourage bicycling. You can even get a ticket for riding too fast.

I personally just got back from my foreign-exchange study in Trier, Germany. I took my mountain bike there and had absolutely no problem with pedestrians and was respected by car drivers. Everybody there had ringers on their handlebars to warn pedestrians from behind. Perhaps a policy we should endorse.

Finally, there is no parking problem on campus. There is however a problem with too many permits issued and people driving their cars who live within walking distance of campus. There is absolutely no incentive to encourage bicycling or shuttle-bus service from the football parking lot. What ever happened to the days of saving our environment and clean-air?

The bottom line is this enforced campus law is bad publicity for K-State. It makes our school and community look backwards when every other campus and town is moving forward to encourage alternative modes of transportation.

▶ POLICE

Camp knew he was breaking the law

Dear Editor,

I know B.C. Camp II said he would like everyone to "leave him the hell alone." OK, fine, then why does he continue to pursue the case for the horrible treatment he received from the campus cops?

I think there is something people need to understand. People like Camp. Officer Bob Fenton is a police officer. Police officers, just like doctors, EMTs, security guards, etc., make split-second decisions every day. In defense of Fenton, I believe he made a quick decision, and whether or not it was right is not the question.

People in these type of professions make quick decisions every day, Sometimes their lives depend on it. Perhaps Fenton made this decision to handcuff and detain Camp (I am not saying he was right to do it. I'm just saying he did do it), and maybe later looked back on it and decided he acted harshly, but there was nothing he could do about it, hindsight is 20/20, right?

In the article in Friday's Collegian, Camp admitted he knew about the $25 bike fine before he rode his bike on the sidewalk, but he didn't think anyone would stop him.

I hope to be a doctor someday, and I hope that when I make a split-second decision (whether it be right or wrong), the people in the world realize that I am human and I make my mistakes, too.

Oh, by the way, just because I take the time to call about what's going on around campus doesn't mean "I'm a bored college student with a need to protest."

EAGLES 30, BEARS 22

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was vintage Randall at the Vet, and the Philadelphia Eagles needed all of it.

Randall Cunningham picked apart Chicago's defense Monday night, passing for 311 yards and three touchdowns as Philadelphia opened a 30-point lead and held on to beat the Chicago Bears 30-22.

Cunningham threw for 250 yards in the opening half, with two touchdown passes to Calvin Williams and one to Maurice Johnson.

Athlete competes in 4 different shoes

"What I basically do at the quadathron competition is ride a jumping horse, then I run 2,000 meters, swim 200 yards, and then shoot about 20 rounds of an air pistol."

JENNIFER OHMES
Sophomore in art education

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

K-State student Jennifer Ohmes knows shooting.

She also knows swimming, running and horseback riding.

Jennifer Ohmes is a quadathlete.

Ohmes, a sophomore in art education, said she first heard about the quadathron event as a competitor in horse and pony shows.

"You had to be in riding to begin with, and I'd been riding since I was really young, so I went ahead and got involved in this about four years ago," she said.

While the event has been going on in England for years, Ohmes said it isn't very well known in this country.

"Lots of people don't really know what's involved in it," she said, "but what I basically do at the quadathron competition is ride a jumping horse, then I run 2,000 meters, swim 200 yards, and then shoot about 20 rounds of an air pistol."

"I swam during high school, and I went out and bought an air pistol, even though I really didn't know how to use it, then I just started to practice everything on my own," she said.

Her practice has paid off. Throughout the last four years, Ohmes has traveled throughout the country, competing in regional and national quadathron competitions.

But it wasn't until last May that she attended a selection trial to vie for a spot on the international team competing in England over the summer.

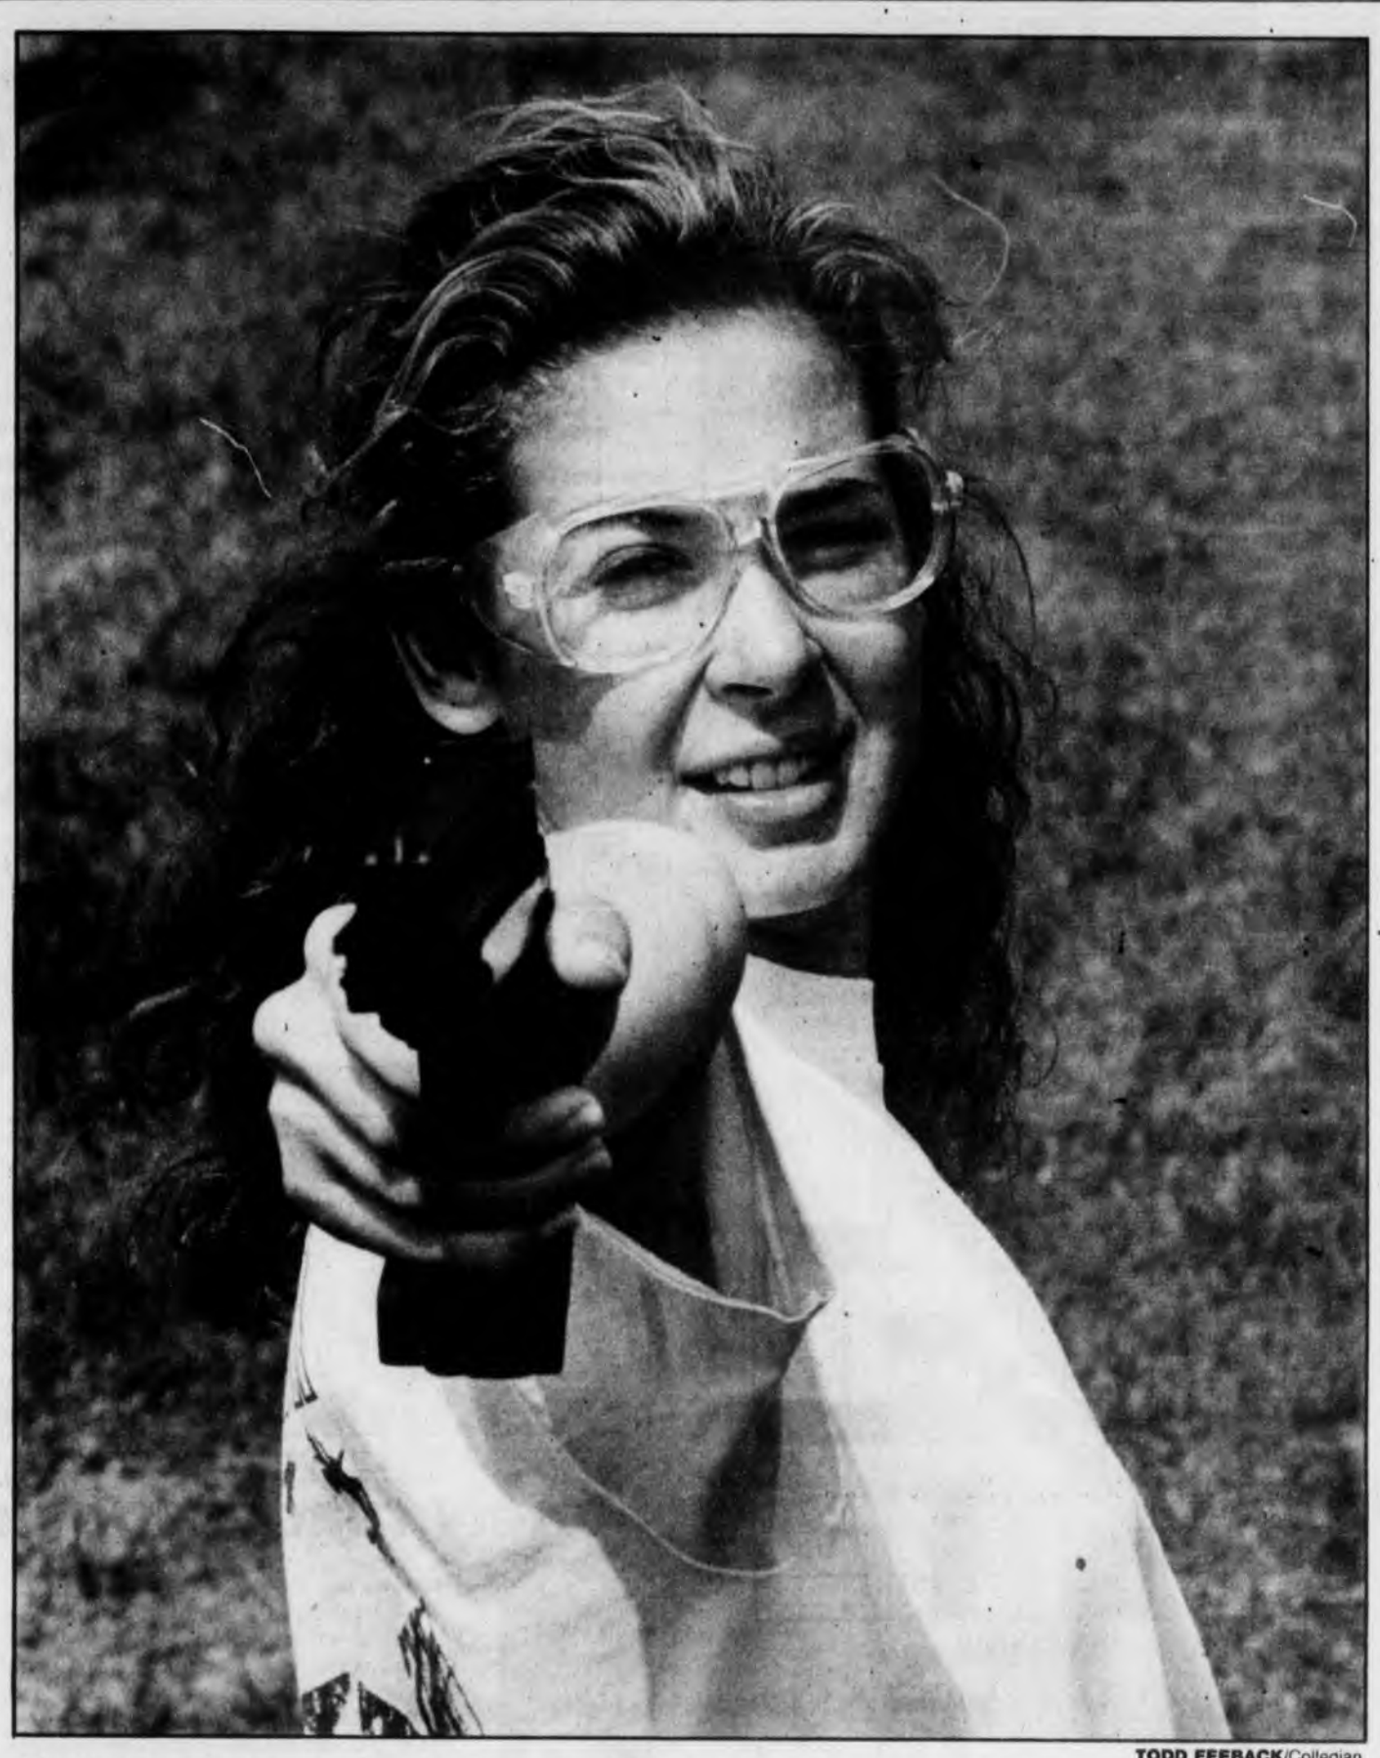
"I went to the selection trial, and the top five girls and the top five guys made up the team," she said. "I finished fourth, so I was lucky enough to travel to England with the team and compete."

Not only did the team compete in Great Britain; they also traveled to Scotland and Ireland for all four of the international competitions.

During these European meets, Ohmes and the four other girls on the American team competed with the Canadian team, two teams from the United Kingdom and the Irish team.

"Our girls' team ended up finishing third three times out of the four competitions," Ohmes said. "Then I got a bronze patch in Ireland for a certain number of individual points, but that was the only individual scoring they did the whole time."

While Ohmes said she always enjoyed participating in the sport, she said the trip to Europe made her appreciate it even more.



"This year, going and being with my team members really made me enjoy it even more," she said. "I don't like the training, it's just really hard to go out there and do it by yourself, but when you're with a group, it's a lot more fun."

This summer will be the last time Ohmes could actually participate in the event since athletes can only compete in the quadathron if they're under 21 years old.

"I'm going to go ahead and try out for the team again in May, then hopefully I can compete at the international meet again this summer," she said. "All the European teams will travel over here for it, since the competition will be in Kentucky and Canada then."

Although Ohmes won't be able to compete in the event much longer, she said she is glad she pursued it.

"I'm very glad I decided to do this," she said. "We got to see so many things and meet so many people along the way. It was just a great experience, and I'll never forget it."

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

Shooting is only one sport that Jennifer Ohmes, sophomore in art education, practices to be competitive in the quadathron. She also practices running, swimming, and horseriding. Last summer she traveled to a competition in England.

Missouri coach faces uphill battle

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

K-State coach Bill Snyder knows what Missouri coach Larry Smith is going through.

Six years ago, Snyder took over a K-State program that was considered one of the worst in the nation.

This year, Smith took over a Missouri program that has been at or near the bottom of the Big Eight Conference standings for several years.

"It takes time to know what to expect and how to make improvements," Smith said during the Big Eight Teleconference Monday. "You always hope for the best, you plan for the best, but not always do you get the best."

After a loss to Tulsa and a 42-0 thrashing received from Illinois to start off the year, Smith said there could be some new faces in starting spots.

"There will probably be some changes offensively and defensively," he said. "In a situation like this, a lot of positions are up for grabs.

"During practice this week, we're going to find out who wants to prepare for the game."

After the Illinois game, in which Missouri only had one first down, Smith conducted a private team meeting.

"It was good," he said. "A lot of people got things off their chests and it was just one more step towards team unity."

On-the-field habits and attitudes will have to change before his team can win on a consistent basis, Smith said.

"Attitude is always a big part of it, but really winning or a lack of winning is what affects a team's attitude," he said. "We coach one thing, but when we get into a game it seems like the old ways start trickling in.

"It's a vicious cycle, and it's very hard to stop."

Smith said he's not thinking about upcoming conference foes.

"I'm not too worried about anybody else in the conference," he said. "I'm just worried about coaching this team."

■ Nebraska coach Tom Osborn said that it looks as if they've lost starting safety Mike Minter for the year.

"We had three safeties that played a great deal last year," he said. "Two were drafted by the NFL and Mike was the third."

Osborne said that the thought of playing UCLA without Minter causes him to worry.

"It would create concern against anybody, but particularly against a fine receiving crew and a good passer," Osborne said.

■ Gary Gibbs, Oklahoma coach, said his team is looking forward to playing on the newly installed natural grass at Owen Field in Norman, Okla.

"We are excited," Gibbs said. "It'll be a fast track and an outstanding surface to play on."

■ After both K-State and Kansas set records for attendance at a season opener, Kansas coach Glen Mason said attitudes are changing about football at the two universities.

"Both of our programs are much better," Mason said. "In past years, both were the subject of a lot of jokes.

"Now, people are saying that football in the state of Kansas has come a long way. We're very proud of that, and I'm sure that Bill's proud of his program."

■ Colorado coach Bill McCartney said starting tailback Rashaan Salaam will play against Wisconsin despite a cut on his foot.

"He received a few stitches in his foot as the result of horsing around in his room," McCartney said. "He banged it against the bed, but he's okay."

McCartney said defensive tackle Shannon Clavelle will not play against Wisconsin.

"He was involved in an altercation in a local bar," McCartney said.

Volleyball players deserve football crowd

K-State football season ticket sales reached the 20,000 mark this season.

This is a great booster to the football team. In fact, the players might think their fans care about them.

I wonder if many of the volleyball players feel that way.

To attend a volleyball match, a general-admission pass is a mere three bucks out of your pocket. If you take a date, it is six. Students get in free with their student IDs. This could even be one of those good cheap weekend date ideas.

Still, the average amount of people who attend a home volleyball match is about 300. This isn't even a drop in the bucket compared to the numbers the football team has attending its home games.

JULIE KUHLMAN

Of course, there is the point the football program is coming off a 9-2-1 season, it is up and rising in the polls, and it manhandled the Wyoming Cowboys in Tucson, Ariz., last December.

I know this gives you reason to get off your comfortable rocker and rush to buy season football tickets.

However, I remember when students stayed in their rocker two years ago. The football team was struggling, and many were cracking jokes about how rotten the players were.

I won't mention the egocentric so-called jocks who thought they could do such a better job on the field.

I feel the reason for students not being so true to their school is a disease — a disease called fickle fanitus.

I admit I've caught this bug a time or two.

Last season, I was the traitor of all traitors when I sold my KU-K-State basketball ticket for a much lower amount than what I paid because I figured we would lose anyway.

At least, that was the reason I gave others when they asked how I could do such a thing.

Although I tried to hide it, I was feeling pretty guilty.

I knew what I had stooped to was reason for expulsion from school, but now I have vowed to never bleed red again.

The light has shown through the darkest of blinds to be loyal to this school I am attending, and it means supporting other K-State athletes besides football players.

I have taken time to see how hard athletes in other not-so-publicized sports work.

Most of what they receive from the University for their hard work is a pat on the back, and a not-so-big article in the sports section the next day.

They need more. Whether the team is first in the Big Eight Conference or is struggling to stay out of the cellar, the players deserve better.

Maybe if fans show support and attend home functions, athletes will perform better on the court or field, and their wins could even dramatically increase.

K-State football hasn't lost a home game in two years, and just last year, we even gave Oklahoma a spanking.

The volleyball team hasn't fared as well, but it is off to a good start this season.

I would also put money on the fact that if the volleyball players had the same crowd support the football team has, they could produce a winning record this season.

Or at least they could gain a home-court advantage.

Hearing set for Thursday

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Steve Hanks is scheduled to appear in Manhattan Municipal Court at 8:15 a.m. Thursday to face DUI charges.

The prosecution will be handled by Bernard Irvine.

Irvine also prosecuted the Chad May case this summer.

Hanks, a junior defensive back, was arrested by the Riley County Police Department for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs at 12:43 a.m. Sept. 8.

Hanks was arrested after he was involved in a one-car accident at 1515 Leavenworth St.

According to the police report, Hanks' car suffered major damage, and he refused treatment for knee pain.

He was later released on $500 bond.

Coach Bill Snyder was unavailable for comment.

Hanks, originally from Manhattan, started at free safety in the Wildcats' first game against Southwestern Louisiana.

▶STRIKE THREATENS WORLD SERIES

NEW YORK (AP) — Negotiations may resume today, and even then it may be too little and too late to save what's left of the baseball season.

Acting commissioner Bud Selig, who on Friday allowed his deadline for canceling the World Series to pass, said there was a possibility talks would restart.

Selig said he will make an announcement about the season by Wednesday. Officials on both sides expect him to make the stunning announcement that the World Series won't be played for the first time since 1904.

Harris shines bright at Union

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Intimate and revealing, humorous and serious, David Harris' guitar concert Monday night was a breath of fresh air.

Harris, obviously very comfortable with the guitar, strummed and sang through old, new and original songs in a very relaxed manner. Harris had this closeness thing going with the audience. He was familiar. He connected with the crowd of nearly 50.

Hell, a performer's connection with an audience is worth the price of admission, but thanks to UPC's Eclectic Revue series of concerts, it didn't cost anything.

What would I pay to be able to go down to Aggieville and sit in a bar, listen to a folk singer/guitarist's musings on life interspersed with delightful, thought-provoking songs?

Harris touched base with many alternative sounds. His rendition of Counting Crow's "Around Here" was intense, but not really original. It's nice to hear radio songs, but much nicer to hear original tunes played through the artist's soul.

Harris' "Our Love is Sweeter Than Sunday," inspired by Harris' reaction to a Shakespeare sonnet, was romantically affecting. Harris is a hopeless romantic bent on exploring every trace of life and questioning his own in the process.

Harris, evident in the song "Little Wild Indians," doesn't judge anyone. Even in "Indians," a song inspired by two bratty boys giving their mother trouble in a supermarket, Harris manages not to endorse his personal feelings about the children.

Instead, he offers the perspective of another shopper, an older woman, who has a son of her own fighting in a war. "Where has the love gone?" the woman asks as the two boys quasi-parachute out of the shopping cart. His covers of Neil Young, John Lennon and the Police were unmarred by any additions, but only reinforced by strong vocals and a knack at guitar-playing.

During one of Harris' many meditations on life, he told his recurring fantasy of weighing 400 pounds and being a jazz guitarist. Between lines, he deposited bluesy repartees anticipating a full-fledged jazz song that never happened.

Lonely reader looking for lunch date in Union

Dear Cassie,

I never thought I would be writing to you with a serious problem, but here I am. You see, I am a sophomore here and still don't know very many people because I am too busy at work to join any organizations.

The problem is I would like someone to eat lunch with in the stateroom, but I am too shy to just walk up to someone sitting alone at a table and ask.

Could you help me find someone without having to look desperate? I eat there Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 12:30.

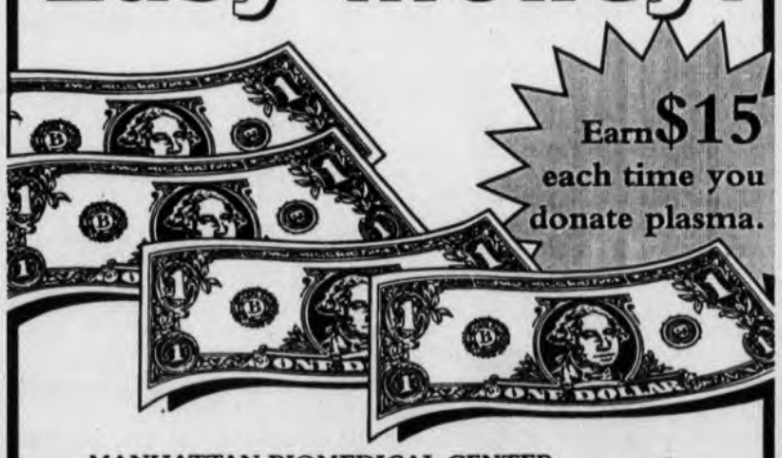
Sincerely,
Sitting Alone at a Big Table

Dear Sitting Alone at a Big Table,

Now that the entire campus knows your lunch hour is Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 12:30, and that you sit alone at a big table, people will be on the lookout for you.

You won't have to ask a single soul to sit with you. They will all know you're the lonely person that wrote in for a lunch buddy.

Nevertheless, in case some people miss this column today and don't recognize you, I can offer some advice.



Don't be afraid to go up and ask someone, "Excuse me, would you mind if I sat here?" It may be a bit awkward if you don't know them, but you never know how it might turn out.

What is the worst thing that could happen? They would throw up their hamburgers and announce to the rest of the stateroom, "Oh my gosh, this person just asked to sit by me!" I doubt it.

If you really can't find the nerve to go up to a stranger and ask them if you can eat with them, meet a friend for lunch. Surely, you know other people that have a break at 12:30 and are on campus.

Don't be afraid to go out on a limb. That is where the fruit is.

the hell is the police station?' and I apologized to the director for that," she said.

After Legill filed the complaint, she said she was contacted by John McAuliffe, then the director of police, and was asked to meet with him to resolve the situation.

At the meeting, Legill said she reported another incident in which she thought Fenton had followed her.

When she reported the incident to McAuliffe, she said he promised her a meeting with him and Fenton. Legill said she was willing to go to the meeting, but said McAuliffe never called her again.

Some time after McAuliffe left the University, acting director Capt. Robert Mellgren called Legill, she said. He notified her that her file had been found and that he was trying to close the case, she said.

Legill said he asked her if she was satisfied with what had been done.

"I said, 'I suppose,' because I didn't know what else could be done," she said. "He wasn't suggesting any other alternatives for me."

Legill said she no longer has confidence with the police .

"I don't feel like I can go to police officers after this," she said.

Legill said she came forward after the incident involving B.C. Camp II, junior in television and broadcasting, because she thinks the police department is trying to hide something.

"If this guy looks like a bad cop, it makes the whole department look bad, is what they're thinking. I feel it should be out in the open," she said. "There's probably other complaints out there."

John Lambert, director of public safety, would not comment on this particular case, because he said all complaints made toward police officers by students or other individuals were personnel matters and handled within the department.

He said five complaints against officers had been made during the last fiscal year and that all had been handled and investigated.

"They were not discounted or ignored," he said.

Capt. Mellgren provided records of all complaints made against officer conduct in the last 32 months, with names of parties involved removed.

In a letter relayed through the University attorney's office, Mellgren said of the estimated 111,000 hours worked by police officers during this time, only 11 complaints were received.

Of those 11, three were made against an officer who is no longer with the department, the letter said.

and given to the University. The KSU Foundation gifted the hall to housing, and no money was paid for the hall," Krause said.

Putting the financial aspects aside, Shah Hasan, assistant director of housing, said the largest loss will be the loss of a place where graduate and non-traditional students can live together.

"We will never be able to re-create the environment that Edwards has," he said.

Despite housing's loss, Hasan is trying to keep the larger University perspective in mind.

"The people that make the decisions make them with that perspective. They need space, and we have to think about how we can create as many solutions as possible," he said.

Because this decision directly affects the lives of residents, Averill and Hasan are trying to take steps to prepare students.

"We are working together to identify what our residents' needs are and where else those needs can be met," Averill said.

Averill also said that she has begun taking steps to ensure that all of the residents in Edwards get the same information about the takeover in the same manner.

A letter addressing the issue was sent to all of the hall's residents and a public forum for questions was also held, Averill said.

Housing is also working with students, Hasan said.

"I would like to work with the students once the decision is made to try and re-create an environment similar to Edwards," Hasan said.

Residents of Edwards said they are trying to be patient despite the uncertainty of Edwards' future.

They are just waiting for a final decision, Howard Benson, senior in pre-veterinary medicine and resident of Edwards, said.

"Everybody here is mature. That is what makes Edwards special — you're not just slammed into a big dorm with 500 other people."

Benson said he also does not see how they can be compensated for the loss of their living environment.

"Even if they gave us two floors in Marlatt, it wouldn't work. Here at Edwards, you create a family, a home," Benson said.

Students gather to pray for world peace

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Fifteen students and campus ministers gathered to pray for peace Monday evening on the steps of the Danforth Chapel.

The students were praying for peace in Rwanda and parts of Africa, Cuba, Haiti, and the former Yugoslavia.

"Our belief is that we're all brothers and sisters, and if some of us are suffering, then we have a responsibility to do something," Ashley Suther, sophomore in political science and international studies, said.

Suther said the main reason he attended the service is that he is involved in the Ecumenical Campus Ministries organization.

Often Americans don't realize how good they have it here, he said. Christians have a responsibility to do something.

"I would like to work in the diplomatic corps to help out in some countries," Suther said.

Students voiced thanks for progress made toward peace as well as asking for peace.

The Rev. Harris Waltner, of the Manhattan Mennonite Fellowship church, read letters from his friends in South Africa concerning the fall of apartheid and the election of Nelson Mandela as president.

Waltner was a missionary in South Africa for a number of years.

The prayer for peace service was sponsored by KSU Campus Ministries.

The Lutheran, Episcopal, Catholic, United Methodist, Ecumenical, and American Baptist campus ministries and the Mennonite Student Group are member organizations.

"We got together and started talking about things to do together," the Rev. Al Zimmerman, Ecumenical Campus Ministries minister, said.

Zimmerman said prayer makes you involved.

You have to think about it if you pray about it, he said.

Thinking about the problems in the world makes you have to do something about it.

The prayer for peace service seemed like it was something for the seven campus ministries to do together, Zimmerman said.

The seven organizations try to plan a joint event every month.

Other events planned for fall include a Blessing of the Beasts on Saint Francis of Assisi day in October, and a celebration of learning in November.

Despite affiliate changes, Fox network is here to stay

Syndicated programs will not be seen on new FOX affiliate, WDAF-TV.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN
Collegian

If you turn your television set to channel two hoping to find your favorite Fox programming, you may be in for a surprise.

Local cable programming changes have been made due to some affiliate changes.

KSHB-TV, formerly a Fox affiliate out of Kansas City, is now an NBC affiliate, and WDAF-TV, an NBC affiliate since 1949, is now a Fox affiliate.

Ron Frazier, TCI of Manhattan general manager, said local viewers would have three NBC stations and no Fox programming if TCI did not change to the WDAF affiliate on channel two.

"WDAF was purchased so that they could become a Fox affiliate," Frazier said.

WDAF is on VHF, which made it more attractive to Fox. KSHB-TV 41 is on UHF. More viewers have VHF than UHF.

The TCI office had received some phone calls concerning the new programming, but WDAF was displaying a crawl with an 800 telephone number to call for more information concerning the new programming, Frazier said.

He said some syndicated programs that KSHB had on its Fox programming may not be seen anymore, but WDAF will have prime-time Fox programs, such as "Beverly Hills 90210," "In Living Color," and NFC football.

Fox prime time programming is from 7 to 9 p.m.

The reason that TCI of Kansas did not pick up KFAS-TV channel 4, which is the Fox station out of Wichita, was due to the technical quality of WDAF.

"The technical quality of WDAF is better," Frazier said.

The Wichita station has to be broadcast to Salina and then rebroadcast to Manhattan, Frazier said.

On Monday WDAF received about 2,500 calls about the switch between the two stations, Jeni Cardin, WDAF manager of public relations and special projects, said.

WDAF didn't pick up the Fox Kids Network, which carries such programs as "Animaniacs" and "X-Men."

"That wasn't part of the agreement," Cardin said.

Instead, the programming was picked up by KSMO-TV Channel 62, which is broadcast in Kansas City.

Caribbean soldiers are on guard

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CEIBA, Puerto Rico — Caribbean soldiers begin a crash course in peacekeeping today, part of a growing world commitment to an invasion force Washington hopes will convince Haiti's generals to step down.

The 150 soldiers from Antigua and Barbuda, Belize and Jamaica who landed Monday night in Roosevelt Roads Naval Station are the first of a 17-nation, 1,500-member force. It's intended to give legitimacy to any U.S.-led intervention.

Fifty more soldiers were arriving today from Trinidad and Tobago. Colleagues from other Caribbean nations will be arriving for training by the end of the week, U.S. Army Maj. Steve Panton said.

But Haiti's army leaders, who seized power three years ago from that country's first democratically elected government, don't seem impressed. On Monday, more than 1,000 militiamen practiced firing with empty M-1 rifles and trotted around the National Palace in downtown Port-au-Prince in a show of defiance to any foreign invaders.

Washington hopes the highly publicized invasion preparations will persuade Haiti's army leaders to leave power, making an invasion unnecessary. But the U.S. government has indicated some sort of peacekeeping force still would be needed to help restore the elected government even if coup leaders step down.

If the training mission works as intended, the deployment of a multinational force would allow some American troops to leave Haiti soon after an invasion ousts Haitian coup leaders and restores the elected government.

Training for the Caribbean soldiers begins Wednesday.

U.S. Army Special Forces Col. Travis Griffin said he envisions three weeks of training in southern Puerto Rico before the newly unified contingent could be sent to control crowds and maintain order in Haiti.

But the training mission may be cut short as the Pentagon pushes up its timetable to force out Haiti's coup leaders, a senior American official said Monday night on condition of anonymity.

As in the 1983 invasion of Grenada, American troops would lead any invasion, and U.S. soldiers would perform immediate policing actions. Then the multinational force would step in to maintain the peace.

"I already know that we already have a force that is very capable," Griffin, a Green Beret, said. He has helped direct annual U.S.-Caribbean army training exercises as the U.S. Atlantic Command's head of special operations.

The additional training at Camp Santiago, a Puerto Rican National Guard base, will simply sharpen your skills, he told the Caribbean soldiers just after their jetliner landed in Ceiba.

Cigarette causes fire at local repair shop

CHRISTI WRIGHT

A cigarette started an insulation fire inside a wall of Heartland Motors about 5:45 p.m. Tuesday.

"We were getting ready to close, and we smelled something burning," Mark Lee, owner, said. "We thought it was the water cooler, so we unplugged it."

When the smell of smoke didn't go away, Lee called the fire department.

"I was just lucky I was still here," Lee said.

Del Petty, Riley County Rural Fire Chief, said the fire started when a cigarette was dropped outside the metal building close to a wall.

"The cigarette is the only thing it could have been to burn that low," Petty said.

The cigarette sparked the cellulose-fiber insulation inside the wall that started to smolder, Petty said.

Cellulose-fiber insulation is flame retardant and won't burn ablaze. The fire caused a limited amount of damage because the fire was contained inside the wall. Employees were able to salvage the office equipment, but the paneling and insulation were destroyed.

"We have quite a mess here," said Don Howard, Heartland Motors employee.

ISU gives assault victims many options to get help

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

This is the sixth in a seven-part series on the sexual assault policies at Big Eight schools.

Any student who violates the sexual-assault policy at Iowa State University faces punishments ranging from a reprimand to an indefinite suspension.

According to the Iowa State student information handbook, there are several levels of disciplinary action the university may take.

Beyond a reprimand, a deferred suspension may be given in which immediate suspension is put off, and the student is placed under observation and review for a period of time.

If the student violates the rules while under observation, suspension is immediate.

sexual VIOLENCE policy

The most severe punishment is indefinite suspension, in which the student is dropped from school and may not return without the written consent of a judiciary board.

The victim, should the assault occur on campus, should report it to the Department of Public Safety, which controls the campus police.

Grace Weigel, judicial affairs administrator, said campus police is not the only options for victims.

"They can go to the campus police, Student Counseling Services or come to the Student Life office," she said.

Iowa State has several places victims of sexual assault can turn to for help.

One such place is the Student Counseling Center.

"We try to provide independent counseling for victims," Terry Mason, counseling center director, said, "but we also consult with other departments on campus and in the community to provide the best service for victims."

Mason said there is a women's center on campus that victims may turn to. There are also several community groups, such as YWCA, that are willing to [illegible]

The Student Counseling Center also tries to take preventative measures regarding rape on campus.

"We do outreach presentations," Mason said.

"We have a group here on campus called MARs (Men Against Rape) that talks to men about rape and date rape."

Mason said the University also takes strong measures against those who have committed rape.

"One condition of perpetrators returning to campus is that they receive counseling," he said.

Jenny Nickerson, support services manager for the Department of Public Safety, said there were no rapes reported on the campus in 1993.

"There were two that were investigated and later dismissed as unfounded," she said.

Nickerson said these statistics are no indication of how many sexual assaults actually occur on campus.

"A great many go unreported," she said.

World safer since collapse of Cold War

ANNETTE RIEDL
Collegian

Americans should not accept the Pentagon policy statement, Former Rear Admiral Eugene Carroll said.

The director of the private, nongovernmental Center for Defense Information in Washington, D.C., redefined national security to a crowd of about 70 Tuesday at 7:30 in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

In military terms, we live in a much safer world today than we did during 40 years of the Cold War. During 40 years of the Cold war, Carroll said we spent more that $12 trillion dollars for military forces.

Last year, the Secretary of Defense, then Les Aspin, promised a searching Bottom Up Review of America's Defense requirements, Carroll said. But when charged to do the study, Under Secretary of Defense Frank Wisner, made two promises, Carroll said.

First, the review would be performed entirely within the Pentagon. His second promise guaranteed that even without the Soviet Union to threaten us, the study would identify ominous "New Dangers" to replace our fallen adversary, Carroll said.

He said that Americans must seize the opportunity to make democracy work. There must be a public debate on the elements of national security.

The debate is necessary, Carroll said, because the military still uses Cold War

▶ NATIVE KANSAN, TEACHER SETS SIGHTS FOR HOME TO SPEAK ON EDUCATION

The Department of Mathematics will feature an educational speaker in the seventh-annual William J. Spencer Lecture.

Henry Helson will deliver a speech titled "A Teacher Looks at Education" at 2:30 p.m. Thursday in Cardwell 102.

Helson was born in Lawrence in 1927. He received his doctorate from Harvard University.

Helson is currently a member of the math department faculty at the University of California at Berkeley. He also taught at the University of Uppsala and Yale University.

Helson is known for many contributions to the subject of Fourier Analysis. He is also noted for his study of idempotent measures on the circle group and certain thin sets now known as Helson sets.

"We are very honored and happy to have Dr. Helson here this week," Louis Pigno, head of the mathematics department, said.

The lecture series was established in 1990 by the math department in honor of William J. Spencer, who received his master's of science degree in math and his doctorate in physics in the 1950s from K-State.

He is a former vice president for Xerox Corporation and is currently the CEO of Sematech, in Austin.

▶ FORMER DEA AGENT TO TELL OF UNDERCOVER LIFE FIGHTING WAR ON DRUGS

A former U.S. Drug Enforcement agent will be giving a lecture Thursday drawn from his personal experiences in the U.S. war on drugs.

The Union Program Council is presenting Michael Levine of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency at 7 p.m. in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Levine's lecture is titled, "Undercover In The War On Drugs."

Levine was profiled in Esquire magazine as a man who devoted his life to winning the war on drugs.

According to the March 1991 article, he spent 25 years of service, and he only fired his gun about three times.

Levine is responsible for 3,000 criminals serving more than15,000 years in jail for drug-related crimes, the article said.

Levine can speak peasant, street and hidalgo Spanish, and he has an international reputation for deceit.

Levine has received the International Narcotics Enforcement Officer Associations Award and is the author of the best-seller, "Deep Cover."

Retired at the age of 50, Levine now takes a strong stand and speaks out against drugs, Patrick Carney, UPC Issues and Ideas chairman, said.

"By educating and rehabilitation, Levine believes people won't do drugs," Carney said.

Levine will tell his real-life story and how the United States is fighting to win the war on drugs, he said.

"He will also talk about an insider's perspective on what DEA is about and criticizing the U.S. drug-war effort," Carney said.

Sarah Hadley, UPC program adviser, said she thinks that the lecture will appeal to the student body and the community.

"People need to be informed on the topic," Hadley said.

The audience is invited to attend an open reception in the K-State Union Cottonwood Room immediately following the lecture.

▶ K-STATE STUDENT PUTS SCHOOL ON HOLD TO SERVE, COMPETE FOR CROWN

A K-State student could be the next Miss America.

Trisha Schaffer, senior in nutrition from Liberal, spent last year treading the same campus walkways as all of us.

She exercised at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and studied for finals as every other K-State student did.

Last February, Schaffer's life took a twist when she won the local pageant title of Miss Southwest Kansas and then began preparing for the Miss Kansas Scholarship Pageant.

Balancing preparation time and school was not a problem for Schaffer.

"I have always been the type of person who liked to do a lot of activities. Getting ready for Miss Kansas was just a part of my day," Schaffer said.

Schaffer's efforts paid off June 13 when she won the title of Miss Kansas, the official preliminary to the Miss America Pageant.

"Winning the title of Miss Kansas feels like a birthday," Schaffer said,

"When they put the crown on my head, they didn't change who I am," she said.

Schaffer has taken a year off from school to fulfill the responsibilities included in the job of Miss Kansas.

Schaffer left for Atlantic City, N.J., earlier this month for two weeks of rehearsals for the Miss America pageant.

"Trisha has made a lot of public appearances and been involved with community service," Janie Whitman, traveling companion to Schaffer, said.

"She, with the help of others, just recently walked all night long in The American Cancer Walk For Life."

Schaffer said she wants to be open to God's plan for her life.

"If he wants me to be Miss America, that would be great," Schaffer said. "If not, that is fine. I still have a plan B."

If Schaffer is not crowned Miss America, she plans to return to K-State next fall where she has been chosen as a member of K-State Singers.

The Miss America Pageant will be televised at 8 p.m., Saturday on NBC, cable channel seven.
